

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

SUPREME COURT RULES—UTAH.

Rule 1. The clerk of this court shall keep his office at the place where sessions of this court are held. Three days before the first day of each term he shall prepare a calendar for each member of the court, and one for the bar wherein the causes brought into this court shall be entered in the following order, viz : (1) Causes arising under laws of the United States; (2) criminal causes arising under laws of the territory; (3) all other causes in the order of the filing of the transcript. In the title of all cases in this court, the plaintiff in the court below shall be first named, being called "appellant" or "respondent," as the case may be.

Rule 2. In all cases where an appeal shall be perfected, a transcript of the record shall be filed in this court within thirty days after such appeal shall have been perfected, unless further time is given by this court, or a justice thereof. This transcript shall be certified to be correct by the attorneys of the respective parties or by the clerk of the court from which the appeal is taken. The pleadings, proceedings, and papers shall be chronologically arranged in the transcript, and the pages of said transcript shall be numbered, and the transcript shall be perfected with an alphabetical index, specifying the page on which each separate paper, pleading, proceeding, and the testimony of each witness is found; provided, that the appellant or his attorney may by precipe indicate to the clerk what of the files of the cause shall be inserted in the transcript, and in such case, if the record shall be insufficient, it shall be perfected at his cost; and, if unnecessarily voluminous, the cost of the unnecessary parts shall be taxed against him.

Rule 3. If the transcript be not filed within the time prescribed or allowed, the appeal may be dismissed, on motion, during the first week of the term, without notice, and at any time afterwards, upon notice. A cause so dismissed without notice may be restored during the same term on notice of five days to the adverse party, and for good cause shown; but, unless so restored, the dismissal shall be final.

Rule 4. On such motion there shall be presented to the court the certificate of the clerk of the court below, under the seal of such court, certifying the amount or character of the judgment, the date of its rendition, the fact and date of the filing of the notice of appeal, and the fact, date, and mode of service thereof; the fact and date of the filing of the undertaking on appeal, and that the same is in due form, and also that appellant has received a certified transcript of the record, or that he has failed to request one, or has failed to pay the legal fees therefor, if the same were demanded; but, in case the transcript has been certified to be correct by the attorneys of the respective parties, the fact and date thereof may be shown by any one of them by affidavit.

Rule 5. For the purpose of correcting any error or defect in the transcript either party may suggest the same in writing to this court, specifying such error or defect, and obtain an order that the proper clerk certify the whole or part of the record, as may be required; or the same may be corrected by stipulation of counsel in open court before argument. If the attorney of the adverse party be not present, or if the fact of the alleged error or defect be controverted by him, the suggestion must be accompanied by an affidavit, showing the existence of the error or defect alleged.

Rule 6. The appellant shall, within fifteen days after the filing of the transcript, prepare and file with the clerk eight copies of a printed abstract of the record in each case, in which shall be set forth the title of the cause, with the date of the filing of all papers in the court below, and a brief statement of the contents of each pleading, and shall set forth fully the substance of the pleadings and of the evidence, if any, and the points relied upon for the reversal of the judgment or decree; and appellant shall refer to the page numbers in the transcript on the margin of the abstract in such manner that orders, pleadings, and evidence referred to in the abstract may be easily found in the record.

Rule 7. The respondent's counsel may, if he be not satisfied with the abstract or abridgment of the record by the appellant's counsel, within fifteen days after the same is filed, file with the clerk eight copies of such further abstract as he may deem necessary to a full understanding of the merits of the cause.

Rule 8. In case the appellant shall neglect to file an abstract in compliance with the rules of this court, the opposite party may file the abstract and prepare the cause for a hearing ex parte, and have the costs taxed therefor, or the court may dismiss the appeal; and, if the abstract filed shall not present the parts of the record to which reference is made in the assignment of errors, the appeal may be dismissed.

Rule 9. For good cause shown, the court or any justice thereof may extend the time for the filing of transcripts and abstracts.

Rule 10. The attorney for the appellant shall serve on the attorney for the respondent a copy of his points and authorities, in the form of a printed brief, at least ten days before the hearing; and within five days therefrom, the counsel for the respondent shall serve upon appellant's counsel a like copy of his points and authorities; and, before the hearing, the attorneys for each of the respective parties shall file with the clerk of this court eight copies of his brief; and the appellant, in his brief, shall plainly and distinctly set forth the particular errors upon which he relies for a reversal of the judgment of the court below.

Rule 11. All abstracts of the record and briefs hereafter filed in this court shall be printed on unruled white paper of the size and style now used in the supreme court of the United States, and in small pica type, with one inch for margin; but, by leave of court or one of the justices thereof, a brief (and in criminal cases an abstract) of another character may be filed.

Rule 12. All technical objections affecting the right of the appellant to be heard on the merits of a cause must be taken at the first term or adjourned term after the abstract is filed, and must be specified in writing, filed at least one day before the cause is called for argument, or will not be regarded. Such objections must be presented to the court before any argument upon the merits.

Rule 13. Cases appealed into this court will not be heard at any particular term unless the abstract of the record shall be filed before the commencement of such term, or unless the appellant shall in writing present a satisfactory excuse for not having filed the abstract before the commencement of the term; but this rule shall not apply to cases docketed for the purpose of dismissal under the rules of this court.

Rule 14. All motions shall be in writing, subscribed by counsel, and filed with the clerk; and, in cases where a notice of motion is required, the time prescribed therefor may be shortened by any justice of the court, as well as by the court.

Rule 15. All stipulations and agreements of parties or their attorneys in respect to a cause shall be reduced to writing, signed by them, and filed with the clerk, or stated in open court, and entered by the clerk; otherwise the same will be disregarded. Counsel obtaining any order or judgment may be required by the clerk to furnish to him the form of the same.

Rule 16. Any cause may be submitted on brief by stipulation, and either party may submit a cause on his behalf on brief filed, and without oral argument.

Rule 17. Counsel for each party shall be allowed one hour, to be divided among associates, as they may desire, but the court, in special cases, will allow further time. Each defendant who appeared separately in the court below, and an intervenor, may be heard through his own counsel.

Rule 18. All opinions of the court, after having been finally corrected, shall be filed and recorded by the clerk, and his fees therefor shall be taxed as a part of the costs.

Rule 19. No papers shall be taken from the files of this court, except by leave of court, or one of the justices thereof; but appellants may withdraw the transcript of the record for the purpose of making an abstract, upon giving a receipt therefor to the clerk, and upon such withdrawal may retain the same for eight days, but no more, unless upon the written order of one of the justices of the supreme court. If the respondent shall desire to make an abstract of the record, he may withdraw the transcript upon giving the like receipt, and retain the same for a like time; but neither party shall withdraw the transcript more than once. All records and papers of said court shall be open to inspection by the public, and any person may procure or make copies thereof.

Rule 20. Application for rehearing of any cause shall be by petition to the court, signed by counsel, briefly stating the points wherein it is alleged the court has erred; such petition to be filed within twenty days next after the filing of the opinion in the case. Counsel shall accompany such petition with a brief of the authorities relied upon in support thereof, and the certificate required by law. The filing of a petition for a rehearing shall suspend proceedings under the decision until the petition for a rehearing is disposed of. Upon the determination of a petition for a rehearing, or where, on notice to the party against whom the judgment is entered in any case, the party does not signify an intention to move for rehearing, the clerk shall issue remittitur to the court below, or, if an original proceeding, a copy of the final judgment, upon payment of the balance of costs, if any, due to the clerk in the cause.

Rule 21. The clerks of district courts shall be entitled to receive the fees allowed by law for all transcripts of records, and also any balance of costs due in the cause, before delivering the same; except in criminal cases where the defendants are unable to pay for transcripts of the record, and the trial judge shall have ordered the same to be furnished without cost, and except in criminal cases where plaintiff is appellant.

Rule 22. Whenever an action shall be brought into this court, the party so bringing the cause shall pay to the clerk the usual and reasonable deposit required by him to pay the costs as they accrue: provided, that, if upon the final determination of any cause there shall remain in the hands of the clerk any balance of deposit in excess of costs, it may be returned to the party entitled thereto.

Rule 23. There shall be appointed at the beginning of each term of this court a standing committee of three members of the bar of this court, whose duty it shall be to examine and report in writing upon the qualifications of every applicant for admission to the bar of this court, who is required to be examined.

Rule 24. Any party entitled, by reason of a personal interest, to ask for or to oppose any order, judgment, or decree in the probate court, may appeal from the order, judgment, or decree made by the court, adverse to him or his interest, to the district court of a judicial district embracing the county where such probate court is held, in all cases involving the probating or revoking the probate of a will, the administration of a decedent's estate, and in all cases of guardianship. All appeals from provisional or interlocutory orders shall be taken within thirty days from the entry of the same; and all appeals from the final decree or judgment declaring the validity or invalidity of a will, or the final order on the administration of an estate by an executor, administrator, or guardian, shall be taken within one year after the entry thereof; and on appeal from such final order the appellate court shall have jurisdiction to review the entire proceeding from the beginning, and to affirm, modify, or reverse any and all orders or decrees therein which shall affect the substantial rights of the parties, and shall thereupon make such order or decree as to the court shall seem just, and may remand the case to the probate court in case of reversal or modification of its orders or decrees, or retain and exercise jurisdiction to complete the proceeding. [As adopted July 23, 1881.]

Rule 25. Such appeal may be taken within sixty days after the order, decree, or judgment is made and entered, and shall be by filing with the clerk of such probate court a notice stating the appeal from the order, decree, or judgment, or some specific part or parts thereof, and by executing an undertaking or giving surety in the same manner and to the same extent as in case of appeal to the supreme court from a district court: provided, that, in case of appeal by an executor or administrator who has given official bonds, no additional undertaking need be given. [As adopted July 23, 1881.]

Rule 26. The trial of such appeal from the probate court shall be de novo in the district court; but, when the appellant in his notice specifies only some specific part or parts of an order, decree, or judgment appealed from, the trial in the district court shall be confined to the part or parts specified, and the balance of such order, decree, or judgment shall stand unaffected by such appeal. Appeals shall be allowed from the orders, decrees, and judgments of the district. In such appeal cases, to the supreme court, in the same manner and upon the same terms as provided by law in other cases. [As adopted July 23, 1881.]

BARKLY V. COPELAND. (No. 13,520.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 27, 1890.)

OBJECTIONS WAIVED—WITNESS—IMPEACHMENT—DECLARATIONS—CONSPIRACY.

1. Where an answer of defendant's witness on cross-examination is stricken out because it was given too quickly to permit defendant's counsel to object to the question, but the objection is not then urged, and plaintiff's counsel passes on at once to another question, he thereby waives the first question, and his exception to the striking out of the answer is without merit.

2. It is proper on cross-examination of defendant's witness to allow a question whether she had not on a former occasion tried to induce another person to grant a request, involving a collateral matter, by promising that she would not testify for defendant, where the only object of the question is to show that she had been willing on a former occasion to suppress the testimony just given, and so to impeach her.

3. In an action for slander, defendant justified by attempting to show that plaintiff was connected with the cattle stealing charged by defendant. On cross-examination of the thief, he testified that while he was under arrest one T. told him that the whole matter of the stealing had been settled, but nothing was said to connect plaintiff with such settlement. Held, that this statement was merely a collateral matter, and the witness could not be impeached by contradicting it.

4. In an action for slander in charging plaintiff with complicity in the theft of cattle, where defendant justifies on the ground of the truth of the charge, entries in plaintiff's books showing that he purchased the cattle from the thief are not admissible to show his good faith, being his own declarations, and no part of the res gestæ.

5. Nor is evidence admissible to show that he paid a certain amount of money to the owner of the cattle after they were stolen, and then sued the thief to recover such amount.

6. Where the thief had testified that he had agreed with plaintiff to steal cattle for him, his statements to third persons of declarations made to him by plaintiff before the cattle were stolen, are admissible, as being evidence of the declarations of a conspirator.<sup>1</sup>

7. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 2051, a witness' credit cannot be impeached by evidence of specific wrongful acts.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHARLES P. BRAYNARD, Judge.

Clay W. Taylor and Jackson Hatch, for appellant. Chipman & Garter, John F. Ellison, and L. V. Hitchcock, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This action was brought to recover damages for slanderous words spoken by defendant, in (as it is alleged) falsely charging the plaintiff, Barkly, with being interested with Russell Speegle in the larceny of certain cattle, the property of one Thomas Polk, and with receiving the same knowing them to have been stolen by Speegle. The defense set up was justification on the ground that the language spoken was true, and certain facts in mitigation were also pleaded. The jury found for the defendant, and from the judgment thereupon rendered, and an order refusing a new trial, this appeal is taken.

The first ground of error relied upon by the appellant is that the court erred in striking out, upon the defendant's motion, the answer of the witness Laura Mandeville in response to the question put by the plaintiff's counsel, with reference to whether or not she had made a certain statement to one Sam Nelson, at a time when Nelson mentioned to her that the defendant was watching her front door, etc., and in refusing to allow to be answered the plaintiff's question to the same witness relating to a conversation with Nelson. The question asked was: "Now, at the time before Nelson and Mandeville had a row, didn't Sam Nelson come into your house one night during the time of the former trial of this case,—your house that you rented at and in the town of Red Bluff,—and then and there say to you that he had seen Copeland standing out watching the front door of your house, or words in substance, and to that effect, and ask you what Copeland was doing there? Didn't you then respond to him, and tell him that Copeland was hanging around you shadowing you, and trying to get you to swear to something for him in this case, and that you were not going to do it?" The answer stricken out was: "He said nothing of the kind to me, and I said nothing to him." The objection was made on the ground that "it is not the proper way to impeach a witness. There is nothing in that question contradictory to what the witness stated upon the stand." The question was answered before the objection was made; and, upon the statement that the defendant's counsel had endeavor-ored to state the objection before answer, and was unable to anticipate it, the court, upon motion, struck it out, and the plaintiff excepted. There is nothing in the exception. The court had a right, and it was its duty, to give the opposite side a chance to object to the question, which had been answered too quickly, and to strike out the answer for such purpose. After the answer was stricken out, no objection to the question was made. The question therefore stood unchallenged, and while it was in this condition plaintiff's counsel passed to another question, and thereby waived the former.

This question was then asked: "After the row took place between Mandeville and Nelson, which you have just referred to, didn't you go to Nelson, in the town of Red Bluff, during the former trial of this case, and say to him, if he would not prosecute Mandeville for shooting him, that you would not testify for Copeland in this case, or words in substance, and to that effect?" Objection was made, and sustained, that the question was as to matter irrelevant and immaterial, and that it was not proper cross-examination. To this, exception was duly made. All this was upon the cross-examination of the witness, who took the stand for the defendant. If the matter attempted to be brought out was intended to show the defendant in the light of one attempting to corrupt the witness, and cause her to swear falsely, and that it would bind him, counsel for the plaintiff freely concede that the ruling of the court is correct; but the contention is that plaintiff's purpose was to impeach the witness as showing her unworthy of belief from her statements, as being willing to suppress testimony for a consideration, which went to her general integrity. Upon the other hand, the defendant contends that, while it is competent to impeach a witness by showing that at other times he or she had made statements inconsistent with his or her testimony as given upon the trial, yet that there is a limitation of the rule, and that the matter involved in the supposed contradiction must not of itself be merely collateral in its character, as is claimed that the matter here in dispute was, but must be relevant to the issue being tried. The evident design of the plaintiff's counsel was to show by Nelson if the witness denied that she had made the statement mentioned in the question, notwithstanding the denial that she had agreed with him to suppress testimony in this case, the latter having no connection with Copeland, nor any reason to hold out any inducement to this witness to suppress her testimony. The effect of this would be to prove by Nelson, contrary to the denials of the witness, that she had been guilty of bargaining with Nelson to suppress evidence in this case, which she afterwards gave upon the stand. This cross-question should have been allowed. It is true under the rule laid down in Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 673, 22 Pac. Rep. 26, 131, and hereinafter applied in the present case, that a witness cannot be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts not bearing upon the matter in issue. But the cross-question here called, not for testimony tending to show the commission of or willingness to commit an isolated wrongful act, but one which was connected with her own testimony in the case given on behalf of the defendant. Therefore the answers should have been allowed, as it seems to us that it is important that the jury should know whether a witness, after she has given her testimony in favor of one party, had at some previous time offered or agreed for a consideration to suppress the very testimony she has given; for, if she did, it would certainly throw discredit upon her testimony as given, in the same manner as would the fact that she had made different statements upon a former occasion.

On cross-examination of the witness Speegle, a convict in the penitentiary, whose deposition was there being taken on behalf of the defendant, the plaintiff asked this question: "While you were in jail at Tehama did you send word to Barkly to come and see you at all? Answer: I am pretty certain that I did. I got out of jail the same night I was put in there. I was arrested after my escape in Nevada. While I was out I had no communication with plaintiff. I neither wrote to him nor sent any word to him. When I was brought back I was in jail ten or twelve days before I was convicted. During that time, I neither saw the plaintiff nor sent for him. I had counsel at my examination. Do not know who paid him. Made no defense at all in the justice's court. After I was arrested I told Leland Clark to tell plaintiff to go to Wiley Clark and get some money, so that the matter could be settled. Afterwards, Charley Tait told me the whole thing was settled, about the cow business,—stealing. The whole affair was settled with Polk, and I would have been loose the next morning if I had not got out of jail that night. Tait told me that while I was in the cell. He said all that was necessary was for me to go before the justice of the peace the next morning, and I would have been dismissed. In that conversation plaintiff's name was mentioned, but I do not remember whether he said that plaintiff had settled it up. After my conviction, I sent no word to the plaintiff about the matter, nor did I then, nor have I since, called on him for assistance, nor have I written to him." Afterwards Charles Tait was called by the plaintiff as a witness, and, after testifying that he was at the jail, and saw Speegle after his arrest, and had a conversation with him, he was asked if he had at that time a conversation with Speegle in which Tait told him "that the whole affair relative to the cattle stealing had been settled." This was objected to by defendant's counsel as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and that it was an attempt to impeach Speegle's testimony on a collateral point that was brought out by plaintiff on his cross-examination. The objection being sustained, exception was taken. After this, two other questions were asked Tait, evidently intended to contradict Speegle as to matters testified to by him on his cross-examination brought out by the plaintiff, and relating to this conversation at the jail, to which Speegle alluded in his testimony. To them the same objection was made, ruling given, and exception taken. This matter of the Tait conversation was clearly collateral matter brought out on cross-examination, and it was not permissible for the cross-examiner to impeach the witness by contradicting his statement thus brought out. People v. Dye, 75 Cal. 112, 16 Pac. Rep. 537.

Again it is urged, as error, that the trial court would not permit the plaintiff to prove certain entries in his books showing that he had put down therein the stolen cattle as being purchased by him, etc., with a view to show his good faith in receiving them from Speegle. It is said by appellant that these entries were part of the res gestæ, and as such admissible. "A litigant is not permitted to strengthen his case by his own declarations, whether written or verbal. They may be used against him, but not for him." Hausman v. Hausling, 78 Cal. 286, 20 Pac. Rep. 570; Code Civil Proc. § 1870. Referring to a certain sum of $28, which the appellant, when on the stand as a witness, had stated that he had paid to one Polk, the owner of the cattle that Speegle had stolen, the witness was asked by his counsel if he afterwards brought suit against Speegle for that amount. This was objected to by defendant's counsel, on the ground that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and that a party's own acts and declarations are inadmissible as evidence in his favor. The objection was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted. The ruling, we think, was clearly right. This transaction was no part of the res gestæ. The suit was brought some days after the cattle were stolen, and Speegle had been arrested for stealing them.

There were various questions on cross-examination asked the witness Laura Mandeville, as to acts which went to show her a woman "destitute of moral qualities." They were objected to, and objection sustained. This was properly done. She could not be impeached by evidence of specific wrongful acts. Section 2051, Code Civil Proc.; Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633-673, 22 Pac. Rep. 26, 131.

Finally it is contended by the appellant, that the trial court erroneously admitted, over his objection, statements of Speegle to Laura Mandeville concerning his visit to Tehama, and his conversations with the plaintiff. These matters were related by Laura Mandeville when on the stand as a witness; the questions, to which answers were returned, being: "When he came back, [meaning Speegle,] did he tell you what he had done? What did he say Barkly said he would do with the cattle, if he would drive them over to him, if anything?" The objection was upon the ground that the matter sought to be brought out was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and was not responsive to any issue in the case, and was hearsay. Upon the other hand, the defendant by his counsel contended that the statements were those of a conspirator with the plaintiff in the theft of the cattle by Speegle, made before the theft, and while the conspiracy was in full force and effect. There was evidence by Speegle tending to show that he had made a bargain in the latter part of July, or the first of August, 1884, with the plaintiff, Barkly, to drive cattle to him, and that as early as June of that year the plaintiff had said to Speegle that he, Speegle, had been to a good deal of trouble; had the name of it, and might as well have it again; and that, if Speegle wanted to, to drive them up, and Barkly would do "the square thing" by him; and that, in accordance with this understanding, Speegle had delivered the cattle to the plaintiff. This tended to show a joint agreement between Barkly and Speegle as to the criminal enterprise; and the statements related by the woman Mandeville, as made to her by Speegle, were made before the cattle were stolen, and related to the enterprise with reference thereto in which he and Barkly were embarked, and, within a day or two after the last statement was made to her, Speegle drove the cattle to Tehama, and delivered them to Barkly. In the case of People v. Collins, 64 Cal. 295, it was said: "The conspiracy, according to the testimony, contemplated the robbing of stages and their passengers whenever and wherever opportunity offered. The law holds each party to it responsible for the acts of each co-conspirator, done in pursuance and furtherance of the common design, which extends to the consequences which might reasonably be expected to flow from carrying into effect the unlawful combination. There was therefore no error in admitting in evidence against Collins the acts and declaration of Thorne, in relation to the gun with which the murder was committed." So here, the conspiracy having been testified to by Speegle, his acts and declarations relative to the taking and delivering the cattle to Barkly, in pursuance of the common design, was evidence against Barkly as to his complicity in the affair, afterwards consummated. On account of the error pointed out, we advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; GIBSON, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed.

BARKLY v. COPELAND. (No. 13,521.)

COSTS—FEES FOR TRANSCRIPT.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 274, as amended by Amend. Codes 1880, p. 54, which provides that "in causes where a transcript has been ordered by the court the fees for transcription must be paid by the respective parties to the action in equal proportions," the fees paid by defendant are a necessary part of the costs incurred in his defense, and if he succeeds in the action he is entitled to recover them from plaintiff.

2. But where such transcript is ordered by defendant alone, he cannot recover the fees therefor, or any part of them, but must pay the whole himself, as provided by the same section.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHARLES P. BRAYNARD, Judge.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from an order refusing to retax a bill of costs presented by the defendant, who had succeeded in the action. There had been two trials of the case, and on each trial the evidence had been transcribed by the short-hand reporter. In the first instance this was done upon the order of the court; at the second trial it was done upon the order of the defendant, without any from the court. It is not entirely clear how much of the amount due to the short-hand reporter for the first transcript was paid by defendant and plaintiff, but it appears as if each one had paid half the fees. As this transcription was made upon the order of the court, but without any direction as to how the fees due therefor should be proportioned between the parties and paid, each side should have paid half, as they did. "In cases where a transcript has been ordered by the court the fees for transcription must be paid by the respective parties to the action, in equal proportions, or by such of them, and in such proportions, as the court, in its discretion, may order." Section 274, Code Civil Proc.; Amend. Codes 1880, p. 54. By the order of the court, this half of the fees thus paid by the defendant in the first instance became a necessary part of the costs and disbursements incurred by him in defense of the action. He was therefore entitled to recover it from his adversary against whom he obtained judgment.

As to the second item, which was $559.40, paid by the defendant for the second transcription, he could not recover that, or any part of it, from the plaintiff, as neither the latter nor the court had ordered it, but the defendant alone. In another part of section 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1880, it is said: "The party ordering the reporter to transcribe any portion of the testimony or proceedings must pay the fees of the reporter therefor." The court should have retaxed the defendant's bill of costs, and struck therefrom the item of $559.40, above mentioned. For these reasons, we advise that the order appealed from be reversed, and the court below directed to retax the bill of costs as herein indicated.

We concur. BELCHER, C. C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is reversed, and the court below is directed to retax the bill of costs as therein indicated.

HULING v. ABBOTT et al. (No. 12,909.)

NOTICE OF MORTGAGE—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

An assignee of a certificate of purchase of land took it with knowledge of an unrecorded mortgage by the assignor, and assigned it to one who had no knowledge of the mortgage. The latter assignee, having obtained a patent to the land, conveyed it to the first assignee, who conveyed it to a person having notice of the mortgage. Held, that the mortgage could be enforced against the last grantee, as his grantor, though taking from an innocent purchaser, became, by reason of his former position, a purchaser with notice of the mortgagee's rights and equities.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. J. DE HAVEN, Judge.

E. W. Willson and Henry L. Ford, for appellant. G. W. Hunter, (J. N. Gillett and J. F. Coonan, of counsel,) for respondent.

THORNTON, J. Action to foreclose a mortgage on a parcel of land situate in Humboldt county. Defendant Abbott was the mortgagor. Abbott made default, judgment of foreclosure was made and entered against defendants, and from this judgment defendant Bull alone prosecutes an appeal. The following facts are found: On July 7, 1885, Abbott was the owner of the tract of land which he, on the 28th of July, 1886, conveyed to plaintiff by mortgage to secure the payment of a debt due by Abbott to the plaintiff. Abbott's title to this land was derived under a certificate of purchase from the state of California, bearing date the day first above mentioned. On the 28th of July, 1886, Abbott assigned his certificate of purchase, and all his title in the land mentioned therein, to one M. H. Crissmon, who purchased with actual notice of the existence of plaintiff's mortgage. On April 15, 1887, Crissmon assigned the certificate of purchase and all his title in and to said lands to C. C. Fitzgerald. Fitzgerald purchased with actual notice of the existence of plaintiff's mortgage, and agreed, as part consideration for the assignment, to pay at maturity the debt secured by the mortgage, and for this purpose retained in his hands from the purchase price the full amount of the principal and interest due on the debt. On July 1, 1887, Fitzgerald assigned the certificate of purchase, and all his title to said lands, to one R. W. Rideout, who at the time of his purchase had no knowledge of the existence of plaintiff's mortgage. Thereafter, Rideout, while the owner of the land, received from the state of California, as assignee of the certificate of purchase, a patent for said lands. The plaintiff placed the mortgage on record in the proper office in the county of Humboldt, on the 19th day of September, 1887. On the 20th of October, 1887, and while the mortgage of plaintiff was of record, Rideout conveyed the lands described in the certificate of purchase above mentioned to the above-named C. C. Fitzgerald. On the 2d day of January, 1888, Fitzgerald conveyed to the defendant Bull (appellant here) the lands above referred to. At the date of the conveyance last named, Bull had full notice of the record of plaintiff's mortgage, and of the execution and existence of such mortgage. On the facts above stated, the court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff. We think the judgment should stand. When Fitzgerald, who was the grantor of Rideout, and who had actual notice of plaintiff's mortgage when he purchased, and at the time he conveyed to Rideout, received a conveyance from the latter, he occupied the same position he formerly did, viz., that of a purchaser with notice of plaintiff's rights and equities. He was not protected by the fact that Rideout, his grantor, was an innocent purchaser. Talbert v. Singleton, 42 Cal. 391; 2 Devl. Deeds, § 748; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 754. When Fitzgerald secured the conveyance from Rideout, he occupied the same position he did when he purchased from Crissmon,—that of a purchaser with notice of and bound by all the equities of Huling. The court finds that Bull took his conveyance from Fitzgerald with full notice of plaintiff's equities. We cannot see in what way the conclusion can be avoided that plaintiff had a right to enforce his rights against Bull. It may be further observed that it does not appear that Bull paid any money on his purchase. He must, then, be held to occupy the same position that Fitzgerald did, and alike subject to the enforcement of plaintiff's rights. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

JUDGMENT IN REPLEVIN.

1. In replevin, plaintiff alleged his ownership and right of possession, the value of the property, and defendant's wrongful taking and retention of possession. The answer put in issue all said allegations except value. Held, that a judgment for the return of the property could not be sustained, there being no finding that plaintiff was entitled to possession, but only that plaintiff was the owner and in possession, and that defendant, as sheriff, wrongfully took possession under a writ of attachment against another person.

2. A judgment for the possession of personal property, which merely describes it as "two stallion horses," without reference to other pleadings or papers for such description, is bad for uncertainty.

3. In an action to recover possession of personal property, a judgment for possession only, and not for possession or the value thereof, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 667, is erroneous.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; W. H. CLARK, Judge.

H. H. Appel, Gage & Robarts, and Willis & Appel, for appellant. William Young, (H. C. Carr, of counsel,) for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal on the judgment roll from a judgment for the recovery of personal property. The plaintiff alleged that he was the owner, and entitled to the immediate possession of the property, giving its value, and that the defendant had wrongfully, and without the plaintiff's consent, taken and retained possession thereof, and detained the same from him; that he had demanded possession of the property, which was refused; and that he had been damaged in the sum of $100. The defendant answered denying the ownership of the plaintiff, or his right to possession, or that he had wrongfully taken, or wrongfully detained, the property, or that the plaintiff had been damaged; and alleging, also, that the property was owned by one Cyrus F. Cooke. He also justified, as sheriff, by alleging that said Cooke was the owner of the property, and that he had taken possession of the same by virtue of a writ of attachment regularly issued against Cooke, and placed in his hands, for service, as such sheriff. The answer did not put in issue the value of the property, as alleged in the complaint. The court found that the plaintiff was the owner, and in possession, of the property, and that the defendant, in his official capacity as sheriff, by virtue of a writ of attachment issued against said Cyrus F. Cooke, wrongfully took possession of the property, and still held the same. There was no finding that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the property, or its value, or the amount of plaintiff's damages. The property was sufficiently described in the complaint. The court rendered the following judgment: "Wherefore, by reason of the law and the findings aforesaid, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that James A. Cooke, the plaintiff, do have and receive of A. G. Aguirre, (sheriff,) the defendant, judgment for the return of the property, to-wit: Two stallion horses, together with said sheriff's costs and disbursements, incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of sixty-two and 5-100 dollars, ($62.05.)" The appellant contends that the findings do not support the judgment; that the court did not find on all the material issues; and that the judgment is invalid, because it does not sufficiently describe the property, and is not in the alternative, as required by law.

The questions whether the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the property, and whether he was damaged by the taking, were put in issue by the pleadings. Both of these were material issues. One of them, at least, must have been found in favor of the plaintiff to entitle him to recover. There was no finding as to his right to the possession. For this reason, the judgment is not supported by the findings. The question of damages should have been found upon, but the appellant cannot reasonably ask for a reversal of the case, because a judgment for damages was not rendered against him. The judgment was erroneous because not in the alternative, as required by section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure, (Berson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 550; Stewart v. Taylor, 68 Cal. 5, 8 Pac. Rep. 605.) And for the further reason that it contained no sufficient description of the property. It contains no sufficient description of the property, nor does it refer to any other pleading or paper for such description. Such a judgment is bad for uncertainty. *Welch v. MADDEN v. OCCIDENTAL & ORIENTAL S. S. Co. (No. 12,799.)

INJURY TO EMPLOYE—EVIDENCE.

While plaintiff's decedent was employed in loading defendant's ship; the sling to the apparatus provided by defendant for loading the ship broke, precipitating freight onto deceased, causing his death. Held, that defendant's negligence could not be inferred from the mere breaking of the sling, in the absence of proof that it was being properly used by defendant's employees, and in the ordinary manner.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

WORKS, J. This is an action by the appellant against the respondent for damages for the death of her husband, claimed to have resulted from the negligence of the appellant. The deceased was the employee of the respondent, engaged in loading one of its ships. The amended complaint alleges: "That, on the 18th day of October, A. D. 1886, the said Patrick Madden was an employee of the said defendant, employed by it, and for it, on the lower deck next above the lower hold of the ship Belgic, (one of said ships,) at the mail dock or wharf in the said city and county of San Francisco, as a laborer, assisting to load said ship by stowing cargo; that on the said 18th day of October, A. D. 1886, and while said Patrick Madden was engaged at said work, on said lower deck of the ship, as such laborer, four bales of cotton goods, each bale firmly packed so as to form a solid body, weighing from about 180 to 250 pounds avoirdupois, were, by means of a sling manufactured of rope, hoisted and worked by block and tackle, and operated by steam-power, transferred from said dock or wharf to the main-deck of said ship at the hatchway known and designated as 'Hatchway No. 5,' the said sling, block, and tackle being parts of the machinery and appliances provided by the defendant for the use of its laborers, employed by it in the business and work of loading said ship Belgic; that said four bales should have been, by means of said machinery and appliances, carefully lowered to and stowed on said lower deck of said ship, but because of the insecurity and unsuitableness of said sling, and because of the negligence of the defendant in failing to provide and maintain a safe and suitable sling, which insecurity, unsuitableness, and negligence were unknown to or by said Patrick Madden, said sling parted, and two bales of cotton were violently precipitated from the main-deck of said ship down said hatchway No. 5 to the place on said lower deck where said Patrick Madden was engaged in his work, a distance of from eighteen to twenty feet below said main-deck, and one or both of said two bales, containing cotton cloth, as aforesaid, violently struck the said Patrick Madden, without his fault or negligence, producing a fracture of the cervical vertebra which pressed on the spinal cord, and also producing an injury of the chest, and a fracture of some of his ribs, and said Patrick Madden was thereby otherwise greatly bruised and injured; and also, by means of the premises, the said Patrick Madden became and was sick, sore, lame, and disabled, and so remained and languished for the space of four days, and until the 22d day of October, A. D. 1886, when, by reason and as the result of said injuries, and by reason of the premises and of the negligence of the defendant, the said Patrick Madden died." These allegations of negligence were denied by the answer. The cause was partially tried, and upon the evidence of the plaintiff a nonsuit was granted. A motion for a new trial was made, and denied, and the plaintiff appeals.

It is contended that the court below erred in sustaining a demurrer to the original complaint. But the plaintiff did not stand upon her original complaint, but filed an amended one, whereby she waived any error of the court in ruling upon such demurrer, if any error was committed. The nonsuit was properly granted, for the reason that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. It was shown that the rope-sling, by which freight was being carried into the ship, and lowered through a hatchway to the lower deck, broke, whereby two bales of freight were precipitated down such hatchway, and the deceased thereby fatally injured, as alleged in the complaint. But there was no evidence showing, or tending to show, that the sling thus used was unsuitable or insecure, as alleged in said complaint, unless the mere proof that the sling broke was prima facie evidence of the fact. It is contended by counsel for the appellant that it was only necessary for her to prove that the sling broke, and that, from such proof alone, it must be inferred, in the absence of any evidence on the part of the defendant tending to show that the accident occurred from other causes, that the accident was the result of the neglect of the defendant to furnish a proper sling. It may be that in some cases it would be sufficient to prove that an accident occurred, in order to establish a prima facie case of negligence, and cast upon the defendant the burden of explaining away the inference resulting from such proof; and it may be conceded that such would have been the case here, if it had been shown that the sling was being properly used by the co-employees of the deceased, and in the ordinary way. It might be said that, if a railroad train were being properly and carefully run and operated, and that, notwithstanding, some part of the machinery broke, and an accident occurred, negligence would be inferred. Griffin v. Railroad Co., 148 Mass. 143, 19 N. E. Rep. 166. But, as was said in the case cited, "no general rule can be laid down that the mere occurrence of an accident is, or is not, sufficient proof of the actionable negligence; for each case must depend upon its own circumstances." In this case there is no evidence as to what amount of freight this sling was intended to or should carry, or that it was being properly used at the time of the accident. It may have been intended to carry a weight of 500 pounds, and may have been entirely sufficient to carry such a weight, and, for aught we can tell from the evidence before us, it may have been overloaded, and the accident have happened from that cause alone. When it is said in some of the cases that the occurrence of an accident is prima facie evidence of insufficiency of the machinery or appliance being used, it must be confined to cases, if the rule is conceded to be the correct one, where the machinery or appliance is shown to have been used in the usual and proper way, at least where the same is being used by the party injured, or his co-employees. This was not shown in this case, and therefore the rule contended for does not apply here.

A certain question asked by the defendant was objected to by the plaintiff, and the objection overruled. This is complained of. But, as the question did not in any way relate to or affect what we regard as the proper reason for granting the nonsuit, the ruling was harmless, conceding that it was erroneous. One of the grounds for the motion for a new trial was newly-discovered evidence, and certain affidavits in support of this ground are set out in the record. The evidence set out in these affidavits does not supply the facts necessary to make out the plaintiff's case, or tend to strengthen her case, where it needs support. Therefore the motion for a new trial on this ground was properly denied.

LANDLORD AND TENANT — RENT — FRAUDULENT OVERCHARGE—CLAIMS AGAINST DECEASED PARTNER.

1. A lease of a store for two years, at the monthly rental of $300, gave the lessees the privilege of a renewal at the same rental. The lease also provided that if the lessees should hold over after the expiration of the two years, with the consent of the lessors, such holding should be construed as a tenancy from month to month. Held, that an oral agreement made after the expiration of the two-year term, which had not been extended, and while the lessees were holding as tenants from month to month, under which agreement they were to pay the same rent per month as the lessors should succeed in getting for an adjoining store, did not vary the terms of the written lease, as that had already expired.

2. Where the lease of the adjoining store on its face provides for a rental of $300 per month, a written agreement, contemporaneously executed, under which the lessors agreed to allow the tenants of the adjoining store a rebate of $100 per month, is admissible in an action by the lessees of the first store to recover the amount overpaid by them under the oral agreement.

3. Statements made by the lessors' agent on leasing the adjoining store, as to his reason for drawing the lease for $300 per month, are competent evidence against the lessors.

4. Since the lessees of the first store were tenants from month to month, when the contingency happened on which they were entitled to a reduction of $100 per month in their rent, the presumption, as provided by Civil Code Cal. § 945, is that the hiring was at the same reduced rent for each of the succeeding months that they continued their occupancy; and they are entitled to recover the entire overplus which they had been induced to pay for nearly a year by the deceit of the lessors.

5. A claim against a partnership, one of the members of which has died, does not come within Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1493, which requires claims against a decedent's estate to be presented within a specified time, or be forever barred.

6. The executors of a deceased partner are not necessary parties defendant in an action on a claim against the partnership; and, though they have been joined, a judgment in plaintiff's favor is not erroneous because it does not require that the amount awarded thereby shall be paid in the due course of the administration of the deceased partner's estate.

Commissioner's decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WILLIAM T. WALLACE, Judge.

Lloyd & Wood and E. F. Preston, for appellants. Royce & Commings and C. E. K. Royce, for respondent.

GIBSON, C. This action was brought by plaintiff Corson, as assignee, to recover from the firm of A. Berson & Son the sum of $1,050, due for rent, for 3½ months, on a lease made and delivered to them by the firm of Ewing, Plum & O'Brien, plaintiff's assignors. A Berson & Son admitted by their answer that they occupied the leased premises during the period above mentioned, but denied that such occupation was under or pursuant to the lease relied upon by plaintiff, and averred that during that time they held under a verbal agreement with Ewing, Plum & O'Brien, by which they, A. Berson & Son, were to hold and pay rent for the premises, and did hold and pay for the same, at the rate of $150 per month. With their answer, they filed a cross-complaint, bringing in, as parties to the action, Ewing and Plum, and Flood and Coleman, the executors of O'Brien, the deceased partner of Ewing and Plum. By this cross-complaint, they alleged that on or about March 1, 1884, Ewing, Plum & O'Brien let the premises to A. Berson & Son from month to month, upon the same rental that the lessors might get for an adjoining store which they, from and after said date and up to June 1, 1885, rented for the sum of $150 per month, but fraudulently concealed the true amount of the rent thereof from A. Berson & Son, and fraudulently represented to them that the true rental of the adjoining store was $300 per month, and thereby fraudulently induced A. Berson & Son to pay a greater amount of rent than they had agreed to pay. By reason of which Ewing, Plum & O'Brien became indebted to A. Berson & Son in the sum of $150 per month, for every month's rent paid by the latter from March 1, 1884, to February 15, 1885, with interest thereon from the last day of each month, less 3½ months' rent from the latter date, at $150 per month. After the commencement of the action, A. Berson died, and it was continued in the name of G. Berson as the surviving partner of the firm of A. Berson & Son. The case was tried without a jury, and the court found the facts in favor of G. Berson, as the said surviving partner, in accordance with the allegations of the cross-complaint, except that the rental of the adjoining store was found to be $200 per month for one year from June 1, 1884, instead of $150 per month from March 1, 1884; and that the rent due from A. Berson & Son for 3½ months from February 15, 1885, was at the rate of $200 instead of $150 per month. Judgment followed for the cross-complainant, G. Berson, as surviving partner of A. Berson & Son, for $178.50, overplus paid by the firm from June 1, 1884, to February 15, 1885, after deducting $700 for rent due from the latter date until June 1, 1885, together with interest on the overplus from the date last mentioned. From this judgment and an order denying a new trial, the plaintiff Corson, and Ewing and Plum, and O'Brien's executors, viz., Flood and Coleman, appeal.

In order that the points made by appellants may be fully understood it is necessary to state the leading facts as shown by the evidence. A. Berson & Son, by a lease in writing, leased a store from Ewing, Plum & O'Brien for two years from May 15, 1881, at the monthly rental of $300 per month, payable in advance each month, with the privilege of an extension of the term at the same rental up to the date of the expiration of the lease of Ewing, Plum & O'Brien, from J. G. Brooks. The lease also provided that, if the lessees should hold over after the expiration of the term of two years, with the expressed or implied consent of their lessors, such holding should be construed as a tenancy from month to month. On the expiration of the term on May 15, 1885, the lease was not extended, but the lessees continued to hold the premises as tenants from month to month at the same rate specified in the lease. While they were thus holding, the adjoining store, which also belonged to the lessors, became vacant in February, 1884, and Ewing, for his firm, in an answer to the repeated solicitations of A. Berson, of the firm of A. Berson & Son, agreed with the latter, as an inducement for them to remain as tenants, that, if the vacant store should be rented for less than $300 per month, A. Berson & Son should have their store at the same rental. In May of the same year, the lessors leased the adjoining store for one year from June 1, 1884, at a monthly rental, expressed in the lease, of $300 per month, and gave the lessee a separate paper in which the lessors stipulated to allow the lessee $100 per month on the rent of $300 per month, during the term. This stipulation was concealed from A. Berson & Son, to whom it was represented by their lessors that the tenants of the adjoining store were paying $300 per month therefor. Believing this representation to be true, A. Berson & Son continued to pay $300 per month, until February 15, 1885, about which time they discovered that the tenants of the adjoining store were, and had been, paying only $200 per month instead of $300, but continued to hold the premises until June 1, 1885.

Appellants' first point is that the court erred in overruling their objection to the following question put to G. Berson by his counsel: "What took place when the lease expired?—I mean the original two years, or the first term, of the lease,"—on the ground that it called for testimony that would tend to vary the terms of the written lease. It is obvious that, as the question related to matters that occurred after the lease had expired, the question was not designed to, and in fact did not, elicit anything that tended to vary its terms; and the objection thereto was properly overruled. Appellants' exception to the court's refusal to strike out the testimony of the same witness, as to what was said relative to the reduction of rent upon the same ground upon which the objection was placed, cannot be sustained, because, when the verbal agreement was made with them regarding the reduction of rent upon the contingency, which happened, viz., of not obtaining $300 per month for the adjoining store, they were holding as tenants from month to month, as provided for in the original lease which had expired; and it was competent for them to make any parol agreement as to the continuation of their tenancy for any period not exceeding one year. Besides, the testimony was relevant, and tended strongly to support the agreement for the reduction of rent, which constituted the gist of the cross-action.

Appellants' third objection is that the court erred in receiving, in evidence, the paper that had been given to the tenants who leased the adjoining store at the time they obtained a lease of it from Ewing, Plum & O'Brien, by which paper it was provided that such tenants should receive a rebate of $100 on each month's rent, on the ground that the paper was signed by Ewing, alone, and could not bind his firm. The fact that the paper was given with the written lease to the tenants of the adjoining store, and formed a part of it, is sufficient to show that it was properly received in evidence; and the cases cited by us in support of our disposition of the next point of the appellants conclusively establishes that the trial court was right in its ruling in this respect.

After witness Connolly, who was a member of the firm that had leased the adjoining store, had testified: "I paid $200 per month and no more. I had a conversation with Mr. Ewing and with Mr. Coffey, the young man with Easton & Eldridge at the time. He was the party with whom I negotiated the lease from Mr. Ewing,"—he was asked this question: "Well, now, what was the reason that the lease was drawn for $300 given you then?" And it was objected to by the appellants, other than Corson, on the ground that anything said by Coffey not in the presence of Ewing, or any of the other parties to the lease as lessors, could not bind them. The objection was properly overruled, because, by the above testimony of the same witness, it sufficiently appeared that Coffey was acting as agent for the lessors in negotiating the lease; and anything he said while acting in that capacity, regarding the concealment of the true amount of rent from A. Berson & Son, under the direction of any member of the firm, was, we think, clearly admissible, for, no matter how slight the tendency of the evidence may be to prove fraud, it is not for that reason incompetent. Hubbard v. Briggs, 31 N. Y. 518. If the trial court had any doubt, at the time the question was asked, as to whether Coffey acted as agent for the lessors in negotiating the lease, it must have been removed by Coffey's own testimony given subsequently, in which he said: "I am the party mentioned in the testimony, who negotiated the lease from Messrs. Connolly & Borle for Mr. Ewing." He designated but one member of the firm, but as such partner was acting for the firm in the transaction of its business in effecting the lease referred to, any misrepresentations or concealments made or directed to be made by him in connection therewith were competent against the firm. Mamlock v. White, 20 Cal. 598; Chester v. Dickerson, 54 N. Y. 1; Wolf v. Mills, 56 Ill. 360.

Appellants further contend that, if they promised to reduce the rent at all, it was not for any stated period, but at most from month to month, and, in allowing A. Berson & Son to recover the overplus of rent paid for one year, the court committed error. The agreement for the reduction of rent was, it is true, for no definite period, but upon the letting of the adjoining store for but $200 per month, A. Berson & Son became, under the agreement, entitled to have their rent reduced to that sum. And as they were at the time holding as tenants from month to month, the lessors, under section 1946, Civil Code, could, by proper notice, have terminated their tenancy, or, by giving the notice provided for in section 827, Civil Code, have increased their rent; but, thinking that, in all probability, A. Berson & Son would not discover their secret arrangement with the tenants of the adjoining store, and desiring to retain A. Berson & Son as profitable tenants, they did not deem it necessary to act under either of those provisions of the Civil Code. Section 1945 also provides: "If a lessee of real property remains in possession thereof after the expiration of the hiring, and the lessor accepts rent from him, the parties are presumed to have renewed the hiring on the same terms and for the same time, not exceeding one month when the rent is payable monthly, nor, in any case, one year." Now, as A. Berson & Son, at the time the contingency happened upon which they became entitled to a reduction of $100 per month in their rent, were tenants from month to month, every month that their lessors accepted rent from them, the hiring was presumably on the same terms for each month; that is to say, for the same rent per month as that paid by the tenants of the adjoining store. This being so, the court correctly allowed the amount they had overpaid, by reason of the concealment from them of the true rent of the adjoining store, less the 3 1/2 months' rent that had accrued, from the time they stopped paying rent, upon discovering that they had been paying $100 per month too much, which they were induced to pay by the deceit their lessors practiced upon them.

Another objection of appellants is that A. Berson & Son did not present their claim for rent overpaid, to the executors of the will of O'Brien, as required by section 1493 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides that all claims arising upon contracts against the estate of a deceased person, whether due or not, must be presented within the time limited in the notice requiring such presentation, or be forever barred, unless the claimant shall show that he was out of the state, and in fact had no notice, in which case his claim may be presented at any time prior to the final distribution of the estate. The claim of A. Berson & Son was not a claim against the estate of O'Brien, but against the firm of which he had been a member, and consequently did not come within the purview of that section.

For the same reason, the last point urged by appellants, to the effect that two of the appellants are sued in the cross-complaint as executors, yet the judgment against them does not require that the amount awarded thereby shall be paid in the due course of the administration of their testator's estate, must also fail. As there was no claim made against the estate of the deceased partner, the executors of his will were not necessary parties to the cross-action; and the same end could have been attained by proceeding against the two surviving partners alone. Friermuth v. Friermuth, 46 Cal. 42. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

HABEAS CORPUS—WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE FOR COMMITMENT.

A person charged with crime will not be released on habeas corpus before trial on the ground of want of probable cause for commitment, when there is some evidence, other than the extrajudicial admissions of the party himself, that an offense has been committed.

Carroll Cook, for petitioner. J. D. Page, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

Fox, J. The point made in this case is that the prisoner has been committed without reasonable or probable cause; and that question turns upon whether or not a public offense has been committed triable within this jurisdiction. I deem it improper at this time to prejudice the case of the prisoner by any analysis of the evidence which has been presented, and which may be different at his trial, and of the law applied thereto. Whether it is sufficient to convict beyond a reasonable doubt, it is the province of the jury to say, and ought not to be determined in advance on habeas corpus. It is enough now to say that an examination of the sections of the Code bearing on the question, and of such evidence as has been presented, fails to show that the commitment is without reasonable or probable cause. The cases cited by the petitioner are not in point, for here there is some evidence, other than the extrajudicial admissions of the party, tending to show that an offense has been committed. Let the writ be discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

APPEAL FROM JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—DISMISSAL—POWER OF SUPERIOR COURT.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 129, gives courts of record power to make rules for their own government, not inconsistent with the laws of the state; and section 980 provides that for a failure to prosecute an appeal from a justice's court, or unnecessary delay in bringing it to a hearing, the superior court, after notice, may order the appeal to be dismissed. Held, that the superior court has power to make and enforce a rule that the record and transcript of a case tried in a justice's court must be filed in the superior court within 10 days after the perfection of the appeal, and that if not so filed, the appeal might, on motion, with notice, be dismissed.

In bank. Certiorari to superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

R. E. Houghton, for petitioner. W. C. Stratton, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an original proceeding in certiorari, in this court, to review an order of the superior court, dismissing an appeal from a judgment rendered in a justice's court. The theory of the petitioner is, we suppose, that the superior court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal. The Code does not prescribe any time within which an appellant, from a judgment in a justice's court, must file the record on appeal in the superior court. It merely provides that, after the filing of the notice of appeal and undertaking, and the settlement of the statement, if any, (and in the case at bar there was none,) and, "on the payment of the fees of the justice," the justice must, within five days, transmit to the clerk of the superior court certain papers which constitute the record. Section 977, Code Civil Proc. An appellant, therefore, by simply refusing to pay the justice's fees, might indefinitely postpone the presentation of the record in the appellate court,—so far, at least, as there is any specific statutory provision on the subject. But section 980 provides that, "for a failure to prosecute an appeal, or unnecessary delay in bringing it to a hearing, the superior court, after notice, may order an appeal to be dismissed, with costs." This is a matter which, we think, the superior court can regulate by reasonable rules; and, in the case at bar, the superior court (respondent here) had a rule that the record and transcript must be filed within 10 days after the perfection of the appeal, and that, if not so filed, the appeal might, on motion, with notice, be dismissed. We think that under section 129<sup>1</sup> the court had full power to make this rule. It was not "inconsistent with the laws of the state." In the case at bar, the appeal was perfected by filing and serving the notice of appeal, and filing the undertaking on appeal on April 24, 1890; and the transcript on appeal was not filed in the superior court until May 9, 1890, more than 10 days afterwards. For this reason the appeal was, on motion, after notice, dismissed; and we see no tenable ground for denying the jurisdiction of the court to make the order of dismissal. This view makes it unnecessary to notice the other questions, both of fact and law, raised by respondent. The prayer of the petitioner is denied, and the writ dismissed.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENT.

Act Cal. 1885 (St. 1885, p. 147,) an act relative to assessments for street improvements, provides that "whenever the estimated or actual cost of any work contemplated or ordered to be done by the council, and chargeable under the provisions of this act against any lot," shall exceed one-half of the assessed value of such lot, such excess shall be assessed against and paid by the city. Held, that a property owner was not liable for more than 50 per cent. of the assessed value of his property for work called for by one resolution of intention and order, though it be let out by separate contracts, and separate assessments be made therefor.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. LAWLER, Judge.

D. H. Whittemore, for appellant. H. H. Loewenthal, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This was a suit to foreclose the lien of a street assessment for $145. The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff upon demurrer to the amended answer, and the defendant appeals. The assessment in suit was for grading, macadamizing, etc., Noe street, from Twenty-Fourth street to Twenty-Sixth street; and the complaint alleges that the various steps leading up to and including an assessment were duly taken. The amended answer sets up, in substance, that the resolution of intention included other work than that for which the assessment sued on was made, viz., sewerage of the street for the two blocks mentioned, and work upon adjacent property; that the sum for which the defendant's lot has been and will be charged upon the plaintiff's theory amounts to more than one-half the sum for which it was assessed upon the preceding assessment roll for municipal taxation; and that he gave no consent to the imposition of such a burden. The law upon which the defendant relies is contained in the following provisions of the act of 1885, viz.: Section 3, p. 149: "Whenever the estimated or actual cost of any work contemplated or ordered to be done by the city council, and chargeable under the provisions of this act, against any lot or lots of land, or the owner thereof, shall exceed one-half of the assessed value of such lot or lots as borne upon the last assessment roll, whereon it was assessed, made for the levying of taxes for municipal purposes, the amount of the cost of said work, exceeding said one-half of the assessed value of said lot or lots, shall be paid out of the city treasury, unless the owner of such lot or lots shall, in writing signed by himself or his authorized agent, consent that the whole expense of said improvement may be made a charge against said lot or lots." Section 7, subd. 1: "The expenses incurred for any work authorized by section two of this act * * * shall be assessed upon the lots and lands fronting thereon except as hereinafter specifically provided: Each lot, or portion of a lot, being separately assessed, in proportion to the frontage, at a rate per frontfoot sufficient to cover the total expenses of the work. But whenever the said assessment upon any lot or portion of a lot would exceed one-half the valuation of said lot, or portion of a lot, as it was last assessed for municipal taxation, then, unless the owner or his attorney in fact shall have previously filed with the superintendent of streets a written waiver of the partial exemption herein provided, the assessment and the lien thereof upon said lot, or portion of the lot, shall be only to the amount of one-half of said last preceding municipal valuation, and the proper remainder of said assessment shall be assessed to the city, and be payable out of the city treasury." Page 152. The position of the appellant is that, under the above provisions, the defendant's lot could not be assessed in a greater sum than one-half of its value upon the preceding assessment roll, for all the work called for by the resolution of intention relating to the property in question, while the position of the respondent is that, inasmuch as the work was let in separate contracts, and separate assessments were made, it was sufficient, if no one of said assessments exceeded one-half of the assessed value for municipal taxation. All other questions have been waived. A stipulation has been filed containing the following provision: "It is hereby stipulated and agreed that the only question for the court to decide is, can the city, under the provisions of the act of 1885, (St. 1885, p. 147,) order several different kinds of work in one order and notice of intention, and assess the owners of the property fronting on the work more than fifty per cent. of the assessed value of their lots, if the work be let at different times by separate contracts, and separate assessments be made therefor?" It is apparent that if this question be decided in favor of the appellant the city is liable for the amount of the exemption; and since the act purports to apply to all the municipalities of the state, and as there must be in the various cities and towns a large quantity of property to which the decision would apply, it is obvious that the question is one of importance. Having this in mind when the record was first sent to us for examination, we recommended that the case be set down for reargument, and that the city and county attorney be notified, which was done. No additional argument, however, has been made. The city and county attorney, after examining the briefs, has declared himself satisfied with the argument of the respondent; and the parties directly interested have resubmitted the case upon the same briefs. It is to be noted, with reference to the stipulation referred to, that it does not expressly say that, if the question be decided in favor of the appellant, the judgment is to be reversed, and, if in favor of the respondent, to be affirmed. But we think that this is implied; for the court would not examine a mere moot question, nor do we suppose that counsel would attempt to present such a question. It is to be further observed that the question is somewhat broadly stated in the stipulation. Its language might include a case where the same resolution of intention called for work in different and distant localities. But it is hardly necessary to say that in such case the improvement of one locality has no relation to or dependence upon the improvement of the other, and that the cost of the former would not be chargeable upon the latter. And the provisions quoted exclude such a case: for the language is, "whenever the estimated or actual cost of any work contemplated or ordered to be done by the council, and chargeable under the provisions of this act upon any lot," etc. And, accordingly, we construe the stipulation to refer to work in one locality, and affecting the property of the defendant. And, with reference to the question as thus limited, we think that the position of the appellant is correct, and that the property owner cannot be made liable for more than 50 per cent. of the assessed value of his property for work called for by one resolution of intention and order. The language of the statute indicates this. Each of the provisions quoted has a direct relation to the question. One is to the effect that the excess mentioned shall be paid by the city. The other is, in substance, that such excess shall not be assessed upon the lot, but shall be assessed to the city. These two provisions must be read together, and they mutually depend upon each other, for what the city is to pay is not to be paid by the property owner, and what is to be assessed to the property owner is not to be assessed to or paid by the city. Now, the language of the first provision is, "any work contemplated or ordered" and chargeable, etc. It does not say, "any work contracted for, or for which an assessment may be made." And it would be straining the language to say that it does not mean the work contemplated by the resolution of intention, and ordered by the order, but such portion thereof as should be let out by a separate contract, and for which a separate assessment should be made. We do not think that the language should be strained to bring about such a result. The evident purpose was to provide a safeguard for the property owner. It is a matter of judicial history that at least once it was attempted to make the property owner personally liable for a deficiency which remained after taking his entire lot for the cost of an improvement. And, while this attempt was defeated, (by a divided court,) it still remained possible to take the whole property. It is just that there should be some limitation in this regard. The theory of local assessments for local improvements requires it. For, while the property owners of the locality are more benefited by the improvement than the other inhabitants of the city, they would not be more benefited if all their property in the locality should be taken. In such case, they would be in exactly the same condition as the other inhabitants of the city so far as benefits are concerned, but in a far worse condition with reference to the burden. Some limit, therefore, is demanded by the theory of such assessments, and by common justice; and the limitation of 50 per cent. of the assessed value seems a fair one. Now, the act expressly provides that its provisions "shall be liberally construed to effect the ends of justice." And we do not think that the language should be strained in order to render a just and salutary provision valueless, by permitting the work to be split up into parts, and allowing the full limit to be taken out of each part. The policy of the act in relation to accepted streets does not (as we were at first inclined to think) make against our conclusion; for it is expressly provided, by section 26, that "the city council may, in its discretion, order that the whole or any part of the cost and expense of any of the work mentioned in section two of this act to be paid out of the treasury of the municipality." And what may be done directly may be done by the indirect method above shown. We think therefore that the question submitted must be resolved in favor of the appellant, and that under the stipulation the judgment must be reversed.

It is proper to add that no question is presented as to whether the provisions referred to cover the case of work called for by different resolutions or orders, made either at the same time or at intervals. Nor is any question before us as to the way the assessment should be made up; that is to say, whether the 50 per cent. for which the property is liable is to be distributed equally among these several assessments, or whether the one which happens to be made first is to take the whole sum, if it amounts to so much, leaving the others to be paid by the city. The stipulation precludes the court from determining these questions; and we neither express nor intimate any opinion concerning them. We merely say that, whatever may be the result in the respects mentioned, our conclusion as to the question submitted would be the same. We advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the amended answer.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the amended answer.

JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT—DAMAGES FOR CONVERSION—SALE—WHEN TITLE PASSES.

1. Civil Code Cal. § 3336, provides, as the measure of damages for the wrongful conversion of personal property, (1) the value of the property; (2) a fair compensation for the time and money expended in pursuit of the property. The complaint alleged the conversion by defendant of certain property of a certain value, and that plaintiff had expended a certain amount for attorney's fee in pursuit of the property. The amount claimed in the ad damnum clause was the sum of these two items, and was above the jurisdictional sum of the court, though either item was below such sum. Held that, even if money paid for attorney's fees was not within the rule of damages, the words "for attorney's fees" could be treated as surplusage and it would leave an allegation of damages which, together with the value of the property, would bring the amount claimed within the jurisdiction of the court.

2. Plaintiff purchased, by sample, 250 sacks of wheat at $1.07 per cental, taking a bill of sale, paying $250, and agreeing to pay the remainder when he should be informed of the exact weight. The vendor, at time of sale, transferred to plaintiff certificates of weight of such of the wheat as was then in a warehouse, and agreed to deliver the remainder at the same warehouse for plaintiff. Immediately after the remainder was delivered at the warehouse, and certificates of weight were issued to the vendor in his own name, and just before such certificates were transferred to plaintiff, the wheat was attached by defendant. Held, in an action for conversion, that title had passed to plaintiff prior to the attachment, within Civil Code Cal. § 1140, providing that "the title to personal property, sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not."

PATERSON, J., dissenting.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county: JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Gell & Morehouse, for appellants. Wm. H. Webb and F. Sherwood, for respondent.

GIBSON, C. Action against defendant Martinez as constable, and the sureties on his official bond, to recover, as damages, the sum of $262.84, the value of 160 sacks of wheat, alleged to have been wrongfully taken and converted by Martinez as constable under a writ of attachment issued in an action prosecuted in a court of a justice of the peace, and, also, the further sum of $100, alleged to have been expended for an attorney's fee in the pursuit of the wheat. Trial was had before the court, without a jury, and resulted in certain findings, among others, that the wheat was taken as alleged, and was of the value of $256.08; and that plaintiff had not properly expended the sum demanded by him for an attorney's fee. Judgment was entered in accordance with the findings. Defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. There is no brief for the respondent on file.

The first error appellants assign is that the court erred in overruling their demurrer to the complaint, in which they attacked the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the action, on the ground that the value of the property sought to be recovered was below the jurisdictional sum of $300, and could not be brought up to, or above, the latter sum by tacking on a demand for an attorney's fee. The complaint plainly discloses that the object of the action is to recover damages for the wrongful conversion of the wheat, which damages are alleged to consist of two elements, namely, the value of the wheat and money expended in pursuit of it. In order to give the superior court jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action of this kind for unliquidated damages, the demand, exclusive of interest, that may be claimed under section 3336 of the Civil Code must amount to, at least, $300. Const. Cal. art. 6, § 5; Code Civil Proc. § 76, subd. 3. It is therefore true, as urged by appellants, that the amount claimed here, to the extent of the value of the wheat alone, would not give the superior court jurisdiction, but to this is added the sum of $100 expended in pursuit of the property, as an additional cause of damages, thereby making the whole sum claimed in the ad damnum clause of the complaint amount to $362.84; and that clause, according to the settled rule in this state, constitutes the test of jurisdiction. Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 653; Bailey v. Sloan, 65 Cal. 387, 4 Pac. Rep. 349; Lord v. Goldberg, 81 Cal. 599, 22 Pac. Rep. 1126. It may be said that the true amount of the demand, exclusive of interest, if any, may sometimes be increased in a complaint for the purpose of bringing the case within the jurisdiction of the superior court. While this may occur, yet the inevitable consequence of not being able to recover the jurisdictional sum, so as to carry costs under section 1022 of the Code of Civil Procedure, will, we apprehend, be sufficient to prevent such a practice from becoming common; and the saving of costs will compensate the defendants in the rare instances in which they may be first brought into the superior instead of the justice's court. Both of the causes of detriment, complained of here, are within the measure of damages applicable to cases of this kind, which is provided for in section 3336 of the Civil Code, as follows: "The detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be: (1) The value of the property at the time of the conversion, with the interest from that time, or, where the action has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict, without interest, at the option of the injured party. (2) A fair compensation for the time and money expended in pursuit of the property." In McDonald v. McConkey, 57 Cal. 325, which was an action like the present one for damages for the wrongful conversion of personal property, it is strongly intimated that money paid out for attorney's fees in pursuit of the property is not within the rule of damages declared in the above section. This is the language there used by the court: "The allegation of damages in each count of the complaint, with the exception of the words 'attorneys' fees,' is in the words of section 3336 of the Civil Code. The words 'attorney's fees' may be rejected as surplusage. The evidence is not before us, and it cannot be assumed that the jury included attorney's fees in their verdict." Whether the intimation in that case is well founded or not, we are not called upon to determine, as the same reasoning, applied therein, will dispose of the point under consideration here. The allegation of the complaint here, in respect to the expenditure of an attorney's fee, is as follows: "That plaintiff has properly and necessarily expended the sum of one hundred ($100) dollars, gold coin, for attorney's fee in pursuit of said property." Now, by treating the words "for attorney's fee" as surplusage, we have a sufficient allegation of the fact that plaintiff necessarily and properly expended $100 in pursuit of the property, and within the proper measure of damages, which, in addition to the amount of the other damages claimed, brings the whole amount demanded within the sum of which the superior court has jurisdiction. A similar course was pursued in Howard v. Valentine, 20 Cal. 282. That was an action first brought in the justice's court, under the forcible entry and detainer act, for the restitution of certain premises, and $500 back-rent for the same. The sum demanded was in excess of that which a justice's court could render judgment for in any action upon contracts, or for torts, except for damages for the unlawful detention of real property. The complaint was demurred to for want of jurisdiction, and overruled. The county court, to which the case was subsequently appealed, sustained the objection to the jurisdiction, and dismissed the action. Upon an appeal from the latter court to this court, it was ruled that the action of the county court was erroneous, because the objection only went to a part of the relief sought, and, although under the act mentioned rents that had accrued prior to the unlawful detention of the property were not recoverable in an action under said act, but only such rents, regardless of the amount, that had accrued during the unlawful detention, the court should either have excluded the objectionable matter and directed an amendment, or disregarded it. We are therefore of the opinion that the same objection raised by the demurrer in the present case was properly overruled.

The appellants' remaining contention is that the property attached had not been delivered to the respondent by the defendant in the attachment suit when the appellant Martinez levied upon it, by virtue of a writ of attachment regularly issued in that suit. The Civil Code provides: "The title to personal property, sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not." Section 1140. The respondent, it appears, on October 4, 1886, purchased of Hartman, the defendant in the attachment suit, according to samples, 250 sacks of wheat at the rate of $1.07 per cental, taking therefor a bill of sale, and paid $250 as part payment, and agreed to pay the remainder when Hartman should notify him of the exact weight of the wheat. A portion of the wheat, at the time of the sale, was in a warehouse, for which certificates of weight had been issued to Hartman, who, at the time of the sale, transferred them to the respondent, and, at the same time, agreed to deliver the remainder of the wheat at the same warehouse for the respondent. On the 9th of the same month, he delivered the remainder of the wheat at the warehouse, and had it weighed and certificates of such weight issued to him in the name of Hartman & Co. Just after the last portion of this lot of wheat had been put in the warehouse, the appellant Martinez appeared and asked the warehouseman in whose name it was stored, and was informed that it was in the name of Hartman & Co. He thereupon levied an attachment upon 160 sacks of the wheat, and subsequently sold them. Before making the levy, he was told by the teamster who hauled the wheat to the warehouse that it belonged to the respondent here. Hartman went, immediately after the levy was made, to the respondent and transferred the certificates of weight to him in accordance with the terms of the previous sale. Hartman testified that, in addition to the $250 received at the time of the sale, he got, as part payment of the wheat, 34 tons of hay and some lumber. There does not seem to be any material conflict in the testimony from which the foregoing facts are deduced. It is not shown, and neither can it be inferred from the evidence, that the respondent made any effort to defraud any of Hartman's creditors, or had any knowledge of his indebtedness to others, at the time of the sale. We think it evident, from the foregoing state of facts, that the parties agreed upon and intended a present transfer of the wheat at the time of the sale, and that the same, which consisted of 250 sacks, was at the same time identified. The court below was therefore justified in finding that the title to the wheat had passed to the respondent, prior to the attachment levy. The judgment and order appealed from should therefore be affirmed.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; FOOTE, C.

SIEBE et al. v. JOSHUA HENDY MACHINE WORKS. (No. 12,905.)

APPEAL—RECORD—CORPORATIONS—AUTHORITY OF PRESIDENT—COMMERCIAL PAPER—INNOCENT PURCHASER.

1. Upon appeal there was no bill of exceptions, or settled and certified statement of evidence, but appellant filed in the trial court a document stating the points he would rely on in the appeal, but containing no statement of evidence. The transcript contained a copy thereof, and copies of the appellant's articles of incorporation, with a stipulation that the copies were correct and that the articles and by-laws were introduced in evidence. It contained no statement that no other evidence was introduced, that the record prescribed by law was waived, or that the evidence might be reviewed upon the papers mentioned. Held, that the evidence could not be reviewed upon such record.

2. The by-laws of a corporation engaged in "buying and selling machinery of various kinds, and kindred articles," authorized its president to "buy and sell the articles in which the corporation deals without first obtaining the sanction or consulting the board of directors." Held, that he had authority to purchase a boiler on credit and give the corporation's note therefor.

3. That creditors of the seller obtained final possession of the boiler, thus causing a failure of consideration, was no defense to an action on the note by an innocent holder for value before maturity.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge. C. E. K. Royce, for appellants. Naphtaly, Friedenrich & Ackerman, for respondent.

HAYNE, C. This was an action upon a promissory note. The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals. We do not think that upon the record before us the appellate court can consider the question whether the evidence supports the findings of fact. The record provided by statute for bringing up the evidence is a bill of exceptions or statement, to be served upon the successful party, and settled and certified by the judge. There is no bill of exceptions or statement in the transcript. It is plain, therefore, that, unless there is some equivalent or substitute for the statutory record, the evidence is not before us. What is relied on as such equivalent consists of the following proceedings: After the appeal was taken, appellant filed in the trial court a notice specifying certain points that it would rely on upon the appeal. This document did not contain any of the evidence given at the trial. It does not appear to have been even served upon the respondent, though we suppose that it was. Nothing further seems to have been done in the trial court. The transcript filed in the appellate court contains a copy of this notice, copies of the appellant's articles of incorporation and by-laws, and a stipulation, which states in substance that the copies mentioned are correct copies, and that the articles of incorporation and by-laws were introduced in evidence at the trial. This is all the stipulation states in relation to the matter in question. It does not state that no other evidence was introduced at the trial. Nor does it purport to waive the record prescribed by law, or to provide that the evidence may be reviewed upon the papers mentioned. The mere statement that certain copies are "correct," is of no more force than the usual certificate of the clerk in authentication of the transcript. Wetherbee v. Carroll, 33 Cal. 549. And the mere admission that certain documents were introduced in evidence at the trial does not show that there was no other evidence. For all that the court can know to the contrary, other by-laws, subsequently adopted, may have been introduced in evidence. While a stipulation may be so framed as to dispense with the record provided by law, there ought to be something which would enable the court to say with some reasonable degree of certainty that such was the intention. The respondent objects that there is no record upon which the evidence can be reviewed, and we think that the objection must be sustained. This leaves the appeal to be heard upon the findings. Two questions arise upon the findings.

1. The defendant was a corporation engaged "in the business of manufacturing, buying, and selling machinery of various kinds, and kindred articles." The note was given in payment of the price of a boiler purchased by the president for the corporation. There was no resolution of the board of directors authorizing the purchase; and it is contended that in the absence of such a resolution the president and secretary had no authority to execute the note. But we think otherwise. The buying of machinery was part of the ordinary business of the corporation. And the by-laws (as established by the findings) authorized the president to "buy and sell the articles in which the corporation deals without first obtaining the sanction or consulting the board of directors." So far, therefore, as the buying of machinery was concerned, the president (in the absence of any interposition by the board) had the same authority as the board had. The matter was left to him. This being the case, the authority to buy included authority to buy on credit, and to do such a usual thing as to give the note of the corporation as evidence of its obligation to pay. See Castle v. Foundry Co., 72 Me. 170, 171; Tappan v. Bailey, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 536, 537. It is probable that this rule would not apply to an agent for a particular transaction, or even to certain kinds of general agents. We express no opinion as to that; but we think that it applies to such an agent as the president of a corporation, empowered to transact its ordinary business without consulting the board.

2. It is contended that there was a failure of consideration for the note. This is based upon the fact that the creditors of the vendor, after litigation, succeeded in obtaining the boiler. But the findings show that the plaintiff was an innocent purchaser of the note for value before maturity. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

In re BARTER'S ESTATE. (No. 13,588.)

RIGHTS OF HEIRS—CHILDREN OMITTED FROM WILL.

Civil Code Cal. § 1807, provides that when a testator omits to provide "for any of his children, or for the issue of any deceased child, unless it appears that such omission was intentional, such child, or the issue of such child, must have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate." Held that, where at the time of the making and publishing of testator's will, by which he disinherited his daughter and gave all his property to another child, she was still living, her children did not take as heirs, though she died before testator, and her children were not mentioned in the will.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. HUNTER, Judge.

J. D. H. Chamberlin, for appellants. J. H. G. Weaver, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an appeal from a decree of distribution under the will of John Barter, deceased. The findings are as follows: "(1) That, on the 4th day of June, 1887, the said deceased, John Barter, made, published, and declared his last will and testament in manner following: 'In the name of God, amen. I, John Barter, of the county of Humboldt, state of California, of the age of seventy-two years, and being of sound and disposing mind and memory, and not acting under duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence of any person whatever, do make, publish, and declare this my last will and testament in manner following, that is to say: First. I give, devise, and bequeath to my son, Howard Barter, a resident of Humboldt county, state of California, all my property, real, personal, and mixed, whether in possession or expectancy, whereof I shall die possessed, or to which I may be entitled. I have other children,—a daughter and a son,—but it is not my wish or desire to leave anything to them or either of them. Lastly. I nominate and appoint O. H. Spring the executor of this my last will and testament, and hereby revoke all former wills by me made. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this fourth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven. JOHN BARTER. [Seal.]'—Which said will was thereafter duly admitted to probate by this court. That said executor named in said will duly qualified and entered upon his duties as such executor, and thereafter such proceedings were had in the settlement of said estate. That on the 19th day of July, 1889, the said executor filed in this court his final account and petition for the distribution of said estate to Howard Barter, named in said will as sole residuary legatee. (2) At the execution of said will the said John Barter, deceased, had three living adult children, his heirs at law, to wit, John T. Barter, Dora C. Seldell, (wife of L. A. Seldell, and mother of said contestants,) and Howard Barter. (3) That the contestants, E. H. Seldell and L. A. Seldell, Jr., are the minor children of the said Dora C. Seldell. (4) That Dora C. Seldell died intestate on the 8th day of May, 1888, leaving, her surviving, her two said children, the said contestants. (5) That the said John Barter, deceased, died on the 1st day of January, 1889, not having revoked the will set forth in finding number one. (6) That L. A. Seldell was by this court duly appointed general guardian of the said contestants prior to August 8th, 1889, and duly qualified as such general guardian. Conclusions of law: That Howard Barter, named in said will as sole residuary legatee, is entitled to a decree distributing to him the whole of the residue of said estate to the exclusion of said contestants. Let a decree be entered accordingly." The appellants and contestants claim that as the grandchildren of the testator they are two of his heirs at law, and that, not being mentioned or provided for in his will, and nothing being contained in the will which shows such omission to have been intentional, as to them his estate is as if their grandfather had died intestate. Section 1307 of the Civil Code, on which they rely, reads: "When any testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children, or for the issue of any deceased child, unless it appears that such omission was intentional, such child, or the issue of such child, must have the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate, and succeeds thereto as provided in the preceding section." At the time this will was made and published, and provision made for his son Howard Barter, the mother of these contestants was alive, and they were not "the issue of any deceased child." Their mother, then living, was intentionally omitted from the will and unprovided for, and was not therefore protected by the statute. The object of that section is not to protect any grandchildren except those who, as presumptive heirs at law, would be entitled, had no will been made, to inherit at the time the will is published and made. That is the time when the children of the testator or the children of a deceased child are supposed, if not mentioned in the will, to have been omitted by oversight, because, at such time, their mother being dead, they would be presumptive heirs at law of their grandfather. But if, at the time the will was published, the mother had been living, she would have been an heir at law at her father's death, unless intentionally omitted from the will. The statute intended to put a child, or the children of a deceased child, on the same footing at the time when the will is made and published, and when the intentions of the testator are to control in the construction of his will. When the will in question was made the testator had no need to remember or mention the children of a living child, in order to prevent them from inheriting, at his death, as his heirs at law. Having intentionally omitted their mother, alive at the making and publishing of the will, the children had no rights under the section quoted, and obtained none when she died before the testator. It follows then that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and we so advise.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; GIBSON, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

STANLEY et al. v. MCELDRATH. (No. 12, 187.)

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS—RIGHTS OF INDORSER—JUDICIAL NOTICE—COUNTER-CLAIM.

1. Where one pays a note, on which he is indorser, by executing his own notes to the holder, who accepts them as payment, and either cancels or delivers up the former note so as to extinguish the maker's liability to him, this is such a payment of the note as will entitle the indorser to maintain an action against the maker for the amount so paid.

2. The requirement of notice of dishonor by protest or otherwise to the indorser of a negotiable note is for the indorser's own benefit and may be waived by him without prejudice to his right of recovery against the maker, in case he pays the note after such waiver.

8. Where a counter-claim is pleaded, the court cannot dispense with formal proof, and take judicial notice that the affirmative matters set out in the counter-claim had been formerly adjudicated by the same court in a different action.

In bank. On rehearing. For former report, see 22 Pac. Rep. 673.

William H. Fifield, (Wilson & Wilson, of counsel,) for appellant. Henry N. Clement, for respondents.

PATERSON, J. This action was brought to recover from defendant the sum of $6,136.50, with interest thereon from March 28, 1883. It is alleged in the amended complaint that C. M. Hitchcock, plaintiff's testator, indorsed a promissory note, made by defendant, payable to said Hitchcock, for the sum of $4,500, solely for the accommodation of defendant; that defendant assigned the note to the London & San Francisco Bank, limited, and received therefor the sum of $4,500; that defendant paid on account of the interest due thereon the sum of $231.25, but never paid any portion of the principal; that the note was duly protested, and notice thereof given to the indorser; that Hitchcock paid the sums of $6,132.50, the amount due on the note, and $4, costs of protest, to the bank on March 28, 1883; and that defendant has never reimbursed him for any part thereof. The defendant denied that the note was indorsed for his accommodation in any greater sum than $3,631.28, the balance of said note being for money he had paid out for the use and benefit of said Hitchcock at his special instance and request; denied that the $4,500 note was protested, or notice of dishonor given; and denied that plaintiff had ever paid the same or any part thereof. By way of counter-claim, defendant alleged that plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of $4,000 for services as attorney and counselor, performed at his special instance and request.

The court found that the note was made and assigned as alleged; that $231.25 only had been paid on account of interest, and nothing on account of the principal; and that the offset to the note, and the counter-claim set up by defendant, had both been adjudicated against defendant in a former action. The court further found certain facts—which will be noted further along—showing demand, refusal to pay, protest, and notice thereof to Hitchcock, and payment by him to the bank. The court found that Hitchcock paid the defendant's note by giving his own note for the sum due thereon, including cost of protest, and that it was accepted and received by the bank, and an entry made in its books to the effect that the note had been paid. At the time of the trial, the note thus given by Hitchcock had not been paid; and appellant claims that, there having been no payment in money, an action for money paid out cannot be maintained. The payment of money is not necessary to the extinguishment of an obligation. A debt may be paid by the giving of a note, if it be offered and accepted as payment. Weston v. Wiley, 78 Ind. 54; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. p. 232. The evidence shows very clearly that the Hitchcock note was offered by him and received by the bank upon the express understanding that it was a payment in full of the McElrath note.

Appellant claims that, in paying the $4,500 note, Hitchcock was a mere volunteer, not having been duly "fixed" as an indorser by proper demand, protest, and notice of dishonor. As stated by him, "the question for the court to determine is precisely the same as if the same question arose upon an attempt by the bank to hold Hitchcock upon his indorsement." An indorser may be made liable either by showing demand, non-payment, and notice of dishonor, or by showing that, while the amount due on the note was an existing debt, enforceable against the maker, the indorser by his acts waived any want of or defect in demand, protest, and notice, and promised to pay the note. The record shows the proper demand and protest for non-payment, and we think the notice sufficient to "fix" Hitchcock as an indorser. The notice of protest directed to Hitchcock was sent by the notary in due time, and reached Mrs. Hitchcock at the residence of the family the next day. The notice was brought into court by the plaintiff, and identified by the notary as the notice sent by him on the day demand was made. The fact that Mr. Coyt and the mail clerk took the letter from the mail bag in violation of a regulation of the postal department, if such be the fact, is immaterial. It is sufficient that the notice reached its destination and served its purpose. Mrs. Hitchcock received it on Saturday evening, and on the following Monday visited the defendant, who promised then, and on several occasions afterwards, to pay the note. The officers of the bank acted with due diligence and care. They were told by Mr. Coyt that Mrs. Hitchcock actually attended to the doctor's business, and had his power of attorney. The notice was actually delivered to "a person of discretion [Mrs. H.] at the place of residence or business of such party [Hitchcock] apparently acting for him." This was sufficient. Section 3144, Civil Code; Kellogg v. Factory, 57 Cal. 327; McFarland v. Pico, 8 Cal. 626; Thompson v. Williams, 14 Cal. 160; Pierce v. Schaden, 55 Cal. 406; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. §§ 872, 1003. But as there was no post-office communication between San Francisco and Hitchcock's place of residence, and as Hitchcock—with knowledge of the fact—by his acts and his promise to pay waived any defect in the notice, his liability became fixed, and the bank could have recovered the amount of the note in an action against him. Section 3155, Civil Code; Keyes v. Fenstermaker, 24 Cal. 333; Curtis v. Sprague, 51 Cal. 239. Appellant admits that an indorser may waive his own rights so as to make himself liable to the holder, but claims that, if he be once discharged from liability by reason of the failure of the holder to give proper notice of dishonor, he cannot thereafter by any admission or promise prejudice the rights of the maker; and, if he pay the note, he does so as a stranger, and must be regarded as a volunteer. This contention is based upon an erroneous theory of the use and purpose of notice of non-payment of a negotiable instrument. An indorser's undertaking is not an absolute one. It is conditional; and notice of dishonor is provided for his benefit. It is intended to protect him from loss which may occur by reason of delay in making demand of payment of the maker, or which he may sustain by having no notice of the fact that his principal has failed or refused to pay. When he waives this right to notice, he does not create a new liability which requires a new consideration like the waiver of absolute and strict conditions precedent in contracts as they are construed at common law. He has the right to either affirm or disaffirm his liability, and, with the exercise of the right thus provided for his benefit and left to his discretion, no one can complain. Burgh v. Legge, 5 Mees. & W. 418; 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1147. The finding of the court that the defendant's claim of offset and counter-claim had been adjudicated in a former action prior to the trial of this action is not supported by the evidence. The court could not dispense with formal proof of its judgment in another action, and take judicial notice of the fact that the affirmative matters set out in defendant's counter-claim and offset had been therein adjudicated. As no evidence was offered, however, by defendant, in support of his claim of offset or counter-claim, the failure of the court to find on the merits of the issue thus raised was without prejudice to appellant, and the finding that was made was immaterial. The court allowed 10 per cent. interest on $4,500 of the $6,136.50,—amount of the note given by Hitchcock to the bank,—from March 28, 1883,—date of said note,—and interest on the residue at the rate of 7 per cent. This was error. Plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount paid on the Hitchcock note, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. only. Waldrip v. Black, 74 Cal. 409, 16 Pac. Rep. 226. The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment against defendant for the amount of $6,136.50, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum, from March 28, 1883, and costs of suit, including the costs of this appeal.

QUIETING TITLE — INSUFFICIENCY OF FINDINGS—DEEDS—FAROL EVIDENCE.

1. In an action to quiet title by the grantee of a deed against a judgment creditor of the grantor, who had purchased the land at execution sale, a finding that the deed, made by a mother while ill, and in the expectation of early death, to her daughter, was made with the intention, on the grantor's part, that it should not take effect except in case of her death, and, in such case, that it should operate in lieu of a will, and take effect after her death, will not support a defense that it was made to defraud creditors, although coupled with a finding that, after the grantor's recovery, it was placed on record for the purpose of defrauding creditors.

2. A finding that the grantor intended that the deed should take effect only in case of her death, and that the grantee knew of such intention, was insufficient to support an allegation that the grantee agreed, in case of the grantor's recovery, to hold the title in trust, and to reconvey upon demand.

3. When a deed has been duly executed and delivered to the grantee, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that it was made in anticipation of death, and with an agreement that, in case of recovery, the grantee should reconvey.

On rehearing. For former report, see 24 Pac. Rep. 301.

WORKS, J. This is an action to quiet title. The plaintiff claims title under a deed from her mother, Laura A. Mowry, and the defendant claims under a judgment and execution sale of the property against the same party, the judgment having been recovered against the said Laura A. Mowry subsequent to her conveyance to the plaintiff. The judgment of the court below was in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying her a new trial. The defendant pleaded two defenses to the action. The first was that the deed to the plaintiff from her mother was made when the latter was insolvent, and was made to defraud creditors, and that the defendant was then a creditor who subsequently recovered judgment against the grantor, and levied upon and sold the property in controversy, under execution, himself became the purchaser, and received a sheriff's deed therefor. The second set up the recovery of the judgment, the levy of execution, sale of the property, the purchase, receipt of a sheriff's deed by him, and alleges further: "That, on said 11th day of May, 1881, said Laura A. Mowry was the owner of the real estate described in said second count of said complaint; that the legal title of said real estate was, until the conveyance to plaintiff, as hereinafter alleged, in one Charles Mayne, who held said title in trust for, and as the agent of, said Laura A. Mowry, and had no other interest therein; that on — day of —, 1882, and while said undertaking, made and executed by said Laura A. Mowry, was in full force and effect, she, the said Laura A. Mowry, was dangerously ill, and in apprehension of immediate death, and in lieu of a last will and testament, and to avoid an administration of her estate in the event of her death, she, the said Laura A. Mowry, made and executed, and caused said Charles Mayne, the trustee, as aforesaid, to make and execute with her a deed to said plaintiff of, in, and to said real estate; that said plaintiff was and is the daughter of said Laura A. Mowry; and said deed was made to her, without any valuable consideration whatever, but the same was made, and caused to be made, by said Laura A. Mowry, in view of immediate death; and it was understood and agreed, by and between the plaintiff and said Laura A. Mowry, that said deed should only have effect in the event of her death, and that, in the event of her recovery from said illness, the said plaintiff would hold and retain the legal title thereto in trust for her, and would convey the same to her upon demand; that said Laura A. Mowry did recover from her said illness, and the plaintiff held and retained the legal title of said real estate in trust for her until the levy thereon, and sale thereof, under an execution issued upon said judgment against said Laura A. Mowry, as hereinafter alleged."

It is contended by the appellant that the findings of the court do not sustain the issues in behalf of the defendant, or support the judgment rendered. The findings are clearly insufficient to support the defense that the deed was made to defraud creditors. It is found that the intention of the grantor was that the deed should not take effect at all except in case of her death, and that in such case it should operate in lieu of a will, and take effect after her death. This not only does not amount to a finding that the deed was made with the intent to defraud creditors, but is wholly inconsistent with such a defense. It is true that the court finds, upon the recovery of Mrs. Mowry, the deed was placed on record with the intent to defraud creditors, but such a finding did not meet the issue presented by the answer.

The finding on the other issue is no less unfortunate. It will be seen that the allegation of the answer is that the deed was made under an agreement between the plaintiff and her mother that the same should be effective in case of her death, and that if she should recover the plaintiff was to hold the property in trust for her, and reconvey the same upon such recovery. The court did not find any such agreement, but found as follows: "That, on said 2d day of February, 1882, said Laura A. Mowry was dangerously ill, and in apprehension of immediate death, and desired to make a disposition of her estate, to take effect after her death, and in lieu of her last will and testament, and to avoid administration of her estate in the event of her death, she signed and acknowledged, and caused Charles Mayne, her trustee, to sign and acknowledge with her, a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, to plaintiff, of, in, and to said real estate; that when said deeds were signed, acknowledged, and delivered by said Laura A. Mowry, she intended that they should only be operative in the event of her death from said illness, and that in the event of her recovery from said illness said deed should be inoperative, and of no effect, and that plaintiff should not claim any right or property by or under it; that said plaintiff was present when said deed was signed, acknowledged, and delivered by said Laura A. Mowry; the plaintiff knew that said Laura A. Mowry was then dangerously ill, and in apprehension of immediate death, and that she desired to make a disposition of all her estate, to take effect after her death, and that said deed was executed in lieu of her last will and testament, and to avoid an administration of her estate in the event of her death, and for no other purpose; and plaintiff further knew that said Laura A. Mowry, when she delivered said deeds to plaintiff, intended that they should be operative only in the event of her death from said illness, and that, in the event of her recovery therefrom, they should be inoperative, and of no effect." This finding was insufficient for two reasons: First. It was not responsive to the issue presented by the answer. Instead of finding an agreement to hold in trust and reconvey, as alleged, it finds an intention on the part of the grantor that the deed should not take effect, except in case of her death, and that the plaintiff knew of such intention. The difference between the allegation and the finding is too apparent to need comment. We do not wish to be understood as intimating that if this finding had conformed to the allegation of the answer it would have warranted the conclusion reached by the court below. The second objection to this finding is that if it should be construed as sufficient to uphold the issue made by the answer it would not support the judgment. Here was an absolute deed to the property delivered to the grantee. Its legal effect was to vest in the plaintiff the title to the property free from any conditions. The effect of the finding, if upheld, is to vary the terms of the deed, and render it one upon condition, and defeat its operation by parol proof of an intention on the part of the grantor that it should have an effect different from that apparent on its face. This cannot be done. Mr. Devlin, in his work on Deeds, says: "Whether a deed passes the title or not must be determined by its legal effect. If it has been executed and delivered, its effect is determined by its language. When so executed and delivered, its legal effect, as to the passing of the title, is not altered by the fact that one object of the transaction was to save the expense and trouble of administration upon the grantor's estate after his death; and, where a grantor executed a deed for this purpose to his wife, the fact that she placed the deed, after delivery, where her husband equally with herself could have access to it does not change its legal effect as a conveyance." Devl. Deeds, § 284. And, again: "A deed cannot be delivered to the grantee as an escrow. If it be delivered to him, it becomes an operative deed, freed from any condition not expressed in the deed itself, and it will vest the title in him, though this may be contrary to the intention of the parties. One of the grounds upon which the rule is based is that parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the deed was to take effect upon condition. 'A deed,' says HARRIS, J., 'can only be delivered as an escrow to a third person. If it be intended that it shall not take effect until some subsequent condition shall be performed, or some subsequent event shall happen, such condition must be inserted in the deed itself, or else it must not be delivered to the grantee. Whether a deed has been delivered or not is a question of fact, upon which, from the very nature of the case, parol evidence is admissible. But whether a deed, when delivered, shall take effect absolutely, or only upon the performance of some condition not expressed therein, cannot be determined by parol evidence. To allow a deed absolute upon its face to be avoided by such evidence would be a dangerous violation of a cardinal rule of evidence. The deed in this case being absolute upon its face, and having been delivered to the grantee himself, took effect at once. It could not have been delivered to take effect upon the happening of a future contingency, for this would be inconsistent with the terms of the instrument itself. Without regard, therefore, to any understanding which may have existed between the parties at the time the deed was delivered, it must be held as an absolute conveyance, operative from that time." Id. § 314. This is a rule of law well understood, and is amply supported by decided cases, many of which will be found in the section of the work on Deeds above cited. In this view of the case, we need not decide each point made or attempted to be made in the unnecessarily long and tedious brief of counsel for appellant. A great deal of space is taken up in an attempt to show that the findings are not sustained by the evidence, but, coming to the conclusion we have, this question becomes immaterial. Conceding that the findings were sustained by the evidence, as we have said, no defense was made out. It is further contended that the court failed to find on certain issues. This is no doubt true, but the appellant should not complain of this, as the failure to find some of the facts alleged in the first defense, mentioned above, leaves the judgment without sufficient support. The judgment of the respondent was recovered on an undertaking on appeal to this court, and was taken on motion without notice to Mrs. Mowry. It is contended that such a judgment, taken without notice, was void, and that, therefore, respondent's defense was without any foundation. But this point was decided against appellant in Meredith v. Association of Baltimore, 60 Cal. 617, and, however doubtful we may be as to the correctness of that decision, it has been acted upon as a correct exposition of the law, no doubt, in this very case, and we think it should be adhered to. There are other technical questions raised and discussed, but they do not deserve attention. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; FOX, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

I concur in the judgment: PATERSON, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment of reversal, because, after a more exhaustive examination of the evidence, I think that it does not support the findings as to the circumstances under which the deeds to plaintiff from the mother were made. I do not think, however, that the findings (that prolific source of artificial and needless troubles) are themselves insufficient to support the judgment. They find the real facts as alleged in the answer; and, if there is any difference between the answer and the findings, it is a difference only as to legal effects. But I dissent from that part of the prevailing opinion which is to the point (as I understand it) that when one member of a family, being sick and apprehending immediate death, makes a conveyance of his real property to another member of the family, with the intention, and upon the understanding of both, that it is not to be operative in the event of the recovery of the grantor, if the latter passes the deed over into the hands of the grantee, then the latter has the title irrevocably; and, although the grantor recover his health immediately, he has, and can assert, no further interest, legal or equitable, in the land described in the conveyance, upon the ground that the terms of a written instrument cannot be varied by parole evidence. I do not think that what Mr. Devlin says in his chapter on "Escrows" has any applicability to the question here involved. As to the point under discussion, I think, in the first place, that the correct legal view is that in contemplation of law there was no delivery at all; and, in the second place, if it be assumed that there was a delivery, then, upon the recovery of the sick grantor, the grantee holds the legal title in trust for the grantor, who has the equitable estate. I do not see how such case can, in principle, be distinguished from Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. Rep. 689. I agree with the opinion on the point that a judgment may be taken against a surety on an appeal-bond (under our Code) without notice. My views on that matter were expressed in my opinion on the former hearing.

BANK OF CALIFORNIA v. BOYD. (No. 12,-998.)

ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT—SECURITY FOR DEBT.

1. Plaintiff's affidavit for attachment alleged that defendant was indebted to him in a named sum on a certain promissory note of specified amount, date, and maturity, made to the order of K., and indorsed by defendants. Held, that the affidavit sufficiently alleges plaintiff's ownership of the note.

2. Defendant's motion to dissolve the attachment alleged that the debt was K.'s, and that he had died leaving a will, by which he made his wife executrix, and conferred on her full authority, without any order of court, to pay his just debts, for which purpose he bequeathed her a large estate. Held, that this did not give plaintiff a lien securing his debt, within the meaning of the California attachment law.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

O. P. Evans and James T. Boyd, in pro. per. for appellant. P. L. Benjamin (Pillsbury & Blanding, of counsel,) for respondent.

THORNTON, J. This appeal is prosecuted by defendant from an order refusing to dissolve a writ of attachment. It is urged that the affidavit on which the writ of attachment was issued was insufficient, and therefore the court below erred in its ruling. The insufficiency claimed is that the affidavit does not show that the promissory note, on which the indebtedness set forth has accrued, and which furnished the subject-matter for the issuance of the writ, was owned by the plaintiff.

We cannot concur in this contention. It does appear with sufficient certainty, in our judgment, by the statements of the affidavit, that the plaintiff owned the note. It is stated in the first portion of the affidavit that the defendants (naming them) are indebted to the plaintiff in a sum indicated, over and above all legal set-offs and counter-claims, upon an express contract, for the direct payment of money, viz., on a certain promissory note, which is described as being for $20,000, dated March 14, 1887, payable May 13, 1887, made by the California Land & Timber Company to the order of Charles Kohler, and indorsed by defendants. Though, as argued on behalf of defendants, it is not stated that the note was indorsed by Charles Kohler to the defendants, or any one else, still, in our judgment, the manifest intentment of the language employed in the affidavit is that the plaintiff was the owner of the note. It is distinctly stated, as mentioned above, in the initial portion of the paper, that the defendants are indebted to plaintiff on a promissory note. This could not be the case if it did not own the note. Nothing in the affidavit is inconsistent with the ownership of the note by the plaintiff, and all its statements are consistent with and tend to show such ownership. In our opinion, the same particularity of statement showing title to the note in the plaintiff is not required in the affidavit for the issuance of the writ of attachment as in the complaint. It is sufficient if, by manifest intentment, the affidavit shows that the note is the property of the plaintiff. It is not necessary that it should be shown by direct averment. The indebtedness to plaintiff is the principal element required in the affidavit, and when that appears by direct statement, and there is nothing in the affidavit inconsistent with such direct statement of indebtedness, the affidavit as to such indebtedness should, in our judgment, be held sufficient. Consistent with the views above expressed are Wheeler v. Farmer, 38 Cal. 215; Weaver v. Hayward, 41 Cal. 117; and Dunn v. Mackey, 80 Cal. 104, 107, 22 Pac. Rep. 64. It is further urged that Charles Kohler was the payee of the note; that it was his debt; that Kohler died in April, 1887, nearly a year before this suit was brought, leaving a will, which was admitted to probate on the 6th day of May, 1887; that by this will he bequeathed a large estate to his wife, who was named executrix thereof, and conferring upon her authority, without any order of court, to settle and pay his just debts; that by the above provisions of his will Kohler created a trust for the payment of his debts, devoting his entire estate to that purpose, and constituting his widow and executrix, trustee of this trust; that thus the payment of the note was secured, within the meaning of the attachment law, and therefore the writ of attachment was improperly issued, and the court erred in refusing to dissolve it. It is assumed by defendant in this contention that Kohler was the debtor of the plaintiff when he died; but this does not so clearly appear as to authorize this court in so holding. Non constat but that Kohler indorsed the note to the defendants without recourse and thus that he never became responsible to the plaintiff. We would not be justified in reversing the ruling of the court below by holding, on the evidence before us, that Kohler, when he died, was bound on this note to the plaintiff. To authorize such a conclusion as this case is here presented, the evidence of the indebtedness of Kohler to the plaintiff must be of a character more distinct and clear than any that appears in the record. But, conceding that Kohler was the debtor to plaintiff on the note, when he died, we are of opinion that no such lien securing the debt resulted on his death, upon the facts above stated, as to bar plaintiff of its right to an attachment. The lien, if there was any, was not one under the control of plaintiff. The debt had to be presented under the statute to the executrix and the proper superior judge for allowance, and when allowed filed in court, and paid in due course of administration as other debts of the estate. The plaintiff would have been thus compelled to await the course of administration, whether he desired to do so or not. In fine, though it may be conceded that, if Kohler had died indebted on the note mentioned to the plaintiff, the plaintiff would have had the security of a trust fund devoted to the payment of its debt, still, in our judgment, it had no lien on any real or personal property securing its debt, within the meaning of the attachment law. We find no error in the record, and, as the order must therefore be affirmed, the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

CONCURRENT IMPRISONMENT—SEPARATE CONVICTIONS.

A prisoner convicted in the superior court of libel was sentenced to six months' imprisonment. After four days' confinement he was released on bail, pending an appeal. Pending the appeal he was convicted in the police court of conspiracy, and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. After serving one day, he was released on bail, pending an appeal therefrom. The first sentence was affirmed, and on November 22, 1889, he was confined for six months, less the four days already served. March 8, 1890, the second sentence was affirmed, and a bench-warrant placed in the sheriff's hands for the prisoner, who was still in his custody. Held, that the second, and longer, term, did not commence to run on November 22, 1889, but on March 8, 1890, and the prisoner can be held until one year from that date, less the one day served before the appeal.

Pen. Code Cal. §§ 669, 670, provides as follows: "Sec. 669. When any person is convicted of two or more crimes before sentence has been pronounced upon him for either, the imprisonment to which he is sentenced upon the second or other subsequent conviction must commence at the termination of the first term of imprisonment to which he shall be adjudged, or at the termination of the second or other subsequent term of imprisonment, as the case may be. Sec. 670. The term of imprisonment fixed by the judgment in a criminal action commences to run only upon the actual delivery of the defendant at the place of imprisonment; and if thereafter, during such term, the defendant, by any legal means, is temporarily released from such imprisonment, and subsequently returned thereto, the time during which he was at large must not be computed as part of such term."

Fox, J. June 3, 1889, the prisoner was convicted in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco of libel, and sentenced to imprisonment for the term of six months. Under this judgment he was confined in the county jail for four days, when he was admitted to bail, pending an appeal to the supreme court. Pending this appeal, and on August 22, 1889, he was convicted in the police court of conspiracy, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the county jail for one year, and to pay a fine of $500, with the further order that in default of payment of the fine he be further imprisoned in said jail at the rate of one day for each $1 of such fine. On this judgment he was imprisoned for one day, when he was admitted to bail pending an appeal therefrom to the superior court. Afterwards the judgment in the first-mentioned case was affirmed in the supreme court, and on the 22d day of November, 1889, a bench-warrant was issued, upon which he was placed in jail on the judgment so affirmed, the term for which was six months, less four days already served. On the 8th day of March, 1890, the judgment of the police court was affirmed in the superior court, and a bench-warrant or commitment issued thereon, and placed in the hands of the sheriff, the prisoner being already in his custody on the former judgment. It being settled that he cannot be held in custody for the collection of the fine,—imprisonment and fine having both been imposed,—it is now claimed that the moment he was arrested and imprisoned under the bench-warrant of November 22, 1889, his sureties on the undertaking, given on the appeal from the police-court judgment, were relieved from liability, and that, as a consequence, the 364 days of the unexpired term of that judgment then commenced to run, notwithstanding the fact that the judgment itself was not affirmed until March 8, 1890; and that from that date, November 22, 1889, the unexpired term of imprisonment under both judgments commenced and ran together; and that, the longest of these terms having now expired, the prisoner is now entitled to his discharge. Sections 669 and 670 of the Penal Code are relied upon, and numerous authorities are cited in support of the proposition that the sureties upon the second appeal were discharged the moment the prisoner was rearrested on the first judgment. Even if that be true, it does not follow that his term of imprisonment for the unexpired portion of the judgment in the case wherein they were sureties then commenced to run. Nor is there anything in the sections of the Penal Code cited which makes such term commence before the appeal in the case was decided. In my judgment, the term of imprisonment under the unexpired term of the police-court judgment did not commence until the 8th day of March, 1890. I think it did commence on that day, and that, for so much of the term of the first judgment of six months as had not then expired, the two terms ran together, and that the prisoner will be entitled to his discharge at the end of one year, less one day, from the 8th day of March, 1890, and not before. Let the writ be discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

VACATION OF FINAL ORDER—APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEE.

1. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 473, provides that for certain causes an order may be vacated within six months. Held, that a final order not void on its face cannot be vacated on motion after the expiration of such period.

2. Where a testator appoints his wife trustee to manage the estate, and in the event of her death before his grandchildren, who are to succeed her in the trust, come of age, then the trust to devolve upon his son, and the wife voluntarily renounces the trust, and procures an order substituting the son as trustee, such order is final as to the right of the widow and son to manage the property, and is not void because said infant grandchildren, who were not beneficiaries under the will, are not notified.

Baker & Grant and Grove L. Johnson, for appellant. E. R. Bush and C. W. Thomas, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari to test the jurisdiction of the respondent, the superior court of Yolo county, to make an order vacating a former order of the same court in a probate proceeding. This same order was appealed from, and it was held that the order was not appealable. In re Moore's Estate, 24 Pac. Rep. 816. Most of the facts will be found stated in the opinion above referred to. The order there appealed from, and here attacked, on the ground that the superior court had no jurisdiction to make it, was made and entered more than six months after the former order, vacated by it, was made. It is contended that the court below had no power or jurisdiction to vacate its former order after six months, and that the order complained of is void. On the other hand, the respondent contends that the first order was void, because it appears from the record that the two minors, who were named as trustees upon the death of the widow, were not notified. But these minors were not beneficiaries under the will, or in any way interested in the question as to who should manage the water-ditch during the life of the widow. During that time, she and those persons who were beneficially interested in the property and its management were alone affected by the order made, and in the question as to who should act as such manager. It is apparent that the widow alone is now complaining and objecting to the enforcement of an order voluntarily consented to and stipulated for by her. We think for these reasons that the first order was not void for the want of notice to the minor trustees. There are other objections made to the original order, but none of them affect its validity.

We are quite certain that the last order made was without authority of law, and was a nullity. The former order was not void on its face. It was final as to the right of the widow of the deceased, and the petitioner here, as to which of them should manage the property under the provisions of the will. The time within which such an order could be vacated must be held to be limited by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court had no jurisdiction, after the expiration of six months, to vacate the order made on a mere motion for that purpose, the order not being void on its face. *Bell v. ROACH v. CARAFFA et al. (No. 12,706.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 4, 1890.)

TRUSTS—ACTION TO ENFORCE—PARTIES—LIMITATIONS.

1. A cestui que trust who is seeking to enforce the trust in property that can still be "ear marked" as trust property, against the administratrix of the trustee, does not come within Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1493, 1500, which require claims against decedent's estate to be presented within a specified time to the administratrix for allowance; for the cestui que trust is seeking his own property, and not to enforce a claim against the estate and property of the deceased trustee.

2. In an action by the administrator of a deceased partner to enforce a trust in property in the hands of the administratrix of the surviving partner, plaintiff's evidence showed that the deceased partner left the country on account of ill health in 1865, but that his death did not occur until 1874. The surviving partner continued the business, remitting a stated sum quarterly to the deceased partner during his life-time, and permitting the balance of his share of the profits to accumulate. On the deceased partner's death, the partnership affairs were not wound up, but the business was continued by the surviving partner the same as before. With a part of the accumulated profits belonging to the deceased partner, he purchased land in his own name, but confessedly for the benefit of his deceased partner. From the rents of this land, and from the dividends of the partnership business, other moneys came into his hands from month to month, which, by his letters, he admitted he had ready for delivery, on call, to the deceased partner. After the death of the surviving partner, which occurred in 1882, a large fund in coin was found secreted about his premises which he had kept separate from his other funds. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to make out a prima facie case of the existence of an express trust, and also to ear-mark the trust property, and that it was error to grant a nonsuit because of the insufficiency of the evidence.

3. The fact that the trust in regard to the land was not declared in writing, as required by Civil Code Cal. § 853, will not defeat the trust therein. The trust, being originally created in personal property, was provable by parol; and the character of the trust in this respect was not changed by the fact that, by the acts of the trustee and by operation of law, it now affects real estate.

4. The trust being a continuing one, the statute of limitations did not begin to run against the cestui que trust until repudiated by the trustee brought home to the knowledge of the cestui que trust.

5. The trust property, on the death of the surviving partner, having come into the hands of his widow as the survivor of the marital community, and also as administratrix of her deceased husband, it was proper to make her a defendant, in both her personal and representative capacities, in an action to enforce the trust.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. F. SULLIVAN, Judge.

Action by Mr. Roach, as administrator, etc., of Domenico Caraffa, deceased, against Margaret Caraffa, administratrix, etc., of Giovanni B. Caraffa, and another, for an accounting and settlement of the affairs of a partnership of which Domenico Caraffa and Giovanni B. Caraffa had been the principal members. The court ordered a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence, and plaintiff appeals.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1493, provides that all claims arising upon contracts, whether the same be due, not due, or contingent, must be presented within a specified time, and any claim not so presented is barred forever. Section 1500 provides: "No holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon, unless the claim is first presented to the executor or administrator," etc. Civil Code Cal. § 852, provides: "No trust in relation to real property is valid unless created or declared: (1) By a written instrument, subscribed by the trustee, or by his agent thereto authorized by writing; (2) by the instrument under which the trustee claims the estate affected; or (3) by operation of law." Section 853 provides: "When a transfer of real property is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by or for another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by or for whom such payment is made."

John A. Wright and Smith, Wright & Pomeroy, (Edward B. Young, of counsel,) for appellant. Winans & Belknap, (J. B. Harmon, of counsel,) for respondents.

Fox, J. Domenico Caraffa and Giovanni B. Caraffa, brothers, entered into business as partners, in San Francisco, in the year 1859. Shortly afterwards, they sold a one-third interest in their business to one Raggio and admitted him into the partnership, the business being continued, as before, in the firm name of D. Caraffa & Co. In October, 1865, Domenico, being in failing health, returned to Italy, where he continued to remain until his death, which occurred in November, 1874. It is claimed on the part of plaintiff, who is administrator of the estate of Domenico, that, when he, Domenico, went to Italy, the partnership was not dissolved; that he continued to retain his interest, his brother representing him, and, as his trustee, receiving from month to month his share of the profits of the business, and when so received holding it as his trustee; out of his said share paying $40 per month for a man to work in the business in place of Domenico, remitting quarterly to Domenico, out of his said share, sums amounting to about $100 per quarter, and holding or investing the rest as he should deem best, for Domenico's benefit; and that this continued down to the time of Domenico's death. The evidence pretty strongly sustains this theory of the plaintiff. In January, 1873, Raggio, with the consent of the other partners, Giovanni acting for Domenico, sold out his interest to the defendant Guinasso, who was thereafter the third member of the said firm. It is further claimed that, upon Domenico's death, there was no person in this country entitled to administration upon his estate (except the public administrator, who had no notice or knowledge of the existence of such an estate,) other than his said brother and alleged trustee, Giovanni; that said Giovanni failed to disclose the existence of such estate, and neither administered upon the estate, nor closed the affairs of the partnership, but continued to carry on the business of the partnership, as before, for some time, but finally changed the firm name to G. B. Caraffa & Co., and that in that name the business was continued, until October, 1882, when said Giovanni died, and, subsequently, the defendant Margaret Caraffa was appointed administratrix of said estate. The action is for an accounting and settlement of the affairs of the partnership, and for an accounting for and of, and for the delivery of, the trust property remaining in the hands of Giovanni, at the time of his death. The defendants deny the allegations of the complaint, and plead laches, and the statute of limitations. At the close of plaintiff's case, the defendants moved the court for a nonsuit, which was granted, and judgment entered accordingly, from which plaintiff appeals. Plaintiff also moved the court for a new trial, which was denied, and from this order an appeal is also taken. This brings up the evidence upon which the nonsuit was granted. The defendant Guinasso does not appear to have joined in the motion. On behalf of Margaret Caraffa, both in her individual and representative capacity, the motion was made on the grounds (1) that no claim had been presented against the estate of Giovanni B. Caraffa, and, by reason thereof, the action was barred by the provisions of sections 1493 and 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that the evidence failed to establish the existence of a trust in any fund or property in the possession of Giovanni at the time of his death; (3) that the evidence failed to identify any particular fund or property as coming into the hands of the defendant in her individual or representative capacity, under any trust; (4) that, as to the real estate mentioned in the complaint, the claim of plaintiff was barred by the provisions of sections 318, 319, and 322 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (5) that the evidence failed to show that the action was cummenced within the time or times limited by section 353 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (6) that the plaintiff cannot sue the defendant in both her representative and private capacity, in the same action and count; and (7) that the evidence is insufficient to show that a trust was ever created in favor of Domenico Caraffa, his heirs or representatives, in any property which had come into the hands of the defendant.

1. The answer to the first of these points is that the plaintiff does not stand in the attitude of a creditor of the estate of Giovanni B. Caraffa. He is not seeking to enforce a claim as such, or for anything that belongs to the estate. The claim of plaintiff is that certain property that was in the possession of Giovanni in his life-time, and, by reason thereof came at his death into the possession of defendant, as the survivor of the marital community of which Giovanni was the head, and was, upon her subsequent appointment, as administratrix, inventoried by her as a part of his estate, did not, in fact, belong to the estate, but was held by Giovanni in trust for the estate of Domenico. Plaintiff attempts to ear-mark that property, and his evidence, it seems to us, goes far towards establishing the existence of the trust, and towards showing that certain of the real property designated was purchased with trust-funds, and certain of the moneys found upon the death of Giovanni also constituted a part of the trust-fund. The claim is not, therefore, one which is required to be presented for the allowance and approval of the administratrix and probate court. If there be a trust-fund, and in the mutations of business it had become so mingled with and absorbed into the property belonging to the trustee as to be no longer capable of being traced or identified, then the only remedy of the cestui que trust would be that of a creditor, and if he had failed to present his claim, as required by the probate law, he must fail in his action; but, if the trust property can still be ear-marked, or traced and identified, the cestui que trust may maintain his action against the administrator to enforce the trust; for he is seeking his own property only,—not to enforce a claim against the estate and property of the decedent. Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17; Sharpstein v. Friedlander, 54 Cal. 58; In re Allgier, 65 Cal. 228, 3 Pac. Rep. 849.

2, 3, and 4. As to these points, we have examined the evidence with some care. It is, of course, only that offered on the part of the plaintiff, and is open to rebuttal; but, as it now stands, it leaves no doubt in our minds of the fact of the creation of a trust, as early as the latter part of 1865, and that it was never closed during the life-time of either of the brothers. At first, so far as the evidence discloses, the trust-fund consisted wholly of money, but the evidence strongly tends to establish the fact that at a later period, as the trust-fund accumulated, the trustee invested a portion of the fund then in hand in certain real estate, in his own name, but confessedly, as it seems to us, for the benefit of his brother; that real estate is capable of identification, and is pretty clearly identified by writing made by Giovanni himself. It does not appear to have consisted of an entire interest, but of an undivided interest, in the property. From the rents of this, and from the dividends of the partnership business, other trust-funds, in money, came into the hands of the trustee from month to month. By his own letters he gives proof of its accumulation, and of the fact that he had not invested it, but had it ready for delivery on call. In view of his sources of income, and of the investments he had made, it is difficult to account for the large fund found secreted in coin about his premises, and by him kept sacred and separate from the other funds which he had deposited in bank, upon the theory other than that it was the property of his brother. We do not say that the fact was established by the proof, but it makes a strong prima facie case,—so strong, at least, as that we think the court ought not to have granted the nonsuit, on the ground of want of evidence at that stage of the trial, but that it should have proceeded, upon a further inquiry, and an accounting; or, at least, to a finding of the facts in the premises.

5. The action, as against the defendant upon whose motion this nonsuit was granted, is one wholly in relation to trust property, and for the enforcement of the trust. The trust, if there was one, was created before the adoption of the Codes. It was an express trust, within the meaning of section 6 of the practice act, and related entirely to personal property. The provisions of the Code have not changed the character of the trust. Civil Code, §§ 2216-2224. Having been established in relation to personal property, it did not need to be created in writing, but could be proved by parol. Silvey v. Hodgdon, 52 Cal. 363; Zuck v. Culp, 59 Cal. 142. Under the code it could be created, and was continued, by the acts of the parties, as shown by the allegations of the complaint and the evidence so far adduced. Id. §§ 2219-2222. If now, it affects any real estate, as at present it appears to do, it has been made to do so because of the act of the trustee, and by operation of law, under sections 852 and 853, Id., but this does not change its character of express trust. A resulting trust, under section 853, may still be an express trust. It was not alone an express, but a continuing, trust, and the statute of limitations would not run against the cestui que trust, until repudiation by the trustee, brought home to the knowledge of the beneficiary. Ord v. De la Guerra, 18 Cal. 67; Schroeder v. Jahns, 27 Cal. 280; Hearst v. Pujol, 44 Cal. 230; Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368; Zuck v. Culp, supra; Speidel v. Henrici, 120 U. S. 386, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 610. So far as the evidence now shows, no repudiation of this trust occurred until demand by this plaintiff upon this defendant, shortly before the commencement of this action, at least none that was brought home to the notice of the beneficiary.

6. The defendant Margaret Caraffa is the survivor of a marital community, the deceased member of which was the original alleged trustee. As such, upon his death, the alleged trust property came by operation of law into her possession, charged with the same trust to which it was subject in the hands of her husband. Upon her appointment as administratrix of his estate she, as such, inventoried and returned the property as property of the estate of her deceased husband. It was, therefore, not only proper but necessary to make her a defendant, in her representative capacity, in any proceeding brought to determine the question of trust. If, as she claims, there was no trust, and the property was properly returned as a part of decedent's estate, then, inasmuch as his entire estate, as seems to be the case, was community property, of which she in her personal capacity is the owner of one-half, subject only to administration, she would seem to have such a personal interest in the result of the action as to make it at least proper, if not necessary, to make her a defendant in her personal as well as in her representative capacity. We think she was properly made defendant in both capacities.

7. In the statement of the grounds of motion for nonsuit, it was conceded that a trust can be created by operation of law. We have already cited both statute law, and judicial decisions, showing that such a trust, as that declared upon in this case, may be created otherwise than by deed or writing, and proved by parol, and do not need to consider the question further. In the case made we do not think it material, but it may become so on a new trial, and, for that reason, we notice one other point made by appellant. We think the court erred in ruling out the evidence offered on the question as to whether or not other members of the Caraffa family came to this country after the death of Domenico. On the question of laches, and the statute of limitations, it might become important to show, as was proposed to be done, that Giovanni was the only person in this country, (other than public officers who had no knowledge of the facts,) entitled to administer upon the estate of his brother, the cestui que trust. Judgment and order reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial.

I concur: PATERSON, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment. In view of what the evidence tended to prove, a nonsuit was improper.

ALIMONY ON APPEAL.

When the wife is involved in a suit against her husband for divorce, either as plaintiff or defendant, she should be allowed alimony and suit money out of the husband's estate or earnings, so as to place her upon an equality with him in the litigation until the same is finally determined; and these allowances may be extended to the pendency of the cause on appeal or error, whenever it is made to appear to the appellate court that the review is prosecuted in good faith, and that error has probably been committed to her prejudice. Such relief, however, will not be granted, except upon a showing that the wife is destitute, in whole or in part, of the means necessary to maintain herself and carry on the litigation and that the husband is able to supply the same.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to district court, Arapahoe county.

On motion to dismiss petition for alimony and suit money.

Sullivan & May and Coe & Freeman, for plaintiff in error. Patterson & Thomas, for defendant in error.

ELLIOTT, J. The plaintiff in error, having been defeated in her action for divorce in the court below, brings the record to this court by writ of error, and asks, upon petition and affidavits, that defendant in error be required to provide her with means to prosecute her suit, and for alimony while the same is pending in this court. Defendant's counsel deny the jurisdiction of this court to grant such relief. The practice in appellate courts in respect to applications of this kind is by no means uniform. By section 1098, Gen. St., the jurisdiction to grant alimony pendente lite is expressly conferred upon district courts, but counsel fees and suit money are not specified; nevertheless such allowances have also been sustained by this court. Hence, the jurisdiction does not depend upon statute. Daniels v. Daniels, 9 Colo. 133, 10 Pac. Rep. 657. In support of its appellate jurisdiction, and for the purpose of making such jurisdiction effective, this court has expressed liberal views. In Wheeler v. Irrigation Co., 9 Colo. 250, 11 Pac. Rep. 103, it is said: "One of the inherent powers of an appellate court is the right to make use of all writs known to the common law, and, if necessary, to invent new writs or proceedings, in order to suitably exercise the jurisdiction conferred." In Friend v. Friend, 65 Wis. 413, 27 N. W. Rep. 34, the language of Chief Justice Dixon is approved as follows: "The granting of temporary alimony and suit money, to enable a wife to prosecute her appeal, is not a matter of course in this court, and, when application is made, we think we must look into the record so far as to determine whether the appeal is obviously without merits, and, if it is, then the motion will be denied. Injury and a meritorious cause of action must appear." The reasonable rule would seem to be that when the wife is involved in a suit against her husband for divorce, either as plaintiff or defendant, she should be allowed alimony and suit money out of the husband's estate or earnings, so as to place her upon an equality with him in the litigation until the same is finally determined; and these allowances may be extended to the pendency of the cause on appeal or error, whenever it is made to appear to the appellate court that the review is prosecuted in good faith, and that error has probably been committed to her prejudice. Such relief, however, will not be granted, except upon a showing that the wife is destitute, in whole or in part, of the means necessary to maintain herself and carry on the litigation, and that the husband is able to supply the same. This doctrine is familiar, and it is unnecessary to enter into a consideration of the reasons upon which it is founded. 2 Bish. Mar. & Div. (6th Ed.) § 393; Daniels v. Daniels, supra; Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 6 Mich. 285; Lake v. Lake, 16 Nev. 364, affirmed, 17 Nev. 230. For the purposes of the relief sought by the petition before us, there is no substantial distinction between a case brought here on appeal and one brought by writ of error under such circumstances as would justify a supersedeas. We are not disposed to encourage applications of this kind. The application must show merits and probable legal injury, or it will be denied. The motion to dismiss petition for alimony, etc., is denied. But defendant in error will be allowed to answer and file counter-affidavits before the merits of the application are considered.

Motion denied.

SQUIRES V. KING.

(Supreme Court of Colorado. Sept. 12, 1890.)

BROKERS—COMMISSIONS—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Defendant wrote to plaintiff offering him a certain commission for securing him a loan at a named rate. Plaintiff secured the money, but when defendant was informed that it was ready for him he declined to receive it, giving as his reasons that the rate of interest was not satisfactory; that he could not invest the money at once; and that he had concluded that he did not want it. Held, that a right of action thereupon accrued to plaintiff to recover the stipulated commission.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Arapahoe county court.

C. A. Allen, Hendrick & Phelps, and C. A. Lott, for appellant. S. H. Ballard and C. P. Butler, for appellee.

RICHMOND, C. On July 6, 1886, appellant, who was defendant below, executed and delivered to appellee the following agreement: "Villa Grove, July 6, 1886. John C. King, Colorado—Dear Sir: If you will procure a loan for me of $6,500 at 8 per cent. interest, interest payable semi-annually, both interest and principal payable in Boston in gold coin of present standard weight and fineness, for five years, on my 680 acres and improvements, I agree to furnish a clear title to the same and all mortgage papers free of expense, and pay you a commission of 10 per cent. for securing the loan. [Signed] Wm. B. SQUIRES." In pursuance of this agreement, appellee negotiated the loan, and had the sum mentioned forwarded to a Denver lawyer for the purpose of complying with the contract. The attorney, acting for the lender, communicated by letter to appellant the fact that he had received the money. To this letter, appellant responded as follows: "Villa Grove, July 17, 1886. E. O. Wolcott, Esq.—Dear Sir: Yours of the 9th is received, and contents noted. I have concluded that I do not want any money at the rate Mr. King wants to charge me. I have other reasons for not wanting it now. I could not invest it for the next sixty days, and, taking all in all, I have concluded I do not want it. Please send that decree to my address, Villa Grove, Colorado, and oblige Wm. B. SQUIRES." It is needless to consider the possible effect of inquiries made by the attorney concerning the title and certain water-rights, for the letter of July 17th rendered appellee's right of action complete. This letter was written but 11 days subsequent to the date of the contract. It contains a positive refusal to comply therewith, and such refusal is predicated upon circumstances over which appellee had and could have no control whatever, viz.: First, a change of mind by appellant as to the rate of interest he was willing to pay; second, a discovery that he could not invest the sum borrowed within sixty days from the time of its receipt; and third, a resolve on his part that, "taking all in all," he did not want the money. The judgment of the court below in favor of appellee should therefore be affirmed.

REED and BISSELL, CC., concur.

MCQUAID V. PORTLAND & V. R. CO.

REPORTER'S SHORT-HAND NOTES—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

1. The short-hand notes of the circuit court reporter, appointed under the act approved February 25, 1889, (Sess. Acts 1889, pp. 142-144,) when transcribed, certified, and filed with the clerk, as in the act provided, do not take the place of a bill of exceptions, nor can the supreme court review a question of fact in an action at law on said notes.

2. The ruling of the trial court in refusing a new trial presents no question for review on appeal.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

There is no bill of exception in this record, and yet the only question which the appellant seeks to make on the appeal arises out of the effect of certain statements made by the plaintiff when on the stand as a witness in his own behalf. On his cross-examination, defendant's counsel asked him to estimate the amount of his damages, and the reporter certifies that he answered $1,000. The jury gave a verdict for $1,495. The defendant in due time moved to set it aside, and to grant a new trial, which was refused, and this is the only assignment of error.

C. B. Bellinger, for appellant. E. O. Doud, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) There being no bill of exceptions in this case, the appellant relies upon the certificate of the official reporter. On February 25, 1889, an act entitled "An act authorizing the appointment of official reporters in the circuit courts, and prescribing their duties and fixing their compensation," was approved. Sess. Acts 1889, pp. 142-144. Under section 2 of that act, the reporter, when a full report is ordered, "shall cause accurate short-hand notes of the oral testimony or other proceedings to be taken." Section 3 provides for the reporter's compensation. Section 4, among other things, makes it the duty of the reporter when short-hand notes have been taken in any case, as in the act provided, if the court or either party requests a transcript of the notes, to cause a full, accurate, type-written transcript of the testimony, or other proceedings, which should be certified and filed with the clerk, for the use of the court or parties. Section 5 provides, in effect, that said report and proceedings, when transcribed and certified as correct, may thereafter be read in evidence as the deposition of a witness in the cases mentioned in section 829, Hill's Code.

These are the main features of the act on the subject presented by appellant's counsel, and we fail to discover anything in it that gives the reporter's notes the effect, or makes them perform the office, of a bill of exceptions. No doubt, the object of the act was to enable the parties to put in available form the proceedings at the trial, to enable them to make an accurate bill of exceptions, but it was never designed to thus make a substitute for that part of the record. If said notes could be so used, the transcript before us would be unavailable for another reason. It only purports to contain the plaintiff's cross-examination,—not all of his evidence,—and it does not purport to contain all the evidence given upon the trial.

We may add that, if the question which counsel for appellant seeks to make were before us, we could not, in the absence of controlling authority, give to the evidence of a party when on the stand as a witness the effect of an estoppel by record. He occupies, in a civil case, the same situation of any witness, affected by like motives and interest. The effect of his evidence and his credibility are for the jury, and it would be going too far for the court to declare, as a matter of law, that he is bound or estopped by every statement he makes. The verdict of the jury may have been excessive. If so, the court held had power to correct it by granting a new trial. That discretion is vested by law in the trial court, with which this court has never interfered. It presents no question for this court to review on this appeal. We find no error in the record, and the judgment appealed from must be affirmed.

MILLER v. BAILEY.

DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP—AGREEMENT TO PAY DEBTS—COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS.

1. If, upon the dissolution of a partnership, it is agreed that the partner continuing the business shall pay the debts, such agreement is broken by mere non-payment, and the outgoing partner can maintain a suit for the breach, without having paid anything himself. And, if a clause be added to save harmless, the former is not merged in the latter, and the obligee can rest upon either.

2. When, by the terms of a dissolution agreement between B. & M., the latter retired from the firm, and B. was to pay the outstanding debts and liabilities of the firm, and made a composition agreement with the firm's creditors, whereby he was to pay 50 per cent. of the firm's debts, upon payment of which B. was to be discharged, but not M., and B. complied with the composition agreement, and thereupon went to the principal creditor of the firm, and asked him to sue B. &

M., and collect his money from M., and, upon the action being brought, he made no defense, and did not acquit M. of the composition agreement, or its terms, nor plead it himself as a defense, but made default, and M. paid a large sum of the partnership debts of B. & M., held that, when sued for failing to comply with the dissolution agreement, B. was estopped from relying upon the supposed release created by the composition agreement, and the court declined to decide whether such release existed or not.

Appeal from district court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

The substance of the complaint is that, on September 7, 1885, plaintiff and defendant were partners in a general retail grocery business in Portland, Or., under the firm name of Bailey & Miller; that on that day they were indebted to divers persons, and, among others, to Wadhams & Elliott in about the sum of $1,500, about one-half of which was secured by note, and remainder an open account; that on that day plaintiff and defendant dissolved said partnership, and, by an agreement then entered into for a valuable consideration, the defendant, Bailey, agreed to pay and satisfy in full all debts then existing against said firm of Bailey & Miller, and all sums of money which were due or owing by said partnership, (except a debt due Folger & Co.,) including said $1,500 due Wadhams & Elliott. And said defendant further agreed that he would at all times save and keep harmless and indemnify plaintiff against all and every person whatsoever to which said Bailey & Miller, or either of them, were indebted in relation to said partnership, and of and from all charges, actions, costs, damages, executions, judgments, and demands whatsoever, that might at any time arise against said plaintiff, by reason of any matter or thing respecting or relating to said partnership, including all or any claims that might arise against the plaintiff, or for which he might become liable, on account of said debt due the said firm of Wadhams & Elliott. It is then alleged that defendant failed and neglected to keep said agreement as to said debt due Wadhams & Elliott, or to pay same, and that, on August 19, 1889, William Wadhams, to whom Wadhams & Elliott had assigned their claim against Bailey & Miller, commenced an action against Bailey & Miller for $1,162.90, then due on the promissory notes held by them against Bailey & Miller, and threatened to commence an action to recover the amount due on account; that defendant failed to pay said claims, or to secure the withdrawal of said action, and that for his own protection the plaintiff was compelled to pay, and did pay, to said Wadhams, on the 24th day of September, 1889, the sum of $1,006.47; and that defendant fails and refuses to pay same, etc. The defendant's answer admits the agreement made on the dissolution of the firm of Bailey & Miller, and denies substantially all of the other material allegations of the complaint. The answer then alleges that, on the 24th of November, 1885, defendant fully satisfied, paid, and discharged all claims and debts owing, due, or to become due, from or on account of the firm of Bailey & Miller to the firm of Wadhams & Elliott, and to other creditors of the said Bailey & Miller, mentioned in a certain writing as follows:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 24th day of November, A. D. 1885, between us, the creditors of J. W. Bailey, witnesseth: That whereas, the said J. W. Bailey does justly owe us, and is indebted to us, his several creditors, in the several amounts set opposite our respective names, but, by reason of losses and disappointments in business, he is unable to pay and satisfy us of our full debts and just claims and demands: Now, therefore, we, the said creditors, have resolved and agreed, and by this agreement do resolve and agree, to undergo a certain loss, and to accept of fifty cents for every dollar owing by the said J. W. Bailey to us, the several and respective creditors, to be paid in full satisfaction and discharge of our several and respective debts, as follows, to-wit: One-third of said indebtedness we agree to take in notes of Horace Ramsdell, dated of this date, payable on or before 18 months from date to each of us pro rata, without interest, and the balance of the fifty cents aforesaid, or one-sixth of our respective claims, we agree to take in notes of J. W. Bailey, dated of this date, payable on or before two years after date to each of us pro rata, with interest after one year, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. And it is hereby further agreed that neither we, the said several and respective creditors, or any of us, nor the executors, administrators, partners, or assigns of us, or either of us, shall or will, at any time or times hereafter, sue, arrest, attach, or prosecute the said J. W. Bailey, or his property and chattels, for any debt or thing now due to us, or any of us, his respective creditors aforesaid, so as the said J. W. Bailey, his executors or administrators, do well and truly pay unto us his said notes. In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and the amount of our several claims opposite our respective names, the day and year first above written. This is to be construed as in no manner releasing Edwin Miller from his liability to us on said indebtedness.

"WADHAMS & ELLIOTT, $1,526.38."

Then follow the signatures of a large number of Bailey & Miller's creditors, with the amount due each firm set opposite.

It is alleged that the sum of $1,526.38, set opposite the name of Wadhams & Elliott, was the amount due said firm by Bailey & Miller, and the identical claim a portion of which plaintiff alleges he paid on the 24th of September, 1889; that in compliance with said contract the defendant delivered his note for one-sixth the amount due Wadhams & Elliott, and has since paid the same, and has performed every part of said contract by him to be done; that Ramsdell, in compliance with said contract, executed and delivered his note to Wadhams & Elliott for one-third of said sum. The answer further alleges that Bailey paid his note to Wadhams & Elliott on the 5th day of October, 1889; that Wadhams & Elliott knew of the retirement of said Miller, and the agreement of defendant to pay them their claim; and that they thereafter settled said claim with said Bailey, and for a new and valuable consideration extended the time of payment of the same. The reply denies the new matter in the answer, and then alleges that by composition agreement set out Miller was not released. It is also alleged that, at the time of Miller's payment to Wadhams, Bailey had not paid his note. It is then alleged that Bailey prompted and instigated Wadhams to sue Miller & Bailey on the partnership debt, which is relied upon as an estoppel. The plaintiff proceeded with his evidence, which tended to prove the material facts stated in the complaint, at the conclusion of which, on motion of defendant's counsel, the court nonsuited the plaintiff, for the reason he had failed to prove a case sufficient to be submitted to a jury. It may be proper to add that the witness, Wadhams, was allowed to state, on cross-examination, all facts in relation to said composition agreement, and what Bailey did under it. All the evidence is in the bill of exceptions. The remaining facts appear in the opinion.

A. L. Frazer, for appellant. F. A. E. Starr, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) In addition to the facts already narrated, it appears from the evidence that the defendant, Bailey, sent an attorney to Wadhams, who informed him that, by their suing Miller, he could collect the amount due from Bailey & Miller, and shortly afterwards the defendant himself called on Wadhams, and prompted him to sue Bailey & Miller, and at the time said to Wadhams that there was a judgment to be entered up against him in favor of Miller, or Miller's wife, and he would rather that Wadhams should have it as the balance of his claim against Bailey & Miller than that Miller should get it.

Before proceeding to consider the rule of the court in ordering a nonsuit, it is proper to ascertain some of the duties which Bailey owed Miller, by virtue of the terms of the agreement of dissolution. By that agreement he was to pay all debts of every kind then due by Bailey & Miller, with one exception, and at all times thereafter to save, keep harmless, and indemnify Miller against all and every person whomsoever to whom Bailey & Miller were indebted in relation to said partnership, (except one claim,) and of and from all charges, actions, damages, costs, etc., whatsoever, and what has heretofore, or shall at any time hereafter, arise and come against said Miller for, or by reason of, any matter or thing respecting or relating to said partnership. If the contract be to pay the debts, it is broken by mere non-payment, and the outgoing partner can maintain a suit without having paid anything himself. This is like a contract of indemnity, for it is affirmative. So is the covenant to pay the debts, and save harmless. Here are two stipulations, one to pay, and one to save harmless or indemnify, and the former is not merged in the latter, and the obligee can rest upon either. And the covenant to pay is broken by non-payment, and a suit lies, though the ob-

Hgee has not actually paid. 2 Bates, Partn. § 636. Bailey, then, being bound by the terms of the dissolution agreement to pay the Wadhams debt, and to hold Miller harmless, could not relieve himself by making a composition agreement with Wadhams, including other creditors, and keep the terms secret. If that agreement operated to discharge both Miller and Bailey from their liability to Wadhams, Bailey was bound, especially when he and Miller were sued for the same debt by Wadhams, to make known to Miller the terms of the agreement, so as to enable Miller to plead it as a defense to the action. This Bailey neglected to do. Not only so, but, contrary to his agreement with Miller, he prompted and instigated Wadhams to sue Miller, for the express purpose of compelling Miller to pay the debt which Bailey had covenanted to pay, and to indemnify Miller against. Bailey did not even plead the agreement in his own defense when jointly sued with Miller, but allowed that action to go by default as to him. Under these circumstances, we do not consider or decide whether the composition agreement discharged Wadhams' claim against Miller or not. Bailey would not plead that discharge against Wadhams when he had the opportunity, and when it was his duty to have done so, and he shall not now rely upon it for the purpose of defeating Miller's claim. The circumstances estop him. This view of the case requires a reversal of the judgment of the court below, and that the cause be remanded for a new trial, on principles not inconsistent with this opinion.

CARTER V. MONASTES.(Supreme Court of Oregon. Nov. 10, 1890.)APPEAL FROM JUSTICE COURT—FILING TRANSCRIPT—TIME.

Section 2125, Hill's Code, requires the transcript on appeal from a justice of the peace to be filed in the circuit court on or before the first day of the term next following the allowance of the appeal. This requirement is mandatory, and the circuit court has no authority to extend or enlarge the time.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

The plaintiff recovered a judgment before the justice of the peace of North Portland precinct on the 12th day of December, 1889. Within the time allowed by law, the defendant served a notice of appeal from the judgment, gave a proper undertaking, and the justice allowed the appeal in his docket. Thereafter, on the 1st day of January, 1890, of the circuit court of Multnomah county, the appellant appeared in court, and obtained an ex parte order of said court allowing the appellant 10 days in which to file the transcript. The transcript was filed within the 10 days allowed by the court, but not by the first day of the term. Thereafter, the respondent moved to dismiss the appeal, for the reason that the transcript had not been filed in the appellate court within the time allowed by law, which motion was allowed, and the appeal dismissed. The appellant in the court below appeals.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) But a single question is presented by this appeal, and that is, whether or not the circuit court had power to make the order enlarging the time for filing the transcript. Hill's Code, § 2125, provides: "On or before the first day of the term of the circuit court next following the allowance of the appeal, the appellant must file with the clerk of such circuit court a transcript of the cause." The requirement is imperative, and a compliance with the statute was essential to give the circuit court jurisdiction of the cause. No doubt, as appears from the transcript, the appellant was hindered in the prosecution of the appeal by circumstances over which he had no control, and, if the circuit court had the power, its order enlarging the time was proper; but no provision of the statute conferring such power has been brought to our notice, and we know of none. 1 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 621. We think the circuit court did not err in dismissing the appeal, and its judgment must be affirmed.

GARDNER V. FIRST NAT. BANK OF BILLINGS.(Supreme Court of Montana. Oct. 10, 1890.)POWERS—REVOCATION BY DEATH—APPLICATION OF BANK DEPOSITS.

Where one borrows money of a bank on certain notes, and agrees to deposit money from time to time to pay them, and authorizes the bank to apply his deposits to the discharge of the notes before maturity, if it so desires, the authority thus given is a naked power, not coupled with an interest, which ceased at the depositor's death, and the bank has no authority, after notice of his death, to make such an application of moneys then standing to his credit.

Appeal from district court, Yellowstone county; GEORGE R. MIBURN, Judge.

The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, which, with the admissions of the pleadings, are as follows: On August 18, 1887, J. W. Story and one Jackson made a joint note to respondent, the bank, for $1,000, and also a note with one Severance for $1,200 to the bank, each at 60 days. That on these notes Story borrowed $2,200 from the bank. That, at the time of the loan, Story stated to the bank that he would send to them, from time to time, deposits to meet the notes, and instructed the bank that they might apply such deposits towards the payment of the notes, and that such deposits might be so applied before the maturity of the notes, if the bank desired. The notes drew interest at 1½ per cent. per month. The deposits drew none. Story died September 12, 1887, and, September 29th, plaintiff became the administrator of his estate. On the date of his death, September 12th, Story had on deposit with the bank $1,161.68, sent to the bank as aforesaid, and which had not been applied by the bank to the payment of the notes. That prior to September 17, 1887, the bank had notice of Story's death. That on that day the cashier of the bank, on a check signed for Story by himself, drew said money so on deposit, and applied the same to the payment of the said notes, and this before the notes were due. On October 14, 1887, plaintiff, as administrator, demanded from the bank said money, which was refused. The pleadings in the case were filed after the notes became due. The bank has never presented said notes for allowance to the administrator. The plaintiff, administrator, sues the bank for $1,161.68, the amount of money on deposit with the bank at the death of his intestate. The defendant denies the indebtedness, and its defense is its application of the money upon the notes, in pursuance to the instructions of the deceased in his life-time.

M. J. Liddell, W. A. Burleigh, and John Tinkler, for appellant. I. F. Goddard, for respondent.

DE WITT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) In the life-time of the deceased, J. W. Story, he gave the bank authority to apply his deposits to the payment of the notes, and before maturity, if the bank so desired. This was the creation of an agency, or a power of attorney, a power which was never exercised during the life of Story, or prior to the knowledge of the bank of Story's death. After death, and notice to the bank thereof, the power was exercised, or the agency acted upon, and the deposits applied. There is no question of consideration, or contract, or rights of innocent purchasers without notice, involved in the construction of the conduct of the bank in attempting to act under this agency or power. Nor was the power coupled with an interest. The interest, to be coupled with a power which will cause the power to survive the death of its grantor, must be an interest or title in the thing, which interest or title is conveyed with the power, and not left to be conveyed afterwards, with the exercise of the power. It must pass with the power, and then vest in the grantee of the power. Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'rs, 8 Wheat. 174. Such is not the situation in the transaction under review. No title in the money vested in the bank with the passing to it of the power. No title could be in the bank until the power was exercised. The subject of powers coupled with an interest is one not free from difficulty; but that the power under consideration was not coupled with such an interest as secured its vitality after Story's decease is amply apparent upon a careful study of that luminous and convincing discussion of the subject by Chief Justice MARSHALL in Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'rs, cited above, from which opinion our views herein are taken. See, also, Houghtaling v. Marvin, 7 Barb. 412; Norton v. Whitehead, 84 Cal. 263, 24 Pac. Rep. 154; Story, Ag. §§ 488, 496; and Mechem, Ag. §§ 241-244; and the many cases cited in these text-books, which we will not review. We hence conclude that the authority of the bank was a naked power to apply, or rather to elect to apply, the money to the notes. The power was not exercised in the life of its creator, and perished with his death. "This is an ancient and well-settled doctrine of the common law." Story, Ag. § 488. See, also, Hunt v. Rousmanier's Adm'rs, su*pra*; Story, Ag. §§ 349, 488, 490, 491, 496, and generally, §§ 467-500; Mechem, Ag. §§ 238-246; and Ewell's Evans, Ag. p. 87; and numerous authorities cited in the text of these works.

Counsel for respondent suggest in argument that the bank had a lien upon the deposit for the indebtedness on the notes. But that defense is not made in the pleadings, nor was the case tried on that theory, and furthermore the indebtedness on the notes had not matured, for which a lien might be attempted to be set up, and this is not an action in equity to subject the money to a lien for unaccrued indebtedness. Wilson v. White, 84 Cal. 239, 24 Pac. Rep. 114; 1 Morse, Banks, § 329, and cases cited. The action of the bank in applying these deposits was without authority. The money belongs to the estate of J. W. Story. The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded to the district court, with directions to enter judgment in accordance with these views.

FISHER V. BRISCOE.

PAROL EVIDENCE—ACTION ON NOTE.

1. The maker and payee of two notes agreed in writing that certain stock had been deposited as collateral to secure the payment of the notes, and that on payment the stock should be delivered to said maker, but if the notes were not paid the stock should be delivered to the payee, to be by him held and disposed of as collateral security. Comp. St. Mont. div. 1, § 623, provides that, when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing, there can be no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing. Held, that oral testimony that, at the time of making said notes and said agreement, it was understood by all the parties that said agreement obliged the payee to exhaust the collateral before suing on the notes was not admissible.

2. An agreement, independent and separate from said written agreement, that the collateral should first be exhausted before bringing suit would have to be supported by an independent consideration.

3. In an action on a note, a refusal to strike from the first amended answer an allegation that there was a written agreement that collateral should be exhausted before suit is in no way inconsistent with granting plaintiff judgment on the pleadings after a second amended answer had been filed which showed that said agreement was oral and varied, and contradicted the terms of a written agreement between the parties.

Appeal from district court, Lewis and Clarke county; WILLIAM H. HUNT, Judge.

This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for judgment on the pleadings, and from the consequent judgment. The complaint is on two promissory notes, each for $5,000, and dated November 1, 1887, made by defendant, payable to plaintiff. The amended answer of defendant admits the making and delivery of the notes, and further alleges that each of said notes bears the following indorsement: "Collateral in Second National Bank to secure this note, to be first exhausted." This answer then sets up the following matter as a separate defense: "That, prior to the execution of the notes, defendant bought from plaintiff 85,000 shares of stock in a mining company for $20,000, of which he had paid $10,000 at the time of making the notes; that as part consideration for the notes, plaintiff agreed to cause these shares to be transferred to defendant on the books of the company, and the certificates issued to defendant, and it was agreed in writing that the shares should be deposited as collateral for the notes, with conditions for the delivery of the shares to defendant, on payment of the notes, and if the notes were not paid, the stock was to be delivered to plaintiff, and by him sold as a pledge, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the notes." The answer further sets forth: "That plaintiff did not cause the shares to be transferred and issued to defendant, but the certificates were deposited as collateral, as agreed, except that they were not transferred and issued to defendant, or assigned to him, and the same remained subject to the order of the plaintiff; that plaintiff did not exhaust said security, and refuses to recognize any right of defendant in said stock; that it was agreed by plaintiff and defendant, at the time of making the notes, that said stock should be assigned to defendant, and delivered by defendant to plaintiff as collateral, and that the collateral should be exhausted before suit was commenced on the notes; that the stock is of value, and, if sold, and the proceeds applied, would pay all or part of the notes. Defendant prays that the action be abated until plaintiff has exhausted the security as contemplated." The written agreement referred to in the answer is as follows: "The inclosed 85,000 shares of stock in the Frohner Gold & Silver Mining Company are deposited as collateral security for the payment of two promissory notes of five thousand dollars each, executed by John O. Briscoe to Henry Fisher, one payable in six months, and the other payable in nine months, from date; upon the payment of the first note 45,000 shares to be delivered to the said Briscoe, and balance to be delivered to him on payment of the other said note, and if said first note is not paid at maturity the said 45,000 shares to be delivered to said Fisher to be held and disposed of as collateral security for said note and if said second note is not paid at maturity, then the residue of said stock to be likewise delivered to said Fisher for a like purpose. Nov. 1, 1887. J. O. BRISCOE. HENRY FISHER." A motion was made by plaintiff to strike out from the answer the matter set up as a separate defense. This motion was denied, and a replication filed, of which it is sufficient to say that it contained denials which formed an issue. With these pleadings, the case went to trial. The defendant was upon the stand as a witness, and his counsel asked him this question: "Go on and in your own way give a history in brief as to the consideration of these two notes. If they were notes given in renewal of notes, state the considnewal of." The plaintiff objected to this question, upon the ground that it is not contended in the answer that the notes were given in renewal of notes, and for the further reason that the latter part of the question says: "If they were notes given in renewal, state the consideration of the notes they were given in renewal of." The objection was sustained. Thereupon the defendant obtained leave, and amended his answer. This amended answer, which was the second amended answer in the case, states the facts alleged in the former amended answer, except that it alleges that the indorsements on the notes in suit were, "Secured by collateral of 40,000 shares of the capital stock of the Frohner Gold & Silver Mining Company," and a like indorsement upon the other note as to 45,000 shares of said stock. It pleads the same written instrument above set forth in full, and then alleges the following additional matter: "That the purchase of the stock was in June, 1887, on which defendant paid $5,000, and the stock was deposited in the bank, to be delivered to defendant upon his paying the balance of $15,000 within thirty days, and, upon his failure, he was to forfeit the $5,000 and the stock. That on July 29th the parties made another contract, by which it was agreed that defendant should pay plaintiff $1,000 in cash, and deliver four notes, one for $5,000 due September 1st, one for $5,000 due November 1st, one for $3,000 due August 6th, and one for $1,000 due August 15th, and defendant should still have the stock. The sum of these notes and the cash, make up the former sum of $15,000. That the $1,000 cash was paid. That it was then agreed that the stock should be deposited and held as collateral for the notes, and upon each of these notes was indorsed: 'Collateral in Second National Bank to be first exhausted;' and it was agreed that no action at law should be commenced until such collateral was exhausted. That the notes were paid, except the two $5,000 ones. Then comes the transaction of November 1st. Defendant took up the two $5,000 notes by giving the notes sued on. The notes given up had the indorsement as to exhausting the collateral, the new notes, the ones now in action, did not." Then follows the allegations as to the making of the written instrument above set forth, and defendant avers further: "That at the time of the execution of said written instrument the same agreement was made as on July 29th,—that is, that the stock should be first exhausted in the payment of the notes; that he, defendant, called the attention of counsel for plaintiff, who had drawn the instrument, to the fact that the language 'to be first exhausted in the payment of said notes,' was not inserted in said instrument, as by the agreement it should be, and that said counsel informed him it would have the same legal effect, and that it would be obligatory upon plaintiff to first exhaust the collateral before proceeding by action at law to collect the notes; that this was the mutual understanding between plaintiff and defendant at the time of the execution of said instrument, and that such was their construction thereof." The further allegations of this second amended answer are the same as the first amended answer. No replication was filed to this last pleading of defendant. Plaintiff then moved for judgment on the pleadings, which motion was granted, and judgment entered accordingly, from which order and judgment defendant appeals.

McConnell & Cloyberg, for appellant.
Toole & Wallace, for respondent.

DR WITT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) Appellant argues that the motion for judgment on the pleadings was error, for the reason that the court had theretofore taken a contrary view of the law in denying the motion to strike out the new matter in the first amended answer, which former view should constitute the law of the case on the motion for judgment on the pleadings. This argument is sufficiently answered, in that different facts were presented in the second amended answer than in the first. In the first, a written agreement to first exhaust the collateral was pleaded. In the second, it was not. In the second amended answer, it appeared that this agreement was by parol, and, as respondent claims, varying and contradicting the terms of the written instrument, Exhibit A. In this view, the court, in the ruling on the motion to strike out, did not establish any law of the case controlling its action in the motion for judgment on the pleadings. The second amended answer was the pleading of the case, as tried. The former one ceased to perform any further function as a pleading. Barber v. Reynolds, 33 Cal. 501. There is consequently no occasion here to revert to the action of the court and appellant's objection thereto, in excluding evidence under the first amended answer. Newell v. Meyendorff, 9 Mont. 254, 23 Pac. Rep. 333, is not in point. The court, in that case, examined a former pleading, which had been superseded by another, for one purpose only, and sought to make that purpose clear in the following language: "The old answer in the case at bar does not 'perform any further function as a pleading,' but we are not precluded from examining that answer, and the sustaining the demurrer thereto, for the purpose suggested infra." * * * We, at this time, refer to that ruling, and review the same, not as if an appeal had been taken therefrom to this court, but for the purpose of ascertaining whether the court in such decision, together with his latter reversal of his position in the same case, did not deprive defendant of a substantial right, and exclude him from his day in court. If that be true, defendant has a remedy." No such purpose as appears in Newell v. Meyendorff impels us, in the case now before us, to review the ruling of the court in excluding evidence under a pleading which had been superseded by an amended one, on which the case was tried.

Appellant claims a failure of consideration for the notes in that, quoting the answer, "the plaintiff afterwards wholly failed to cause said 85,000 shares to be transferred and issued to this defendant, and said shares still remain on the books of the company in the name of the plaintiff," but he goes on to admit "that the certificates representing said shares were deposited as collateral security in accordance with the terms of said agreement," thus placing them under the control of the defendant, when he paid the notes, as was agreed.

The last point which we will consider is the position taken by respondent in which he was sustained by the lower court, that the alleged parol agreement to exhaust the collateral before seeking aid in an action at law is pleading that which varies and contradicts the terms of a written instrument by parol evidence. The statute of this state is as follows: "Sec. 628. When the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms, and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives or successors in interest no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing, except"—(the exceptions are not here material.) Comp. St. div. 1. Appellant meets this situation with two arguments, which we find some difficulty in reconciling: (1) He pleads that in conversation between appellant, respondent, and respondent's attorney, the parties gave a contemporaneous construction to Exhibit A, to the effect that it meant that the collateral should be exhausted before an action was commenced, and that such contemporaneous construction should now obtain. (2) He argues that the parol agreement was independent and separate from the written instrument, and relating to different subject-matter, and therefore competent to be proved separately and by parol. If the first position be good, the second must fall, for if the parol agreement can be construed into the written instrument, the former was not independent and separate from the latter. Again, if the second position be sustained, the first is faulty, for if the parol agreement is separate and independent, and relating to different subject-matter, its intent could not be construed or imputed into the written instrument. We are of opinion that the state of facts here presented is one intended to be met by the statute above cited. If the agreement to exhaust collateral before suit brought be valid,—and it may be doubted whether it would be a defense in this action, (Creighton v. Vanderlip, 1 Mont. 400,)—it must be supported by a consideration. If it be independent and separate from the written contract, and relating to different subject-matter, we search in vain for a consideration, and the agreement must be void. It can be sustained only on the ground that its consideration is found in the main agreement. This being concluded, it follows that it was part of the principal contract, and not independent therefrom. Further argument to this effect is found in the fact that the agreement to first exhaust collateral was written upon the original notes, of which these in action are renewals. Again, the parol agreement was practically contemporaneous with the writings. The written agreement is the notes and the Exhibit A together, by which two writings it appears that the notes are absolute on their face, with no agreement for forbearance of suit. We cannot but conclude that the terms of the agreement were reduced to writing by the parties by virtue of the notes and the Exhibit A, and that there can now be no evidence of those terms other than the writings themselves. The judgment of the district court must therefore be affirmed.

The amendment to section 31 of the act relating to crimes and punishments as enacted in 1887, which provides for the punishment of any male person having illicit sexual intercourse with any female person under 18 years of age, by confinement and hard labor for not less than 5 years nor more than 21 years, is not unconstitutional or void.

2. In such a case, where the information charges, among other things, that the defendant, Charles W. White, did "commit the crime of rape by then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and carnally knowing one Lottie Linden," etc., "contrary to the form of the statute," etc., the information is not insufficient for the reason that it does not allege that Lottie Linden was not the wife of Charles W. White.

3. The defendant filed a plea in abatement which contains, among other things, the following: "Defendant says that, at the date of filing the information in this case, he was not a fugitive from the justice of the state of Kansas, nor had he been at any time such fugitive. Defendant further says that no preliminary examination has ever, at any time, been given him in this action, nor did he at any time waive such preliminary examination." The court sustained a demurrer to the first sentence of the matter above quoted, and virtually struck it out of the plea. Held error.

Appeal from district court, Norton county; G. WEBB BERTRAM, Judge.

L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and L. H. Thompson, for appellee. Louis K. Pratt and E. W. Norlin, for appellant.

VALENTINE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in the district court of Norton county, sentencing the defendant, Charles W. White, to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of five years for the commission of an alleged rape "by carnally and unlawfully knowing" Lottie Linden, in violation of the provisions of section 31 of the act relating to crimes and punishments, as amended in 1887. Laws 1887, c. 150, § 1; Gen. St. 1889, par. 2152. This section reads as follows: "Sec. 31. Every person who shall be convicted of rape, either by carnally and unlawfully knowing any female under the age of eighteen years, or by forcibly ravishing any woman of the age of eighteen years or upwards, shall be punished by confinement and hard labor not less than five years nor more than twenty-one years." This section of the statute is now precisely the same as it was prior to the amendment in 1887, except that where the word "eighteen" now occurs in the amended section, the word "ten" occurred in the original section, and between the words "female" and "under" in the amended section, the word "child" occurred in the original section. It is unquestionably true that in 1887, and before and since, our laws relating to illicit intercourse between the sexes, and for the punishment thereof, and for the protection of boys and girls, and others, and of society generally, greatly needed, and still need, amendment, but the amendment that was in fact made in 1887 may be subject to considerable criticism. It denominates certain conduct rape which is not in fact rape, and could not in the nature of things be such, unless the meaning of the word "rape" should be greatly changed. It attempts to accomplish a thing by the use of indirect language which might be much better accomplished by the use of direct language. It inflicts a punishment for mere fornication of vastly greater severity than was ever before inflicted for such a wrong, and much greater than the punishment imposed for the greater wrong of adultery, or of sexual intercourse coupled with seduction, where the female is over 18 years of age. In attempting to provide for the protection of girls, it wholly overlooks the protection of boys. It overlooks the fact that some girls under the age of 18 years are incorrigibly wicked and depraved,—even common prostitutes. It overlooks the fact that girls generally, whether good or bad, have intelligence and the capacity to think, to will, and to act, long before they arrive at the age of 18 years. It in effect presupposes that boys of the same age with girls, or even much younger than girls, are vastly their superiors in mental capacity, and in the power to exercise volition. It recognizes a greater difference between the sexes, and a greater superiority on the part of the males over the females, than has ever before been promulgated or admitted or believed by any person or set of persons, although it has generally been maintained that there always have been sufficient differences existing between the sexes to justify all the great differences in the powers, privileges, disabilities, and immunities which, by virtue of the laws, have heretofore existed between the sexes. The defendant in the present case was a boy 19 years of age, and the female with whom he had the sexual intercourse was a girl sixteen years of age. Each lacked just two years of having arrived at the age of majority. Their sexual intercourse with each other was had at divers times from April 15, 1889, up to May 25, 1889. Also, from the record brought to this court, it would seem that the girl had also had improper relations with other male persons besides the defendant. On February 12, 1890, the girl gave birth to a child, of which she testified that the defendant was the father. It also seems that, with regard to the intercourse between these parties, no conjugal right was violated, no force or fraud or seduction or promise of marriage has been imputed. They were not of kin to each other. Both willingly participated in the wrongful acts; both in fact consented, and each had ample capacity to know what he or she was doing, and to consent; and none of the improper acts committed by them, whether of sexual intercourse or otherwise, were committed in public, or in the presence of others. Indeed, except for the foregoing statute, their acts would constitute nothing more than pure and simple fornication.

It is claimed on the part of the defendant that the foregoing statute either can have no application to this case, or, so far as it does apply to this case, it is unconstitutional and void, for the reason that it conflicts with section 9 of the bill of rights, because it inflicts cruel and unusual punishment, and is in conflict with the spirit of the bill of rights generally, and is in violation of common sense, common reason, and common justice; and the following authorities are cited in support of this claim: Anderson v. City of Wellington, 40 Kan. 173, 19 Pac. Rep. 719; 3 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 674, note 3, and cases there cited; Potter's Dwar. St. 76-78.

It is claimed that the legislature cannot convert pure and simple fornication into rape, or provide a punishment for the same as though it were rape. The statutes of this state relating to illicit intercourse between the sexes, when such statutes are compared with each other, are peculiar. Under them sexual intercourse between unmarried persons, where no extraneous facts exist to magnify the wrong, is never as to the female an offense, and is never as to the male an offense, unless the female is under 18 years of age. And where the intercourse is procured under a promise of marriage, it is never an offense with regard to the female, and is only an offense with regard to the male where the female is under 21 years of age, and it is not then an offense with regard to the male, unless the female is either under 18 years of age, or is both under the age of 21 years, and of good repute. Gen. St. 1889, pars. 2152, 2157. And even where conjugal rights are violated, as in adultery, or where the sexual intercourse is coupled with acts of an openly lewd, lascivious, or indecent character, the acts of the parties constitute only a comparatively insignificant case of misdemeanor. The statute on the subject reads as follows: "Sec. 232. Every person who shall be guilty of adultery, and every man and woman (one or both of whom are married, and not to each other) who shall lewdly and lasciviously abide and cohabit with each other, and every person, married or unmarried, who shall be guilty of open, gross lewdness, or lascivious behavior, or of any open and notorious act of public indecency, grossly scandalous, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding six months, or by fine, not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment." Act relating to crimes and punishments, § 232; Gen. St. 1889, par. 2369. Now why should adultery, where conjugal rights are violated, and where the parties are of mature age, be only a trivial misdemeanor, while fornication pure and simple between boys and girls should be a high crime, and a felony as to the boy?

Lord Macaulay in his History of England, (volume 1, c. 2,) in speaking of the Puritans, who were generally the most austere moral and religious people that ever existed, while they were in power in the time of Cromwell, says: "Against the lighter vices the ruling faction waged war with a zeal little tempered by humanity or by common sense. * * * The illicit intercourse of the sexes, even where neither violence nor seduction was imputed, where no public scandal was given, where no conjugal right was violated, was made a misdemeanor." In this state, instead of making the acts of which Lord Macaulay makes mention a misdemeanor only, they are, if the female is under 18 years of age, made a high crime and a felony as to the male, for which he may be imprisoned in the penitentiary at hard labor for a period of 21 years. From the earliest times in Kansas, it has been the tendency of legislation and of thought to consider female persons as having some intelligence, some mental capacity, and some power of volition, and to make them as nearly equal with males with regard to their lives, liberties, persons, property, vocations, rights, powers, privileges, and immunities as it is possible to make them. Under the laws as they now exist, they are as much entitled to their children as males, and may carry on business as freely as males, and the elective franchise has been greatly extended to them, and yet the statute which we are now considering inaugurates a theory of vast inequality between them. Under this statute a boy and girl, both under the age of 18 years and of the same age, or the boy the younger, may engage in an act for the doing of which the boy may be imprisoned at hard labor in the penitentiary for 21 years, while the girl has committed no offense, and this for the reason that in contemplation of law she has no mental capacity to consent to the act, no intellectual volition. It is true she may be the older of the two, the more intelligent and aggressive of the two, the real actor in the transaction, and the seducer,—if either is a seducer,—and yet, under the law, she has no mental capacity to consent or will power to act, and therefore has not committed any offense, not even a misdemeanor, while the boy has committed a great crime, and if he is over 16 years of age may be sent to the penitentiary, and be there confined at hard labor for 21 years as aforesaid; but if he is under 16 years of age, he would be confined in the county jail only, or be sent to the state reform school, and it would make no difference that the girl might be a common prostitute, his punishment would be the same. Now, if it is necessary that such a severe punishment should be inflicted upon a boy for committing pure and simple fornication, it would seem that some slight degree of punishment might properly be inflicted upon the girl; and, if it is necessary that such a severe punishment should be inflicted upon either, it would seem that some slight degree of punishment might properly be inflicted upon any person, male or female, guilty of illicit sexual intercourse, although the same might be only fornication and the female be over 18 or over 21 years of age; and, if such a severe punishment may properly be inflicted upon any person for pure and simple fornication, it would seem that the greatest of punishments would not be too severe for any person of full age who should commit the greater wrong of adultery or of sexual intercourse coupled with seduction.

We agree with counsel for the defendant that "it is not competent for the legislature to make that rape which, in the very nature of things and common justice and sense, is not," but courts in construing statutes do not look at mere forms or phrases, or even at the improper use of language, but they look at the substance of things, and try to ascertain what was the real intention of the legislature; and evidently the legislature, in passing the foregoing statute, intended that in all cases of illicit intercourse, where the female is under 18 years of age, the male should be punished by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary for a period of not more than 21 years, nor less than 5 years, although the act might be pure and simple fornication, and nothing else. Instead of enacting this, however, in direct terms, the legislature chose to accomplish the same result in an indirect manner, and by amending that section of the act relating to crimes and punishments (to-wit, section 31) which relates to rape. When this section was first enacted, in the earlier days of Kansas, it was evidently believed by the legislature that the girls of Kansas then had the capacity to give their consent to sexual intercourse at the age of 10 years, and that they had not such capacity at any earlier age; and hence the age of 10 years was fixed as the age of consent; but when the section was amended, in 1887, so as to make it read as it now reads, it would seem that the law-makers believed that the girls of Kansas at that time had no capacity to give any intelligent consent to sexual intercourse until they arrived at the age of 18 years. In substance, however, the law-makers simply intended to punish any male person by imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor for a term not exceeding 21 years who might be guilty of any kind of illicit sexual intercourse with any girl under 18 years of age, whether she consented or not, and whatever might be the surrounding circumstances, and although the intercourse might be pure and simple fornication. With respect to the severity of the punishment, while we think it is true that it is a severer one than has ever before been provided for in any other state or country for such an offense, yet we cannot say that the statute is void for that reason. Imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor is not of itself a cruel or unusual punishment, within the meaning of section 9 of the bill of rights of the constitution, for it is a kind of punishment which has been resorted to ever since Kansas has had any existence, and is a kind of punishment common in all civilized countries. That section of the constitution probably, however, relates to the kind of punishment to be inflicted, and not to its duration. Although the punishment in this case may be considered severe, and much severer indeed than the punishment for offenses of much greater magnitude, as adultery, or sexual intercourse coupled with seduction, yet we cannot say that the act providing for it is unconstitutional or void.

It is also claimed on the part of the defendant that the information does not charge a public offense, and this for the reason that it does not charge that the prosecutrix, Lottie Linden, was not the wife of the defendant. Now while it does not in terms charge any such thing, yet it does so by the clearest of implications. It charges as follows: "That on or about the 12th day of May, A. D. 1889, in said county of Norton and state of Kansas, one Charles W. White did then and there unlawfully and feloniously commit the crime of rape, by then and there unlawfully, feloniously, and carnally knowing one Lottie Linden, she, the said Lottie Linden, then and there being a female under the age of eighteen years, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas." Now, if Lottie Linden had been the wife of the defendant Charles W. White, her name would have been White, and the intercourse charged would not have been a "crime" or "rape" nor committed "unlawfully and feloniously," as charged, and other matters are also charged, which could not have been true if Lottie Linden had been the wife of the defendant. The charge is for constructive rape, and is stated substantially in the language of the statute, and in a prosecution for rape it was never necessary to state that the person ravished was not the wife of the defendant.

It is further claimed on the part of the defendant that the court below erred in sustaining a demurrer by the state to a portion of the defendant's plea in abatement. The prosecution was upon an information filed by the county attorney, and the offense charged therein was and is a felony. The second paragraph of the plea in abatement reads as follows: "Defendant says that, at the date of filing the information in this cause, he was not a fugitive from the justice of the state of Kansas, nor had he been at any time such fugitive. Defendant further says that no preliminary examination has ever at any time been given him in this action, nor did he at any time waive such preliminary examination." The state demurred to this paragraph of the plea in abatement, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to entitle the defendant to a hearing thereon, and the court below sustained the demurrer. It seems to be understood, however, that the demurrer was sustained only as to the first sentence of the second paragraph, but whether it was sustained only as to the first sentence of the paragraph or as to the whole of the same, we think the ruling was and is erroneous. It was necessary that the whole of the paragraph should be true, in order to entitle the defendant to have the action abated. It was necessary for the abatement of the action that he should not have been a fugitive from justice, that he should not have had a preliminary examination, and that he should not have waived the same; and striking out the first sentence of the paragraph which alleged that he was not a fugitive from justice rendered the whole of the paragraph insufficient, and the entire plea in abatement insufficient. The striking out of the first sentence of the second paragraph of the plea was as fatal to the sufficiency of the plea as the striking out of the whole of the plea would have been. Section 69 of the Criminal Code, so far as it is necessary to quote it, reads as follows: "Sec. 69. No information shall be filed against any person for any felony, until such person shall have had a preliminary examination therefor, as provided by law, before a justice of the peace, or other examining magistrate or officer, unless such person shall waive his right to such examination: provided, however, that informations may be filed without such examination against fugitives from justice, and in misdemeanor cases not cognizable before justices of the peace." This is sufficiently clear without further comment. For the error of the court below in sustaining the aforesaid demurrer, the judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

JOHNSTON, J., concurring.

HORTON, C. J. I concur in the syllabus of the foregoing opinion, and also in the judgment to be rendered, but I do not concur in many things stated in the opinion itself.

STATE V. MATTHEWS.

FALSE PRETENSES—BLANK DEED—FILLING IN NAME OF GRANTEE—MORTGAGE BY FRAUDULENT GRANTEE.

1. The charge of committing the offense of obtaining money or property under false pretenses cannot be maintained in any case unless it appears not only that a false pretense was in fact made, but also that it was made with the intention of cheating or defrauding some person, and that such person was in fact cheated or defrauded to his or her injury.

2. Where a deed of conveyance of real estate, perfect in form, except that the grantee's name is left blank, is duly executed and acknowledged, and afterwards the blank is filled contrary to the instructions of the grantor, and to his or her injury, with the name of a person not intended by the grantor to be the grantee, and with full knowledge on the part of such substituted grantee, held, that the deed is void as to such substituted grantee, or as to any one with notice of the fraud.

3. But where, afterwards, such deed is recorded, and then the substituted and fraudulent grantee procures a loan of money from an innocent person, and executes a mortgage on the property conveyed by the deed, and such innocent person loans the money on the strength of such deed, and of the false pretenses made by such grantee that he had purchased the real estate conveyed by the deed, and that he was then the owner thereof in fee, held, that the mortgage will be held to be valid.

4. Whenever one of two innocent persons must suffer loss on account of the wrongful acts of a third, he who has enabled the third person to occasion the loss must be the person who shall suffer.

5. Where such substituted and fraudulent grantee is afterwards prosecuted criminally for obtaining the money from such innocent person upon the false pretenses that he had purchased the real estate conveyed by the deed, and that he was then the owner thereof in fee, held, that the defendant cannot be legally convicted, for the reason that under the circumstances he did not and could not cheat or defraud the innocent mortgagee or person who loaned him the money.

Appeal from district court, Shawnee county; A. H. VANCE, Judge pro tem.

This was a criminal prosecution upon an information containing two counts in which the defendant, M. E. Matthews, was charged with obtaining a check and signature and money upon false pretenses. A trial was had before the court and a jury, and, at the close of the evidence for the state, the prosecution elected to rely for a conviction upon the second count of the information, and entered a nolle prosequi as to the first count. The aforesaid second count, omitting title and signature, reads as follows: "And in the name and by the authority of the state of Kansas, I, R. B. Welch, county attorney in and for the county of Shawnee, in the state of Kansas, who prosecutes for and on behalf of said state, in the district court, sitting in and for the county of Shawnee, and duly empowered to inform of offenses committed within said county of Shawnee, comes now here and gives the court to further understand and be informed that M. E. Matthews, late of the said county of Shawnee, at the county of Shawnee in the state of Kansas aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of said court, on the 29th day of November, A. D. 1887, then and there being, and then and there intending and devising to cheat and defraud one Jonathan Thomas, did then and there knowingly, unlawfully, fraudulently, feloniously, falsely, and designedly pretend and represent to said Jonathan Thomas that he, the said M. E. Matthews, had bought of Mary J. Wallace, the undivided one-fifth interest in the following described real estate, to-wit: The north-west quarter of section number twenty, (20,) in township number eleven (11) south, of range number fifteen (15) east, of the sixth (6th) principal meridian, situated in Shawnee county, state of Kansas, and that he was the owner in fee of the same. Whereas, in truth and in fact, he, the said M. E. Matthews, had not bought of Mary J. Wallace the undivided one-fifth interest in the said real estate, and he, the said M. E. Matthews, was not the owner in fee of the same, as he, the said M. E. Matthews, then and there well knew, and said M. E. Matthews well knew that each and all of said representations and pretenses were false and fraudulent, and without foundation in fact. And said M. E. Matthews then and there requested of the said Jonathan Thomas a loan of money, and the said Jonathan Thomas then and there believing and relying upon said pretenses and representations as true, the said M. E. Matthews then and there, and by the said false pretenses, designedly made as aforesaid, designedly, fraudulently, and feloniously obtained from said Jonathan Thomas an order, and the signature of the said Jonathan Thomas by the name of 'J. Thomas' to said order, whereby the said Jonathan Thomas, by the name of 'J. Thomas,' requested and ordered the Citizens' Bank of Topeka, Kansas, to pay to the said M. E. Matthews, or order, the sum of $382.00, which said order was in the following words and figures, and of which the following is a copy, to-wit: 'No. ——. North Topeka, Kansas, November 29th, 1887. Citizens' Bank, pay to M. E. Matthews, or order, three hundred and eighty-two dollars, ($382.00.) J. THOMAS.' Which said order so as aforesaid obtained was then and there of the value of $382.00, and was the personal property of said Jonathan Thomas; that the said Citizens' Bank was then and there a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas; and said M. E. Matthews on the same day took said order to said Citizens' Bank, and indorsed and surrendered the same to said bank, and received from said bank the sum of $382.00 in current money, of the value of $382.00, the personal property of said Jonathan Thomas; and all of this the said M. E. Matthews did designedly, knowingly, fraudulently, and feloniously, for the purpose and with the design to cheat and defraud the said Jonathan Thomas, contrary to the form of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Kansas." The first count was substantially the same as the second count, except that it alleged that Jonathan Thomas acted as the agent of Louisa Havens in loaning the money; that the money loaned belonged to her; and that it was she whom Matthews intended to and did cheat and defraud. There are also some other allegations in the first count which were not included in the second count, to-wit, allegations concerning an abstract of title, and a note and mortgage executed by Matthews to Havens as evidence of and security for the aforesaid loan. The defendant was found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for the term of two years; and he now appeals to this court.

VALENTINE, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The principal facts involved in this case, as the evidence on the part of the prosecution tended to show, and as was evidently found by the trial court and the jury, stated briefly, are substantially as follows: Prior to 1886, A. C. Wallace died intestate, leaving as his heirs his widow, Phoebe J. Wallace, and two children, Mary J. Wallace and Phineas Wallace, and also leaving real and personal property. Afterwards, and on July 15, 1886, the widow, Phoebe J. Wallace, died intestate, leaving as her heirs five children, Mary J. Wallace, Phineas Wallace, Jonathan W. Blossom, David Blossom, and a daughter, the last three being children by a former husband; and she also left real and personal property. Mary J. Wallace had a claim against her mother's estate of $800, which was contested, but which was allowed to her by the probate court on October 28, 1886. She also desired to have both the estates settled, and to have all her interest therein separated from the interests of the other heirs by partition or otherwise, and for this and other reasons she employed the defendant, M. E. Matthews, who was an attorney at law, to assist her in her business. On November 14, 1887, Matthews wrote and sent to her a letter requesting her to call that day at his office at 10 or 11 o'clock. She did not receive the letter in time to call at that time, but called the next day, when she was told by him to call on the 16th, and that he would then tell her what he wanted. On the 16th she again called, and he stated to her that, on the day on which he sent for her, Jonathan W. Blossom, Phineas Wallace, and David Overmyer, another attorney at law, had been at his office waiting for her, and proposed to buy her interest in the land belonging to her mother's estate, except the Harrison-Street property, but that she did not come, and that they were compelled to go away, and that they had left a deed, perfect in form in every respect, except that the grantee's name therein was left blank, for her to execute if she would accept their proposition; and that the blank was to be filled so as to make it a deed to one of her half-brothers, either Jonathan W. Blossom or David Blossom, for which they would pay her $2,500. After some talk about the price, and to save litigation, she agreed to execute the deed for the said sum of $2,500, and it was agreed between her attorney, the defendant, and herself, that if the transaction should be consummated the name of her half-brother should be inserted in the deed, and the deed should then, on the payment of the $2,500, be delivered to such grantee, but that, if neither of her half-brothers should take her interest at that price, then the deed was to be destroyed. With this understanding, she signed and acknowledged the deed, blank as aforesaid, and left the same with the defendant, Matthews. Afterwards, Matthews filled up the blank in the deed with his own name as grantee, and afterwards, and on November 29, 1887, deposited such deed in the office of the register of deeds for record, and then procured an abstract of title showing that Mary J. Wallace's interest in the land had been transferred to himself, and that he was then the owner in fee thereof, and he then went to Jonathan Thomas, who carried on the business of loaning money for himself and others, and sought to procure a loan from Thomas, and offered to secure the loan by mortgaging the aforesaid property, and he showed to Thomas the aforesaid abstract of title, showing title in himself, and he represented to Thomas that he had purchased the interest of Mary J. Wallace in the aforesaid estate, and that he owned the same in fee. Thomas at the time had authority to loan $400 in money for Louisa Havens, and he concluded to make the loan to Matthews upon the aforesaid security. He therefore accepted from Matthews a promissory note executed by Matthews to Louisa Havens for that amount, and also accepted from Matthews a mortgage of the foregoing real-estate interest of Mary J. Wallace executed by Matthews to Louisa Havens to secure the loan. But Thomas, at the time, not having that amount of money on hand belonging to Louisa Havens, advanced the same out of his own money. He charged Matthews $18 for consummating the loan, and then delivered to Matthews a check on the Citizens' Bank of North Topeka for $382, and Matthews presented the check to the bank, and drew the money it called for on the same day. The check reads as follows: "No. ____ North Topeka, Kansas, November 29th, 1887. Citizens' Bank, pay to M. E. Matthews, or order, three hundred and eighty-two dollars, ($382.00.) J. THOMAS." The defendant, Matthews, testified as a witness in the court below, and testified to a different state of facts from those above given, but evidently the court and jury did not believe him.

We shall decide this case upon the theory that the defendant, Matthews, in fact, made the aforesaid statements to Mary J. Wallace which the state claims he made concerning the alleged statements made to him by her brother, half-brother, and Overmyer, about purchasing her interest in the Wallace estate, and concerning their leaving the blank deed with him for her to execute so as to make it a deed to one of her half-brothers, but that all such statements and representations of Matthews were false and fraudulent; that at the time when he made the statements to Mary J. Wallace, and when the blank deed was signed and acknowledged by her, he intended to cheat and defraud her, and intended to fill up the deed so as to make it a deed to himself for the property; and that by making the statements, and procuring the deed, and filling up the blank so as to make it a deed to himself, he himself at that time committed a crime. And we shall also decide the case upon the theory that when he represented and pretended to Jonathan Thomas that he had purchased the aforesaid interest of Mary J. Wallace in the Wallace estate, and that he was then the owner thereof in fee, he well knew that his representations and pretensions were false and fraudulent, and that he thereby intended to cheat and defraud some person; but the questions then arise, whom did he intend to cheat and defraud, and who was in fact cheated and defrauded? The defendant was in fact tried only upon the second count of the information, as a nolle prosequi was entered as to the other count before he was called upon to introduce any evidence; and in this second count upon which he was tried the only false pretenses alleged were and are as follows: "He, the said Matthews, had bought of Mary J. Wallace the undivided one-fifth interest in the following described real estate, to-wit, [and here follows a description of the property,] and that he was the owner in fee of the same." It is also alleged in the said second count that these false pretenses were made to Jonathan Thomas, and for the purpose of cheating and defrauding him; and there is no allegation in such count that such false pretenses were made to any one else, or for the purpose or with the intention of cheating or defrauding any one else. It is not alleged that any false pretense was made to Mary J. Wallace or to Louisa Havens, nor is it alleged that either Mary J. Wallace or Louisa Havens was cheated or defrauded or intended to be cheated or defrauded; hence, the only questions presented to us for consideration are whether the false pretenses made to Jonathan Thomas were made with the intention of cheating or defrauding him, and whether by means thereof he was in fact cheated or defrauded. As before stated, we shall decide this case upon the theory that all the false pretenses alleged in the information or which the evidence tended to prove were in fact made; but still the questions remain to be considered as to whether they were in fact made for the purpose of cheating or defrauding Jonathan Thomas, and whether he was in fact cheated or defrauded by them. The charge of committing the offense of obtaining money or property under false pretenses cannot be maintained in any case unless it appears not only that a false pretense was in fact made, but also that it was made with the intention of cheating or defrauding some person, and that such person was in fact cheated or defrauded to his or her injury. These are elementary principles, and really require no citation of authorities; but still we might refer to the following cases as instructive: In re Snyder, 17 Kan. 542; In re Payson, 23 Kan. 757; State v. Lewis, 26 Kan. 123; State v. Metach, 37 Kan. 222; <sup>1</sup>In re Schurman, 40 Kan. 533, 20 Pac. Rep. 277; In re Cameron, 44 Kan. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 90; State v. Asher, 50 Ark. 427, 8 S. W. Rep. 177; People v. Wakely, 62 Mich. 297, 28 N. W. Rep. 871. In the case last cited the following language is used by the court: "The object of the statute is to punish cheats, and it must be made to appear, not only that some person has been defrauded, but that the person making the representations intended to defraud the person by the representations made. * * * It is true that there need be but one false pretense, and, though several are set out in the information, yet, if any of them are proved which amounts in law to a false pretense, the information is sustained. But it does not amount in law to a false pretense unless made with a fraudulent intent, and the person parting with the property is actually defrauded. In all cases of this kind three things, at least, must concur: The intent to defraud, the false pretense made with the intent, and the fraud accomplished." See 62 Mich. 302, 303, 28 N. W. Rep. 873. Was Jonathan Thomas cheated or defrauded? He received from Matthews a promissory note and a mortgage executed by Matthews to Louisa Havens which were all that he desired or expected to receive. Of course, however, he expected the note and mortgage to be legal and valid, and, if they were not, then he may have been cheated and defrauded; but, if they were, then he was not cheated or defrauded. Were they legal and valid? As to Matthews they were undoubtedly unimpeachable instruments, and could unquestionably be enforced against him as such. In fact the note was and is an absolutely valid note as to all the world, but is the mortgage a valid instrument? This is really the only material question in the case. We suppose that it will be conceded by all that a deed or mortgage or any other instrument affecting real estate, where the name of the grantee, mortgagee, or vendee is left blank, is void, so long as such blank remains. Some courts hold that if the instrument is afterwards filled up in accordance with the directions of the maker it is valid, whether it is filled up in his presence or absence, whether before or after its delivery, whether such directions are in writing or only in parol, and whether with or without the knowledge of the party holding under the instrument; but other courts hold otherwise. Upon these questions the decisions of the courts are not uniform. We believe, however, that all the courts hold that if the instrument is filled up contrary to the directions of the maker and to his injury, and with full knowledge on the part of the party who takes and holds under it, the instrument will be held to be absolutely null and void as to him. Ayres v. Probasco, 14 Kan. 175; Schintz v. McManamy, 33 Wis. 299; Upton v. Archer, 41 Cal. 85. See, also, the following: Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. 24; Whitaker v. Miller, 83 Ill. 381; Sims v. Hervey, 19 Iowa, 274. On the other hand, however, it is generally held that if the instrument is filled up in accordance with the instructions, written or oral, of the maker, in his presence or absence, before or after its delivery, and under it the property at that time or afterwards comes into the hands of some innocent and bona fide holder for value, the instrument will be held to be valid. Knaggs v. Mastin, 9 Kan. 532; Chapman v. Veach, 32 Kan. 167, 4 Pac. Rep. 100; McClain v. McClain, 52 Iowa, 272, 3 N. W. Rep. 60; Field v. Staggs, 52 Mo. 534; Ragsdale v. Robinson, 48 Tex. 380; Van Etta v. Evenson, 28 Wis. 33; Schintz v. McManamy, 33 Wis. 299; Pence v. Arbuckle, 22 Minn. 417. But none of the foregoing cases is the present case. In the present case, the directions of the maker with reference to filling the blank were oral. The instrument was filled up in the absence of the maker, and not in accordance with, but contrary to, her directions, and to her injury; but the parties now claiming benefits under it, Louisa Havens and Jonathan Thomas, (she having acted through her agent, Jonathan Thomas, and he having acted personally and for her,) acted innocently and in good faith, and without the slightest knowledge of Matthews' fraud, or of the imperfections or infirmities of the instrument when it left the hands of the maker, Mary J. Wallace, and they parted with value on the strength of the instrument as it appeared when they or either of them first saw it, and as the maker, Mary J. Wallace, and her agent, Matthews, made it to appear. In all such cases the weight of authority is that the instrument will be held to be valid to the extent of the innocent party's rights under it, or the rights which he or she would have under it if it were valid. Chapman v. Veach, 32 Kan. 167, 4 Pac. Rep. 100; Pence v. Arbuckle, 22 Minn. 417; Garland v. Wells, 15 Neb. 298, 18 N. W. Rep. 132; Clark v. Allen, 34 Iowa, 190; Swartz v. Ballou, 47 Iowa, 188. This is founded upon the general principle of law often announced by courts, and which has become axiomatic,—"That whenever one of two innocent persons must suffer loss on account of the wrongful acts of a third, he who has enabled the third person to occasion the loss must be the person who shall suffer." Jordan v. McNeil, 25 Kan. 465; 2 Herm. Estop. §§ 766, 767, and the numerous cases there cited. Upon this same principle it is almost universally held that whenever an instrument is procured from one person by the fraud or villainy of another, even if such fraud or villainy should amount to a criminal offense, if all the rights which the instrument apparently gives should at that time, or afterwards, be transferred to another who should be an innocent and bona fide holder for value, the innocent and bona fide holder could enforce the instrument against the maker, although the maker might also be an innocent person. Jordan v. McNeil, 25 Kan. 459; McNeil v. Jordan, 28 Kan. 7; Ort v. Fowler, 31 Kan. 478, 2 Pac. Rep. 580; Chapman v. Veach, 32 Kan. 167, 4 Pac. Rep. 100; McNab v. Young, 81 Ill. 12; Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55. In such a case the maker would be estopped from claiming that the instrument was void as against the innocent bona fide holder. There may be some authorities that hold a contrary doctrine, but, if so, we do not choose to follow them. The prosecution cites, among others, the following: Ayres v. Probasco, 14 Kan. 175; Howell v. McCrie, 36 Kan. 636, 14 Pac. Rep. 257; Drury v. Foster, 2 Wall. 24; Whitaker v. Miller, 83 Ill. 381; Upton v. Archer, 41 Cal. 85; Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55; Taylor v. Davis, 72 Mo. 291; Sims v. Hervey, 19 Iowa, 274; Wilcox v. Howell, 44 N. Y. 398. While it is possible that some of these authorities are to some extent in conflict with the views herein expressed, yet generally, we think, they are not in conflict, but are in harmony therewith.

Returning to the alleged false pretenses made by Matthews to Jonathan Thomas, it is clear that, if the statements and representations made by Matthews were true and not false, Matthews should not be convicted; but, as before stated, we shall assume that all such statements and representations were false. Then if Jonathan Thomas knew that they were false, or, in other words, if he knew just how Matthews obtained the aforesaid blank deed from Mary J. Wallace, and just how the blank in the deed was filled up by Matthews so as to make the deed appear to be a perfect deed to himself, then Jonathan Thomas was not cheated or defrauded, and the defendant should not be convicted. But these are not the real facts of the case. Thomas did not have the slightest knowledge or suspicion concerning Matthews' fraud, and neither did Louisa Havens. Probably she never saw or heard of Matthews until after the mortgage from him to her was executed. Thomas and Louisa Havens being innocent parties they obtained all that they expected to obtain, and were therefore not cheated or defrauded, and therefore and for that reason the defendant, Matthews, could not legally be found guilty. The defendant's counsel in their brief upon this subject use the following among other language: "Now, we repeat that the only person injured and defrauded in any respect, if the facts were and are precisely as claimed by the state, was Mary J. Wallace. Whether an information could be framed in proper and apt terms to charge false and fraudulent representations made to Thomas for the purpose of securing a loan of money from him, with intent to cheat and defraud Mary J. Wallace, is a question we need not discuss here. But it is plain beyond possibility of doubt that, upon the facts as proven by the state, defendant never had any 'intent to cheat and defraud Louisa Havens,' nor any intent 'to cheat and defraud Jonathan Thomas;' because, as to them or to either of them, the note and mortgage executed by him were and are perfect security for the money obtained, and he knew it. The record does not disclose a single word of testimony showing an 'intent on the part of the defendant to cheat or defraud Jonathan Thomas;' no proof that Thomas was in any respect cheated, defrauded, or injured; no evidence showing or tending to show that Thomas could in any wise be cheated or defrauded out of money loaned by him to defendant, or paid to defendant upon the order which he received from Thomas on account of that loan." Therefore, it is urged by the defendant's counsel that he cannot legally be found guilty of any criminal offense in this case. There are many other questions discussed in the briefs of counsel, but with the views which we entertain, and which we have already expressed, we do not think that further comment is necessary. In our opinion the defendant was erroneously convicted and sentenced, and therefore the judgment of the court below will be reversed. All the justices concurring.

DAUGHERTY V. FOWLER.

SALE ON CONDITION—CASH PAYMENT—RIGHT TO RECLAIM GOODS.

The plaintiff below, a merchant at Kansas City, Mo., shipped 50 tubs of butterine to P., at Ft. Scott, to be paid for "cash on arrival." The merchandise was received, and freight paid thereon, but the buyer failed to remit the purchase price. The goods were stored, and within three days P. wrote the plaintiff that he was unable to make payment; that the property was his; that he had placed the property in the hands of a reliable party, who would take care of it until he could hear from the plaintiff. The letter was received on the morning of the following day at 8:30 o'clock, and the plaintiff then determined to take the property back. At noon of the same day, the butterine was attached by one of the firm creditors of P. Held, that the sale and shipment were on condition of payment in cash, upon arrival of the goods, and, in an action of replevin, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the property.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Bourbon county; C. O. FRENCH, Judge.

J. D. McCleverty, for plaintiff in error. Ware, Biddle & Cory and Ira D. Bronson, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. This was an action in replevin, commenced by the plaintiff below, in the district court of Bourbon county, to recover 50 tubs of butterine from the sheriff, who held the same by an order of attachment issued against the property of T. W. Price and D. B. Fabyan, who had been doing business in Ft. Scott under the name of T. W. Price & Co., but had sold out their business some time before the attachment was issued. On the 24th of November, 1885, T. W. Price went to Kansas City, Mo., and made an arrangement with the plaintiff below whereby he was to have shipped to him at Ft. Scott 50 tubs of butterine, payable cash on arrival. The butterine was not made at the time. It was to be procured from other parties, and there was no selection of the article, except by sample. The butterine was shipped on Friday the 27th of November, and reached Ft. Scott the following morning, and was immediately received by Price, and the freight paid, and stored in a cellar. The goods were invoiced in the usual way, followed by detailed weight of each separate tub, and written on the bill were the words, "Terms cash." On Monday, the 30th of November, Price caused the butterine to be moved into a different part of the cellar from where it had been previously stored, and removed all the shipping tags, and on Tuesday morning, December 1st, wrote the plaintiff that he was unable to pay for the butterine; that the goods belonged to the plaintiff; and he had placed them in the possession of a reliable party, who would take care of them until he could hear from the plaintiff. It appears from the testimony that this letter reached the plaintiff below at 8:30 o'clock on Wednesday morning, December 2d, who concluded to accept the proposition contained in the letter, and take back the shipment of butterine. It was in evidence that Price had owed the plaintiff below $10.70 upon some other dealings, and had paid out for freight on the merchandise $8.05. At noon of the same day, the butterine was attached at the suit of one of the creditors of T. W. Price & Co. A trial was had in the district court, and, upon the conclusion of the evidence, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff.

The first complaint the plaintiff in error makes is to the introduction of the letter written by Price on the 1st of December. He contends that it could only be made competent by proof of the genuineness of the signature. The objection to the introduction of this letter was because it was incompetent and irrelevant. This objection in the court below does not reach the objection counsel now seeks to raise,—the genuineness of the letter. No objection was there interposed that sufficient preliminary proof had not been offered to admit the letter in evidence. This should have been done to entitle him to raise the question here. An objection to the introduction of evidence should be specific. Abbott v. Colman, 22 Kan. 250; Railway Co. v. Cutter, 19 Kan. 83.

It is further insisted that "mental conclusion" reached to take the goods back was not competent; that the only way to prove that the goods were taken back was what was in fact done. The acceptance of Price's offer was an affirmative act, and not a mere mental conclusion, as assumed by the court below. This we regard as the decisive question in this case. Let us consider it. The facts are virtually undisputed. The goods were shipped to be paid for upon arrival. They were received by Price, and the freight paid, and stored by him. Before the rights of any other parties intervened, the vendee said to the vendor: "I cannot pay you for the goods, and I have placed them in charge of a party who will take care of them until he hears from you. The goods are yours. I have done what I thought best." Does this proposition, made by the vendee and received by the vendor, require affirmation upon the part of the vendor to make the transaction complete? An answer to this question is a decision of this case. If this proposition stood alone and in no way connected with what had preceded it, and was an independent offer to sell certain goods, it would be less difficult of solution. We would say that an acceptance was necessary upon the part of the plaintiff in error, to make the offer binding, and the transaction complete. But we must consider the whole transaction, from its inception until the transmittal of the letter, and say whether the title of the property in question ever passed to Price. The terms of the sale were "cash on arrival," or "cash," as expressed in the invoice. Now, the rule is that, if goods be delivered before the price is paid, in compliance with the usage of trade, the delivery is conditional, and, until the condition is performed, the vendee holds the goods in trust for the vendor, against all persons except bona fide purchasers without notice. Story, Sales, § 813; Hussey v. Thornton, 4 Mass. 405; Marston v. Baldwin, 17 Mass. 606; Corlies v. Gardner, 2 Hall, 345; Reeves v. Harris, 1 Bailey, 563.

It seems, from the evidence in the case, that there were two concurrent conditions to make the sale complete; delivery upon the part of the vendor, and payment upon the part of the vendee. This frequently occurs where goods are shipped by common carriers, as in this case, to be paid for upon arrival; and the failure to make payment will be regarded as a non-performance of the condition precedent, upon the part of the vendee, and will entitle the vendor to reclaim his goods. Newm. Sales, § 227. In Stone v. Perry, 60 Me. 48, it appeared that the plaintiffs were merchants in Boston, and a broker called and inquired the price of flour, and plaintiff asked whom it was for, and the broker replied, "Butler, of Portland." Plaintiff answered that he did not know him, but would sell the flour at $8.75 for cash. The broker went away and soon returned, and said he would take the flour, which was shipped, and the next day a bill was forwarded to Butler & Co., with the words "Terms cash" printed on the margin. On the following Monday, one of the plaintiffs went to Portland, and upon ascertaining that Butler & Co. had failed, and the flour had been attached, replevined it from the officer. In that case the court said: "If goods are sold conditionally, and delivery made, according to the custom of the trade, before the conditions are complied with, in expectation of compliance, the delivery is also conditional, and no title vests in the purchaser until the performance of the condition; and, if he steadily refuse compliance, the seller may recover the goods by action of replevin." Bauendahl v. Horr, 7 Blatchf. 548. In Russell v. Minor, 22 Wend. 659, the court said: "Where, under a contract for the sale of chattels, a delivery of a portion of the property sold was made to the purchaser under an agreement that a note should be given for the whole quantity upon the delivery of the residue at a future day, the delivery of the first parcel was held to be conditional, and that, on the delivery of the residue and the refusal of the purchaser to give the note and to deliver up the first parcel on demand, an action of replevin for the wrongful detention might be sustained. Where goods are sold to be paid for on delivery, if, on the delivery being completed, the vendee refuses to pay for them, the vendor has a lien for the price, and may resume the possession of the goods; and if, during the delivery and before it is completed, the purchaser sells or pledges them to a third person for a valuable consideration, but without notice to the original vendor, the lien of the latter will not be affected, and he may recover them from such subsequent purchaser." In Palmer v. Hand, 18 Johns. 434, the court stated: "When goods are sold to be delivered by the vendor without any stipulation for credit, it is his right to demand payment immediately upon their delivery, and payment being refused, he may reclaim the goods. Ordinarily this right to reclaim should be exercised promptly after refusal of payment." In Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552, it was said: "I consider it a proposition plain in principle and sanctioned by authority that a vendor may reclaim his goods after delivery upon a sale for immediate payment, if the vendee, on getting the property in his possession, refuses to make the payment. If there be no term of credit expressed or implied in the dealing, the delivery in such cases is deemed to be conditional, and subject to revocation on the refusal or failure of the purchaser to pay the price." Mr. Justice STRONG, in the Elgee Cotton Cases, 89 U. S. 180, quotes approvingly the rule from Benjamin on Sales, which he regards as well settled law in England, and also this country: "Where the buyer is, by contract, bound to do anything as a condition, either precedent or concurrent, on which the passing of the property depends, the property will not pass until the conditions be fulfilled, even though the goods may be actually delivered into the possession of the buyer." Benj. Sales, (Corb. Ed.) 359, 397, and authorities there cited. The doctrine of this rule seems to be almost universally sustained by the American courts. We reach the conclusion in this case that, by the terms of the contract, there was a concurrent condition of payment upon the part of the buyer, to be performed before title passed to him. The buyer having notified the plaintiff below that he could not pay, he was entitled to the possession of the property, and there was no necessity of his making any reply to the buyer's letter in regard to his inability to pay, so that he exercised the right to reclaim the goods, within a reasonable time, which it seems from the evidence he did. It follows from this view of the law that there was no error upon the part of the court below in instructing the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff. We recommend an affirmance of the judgment.

BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE—CONDITIONAL SALE.

1. Letterpress copies may be introduced as secondary evidence, when it has been shown that the original letters have been directed and mailed in the usual course of business, and there is preliminary proof, from the party to whom they were addressed, that he had made diligent search for them, and they could not be found.

2. In an action for the recovery of personal property consigned to another, upon the condition that the title was to remain in the consignor until paid for, the plaintiff is not required to prove a failure of payment to entitle him to recover.

3. The evidence and findings of the trial court examined, and found sufficient to support the judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Greenwood county; A. L. L. HAMILTON, Judge.

T. L. Davis, for plaintiff in error. W. S. Marlin, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. On the 16th day of March, 1888, the defendants in error commenced this action in the district court of Greenwood county to recover certain personal property, being a bill of boots, shoes, and rubber goods, which they claim had been consigned to J. F. Myers, who was engaged in the boot and shoe business at Eureka. The plaintiffs below, being engaged in the wholesale trade at Kansas City, Mo., shipped the goods, as they allege, on the 2d day of November, 1887, to Myers, to be sold by him at retail, but with the understanding that they were to hold the title to the same, excepting what should be sold in the usual course of the retail trade, until the 15th of February, 1888, when the goods were to be paid for, or returned to them as consignors. Upon the receipt of these goods, they were placed in the store of Myers, at Eureka, with a stock of goods which he had removed from Olathe, where they remained, except such as were sold in the usual course of business, until the 27th day of January, 1888, when the entire stock was sold to the plaintiff in error S. E. Powell. A jury was waived, and a trial had before the court, at the May term, 1888, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs below for the possession of the goods. It is insisted by the plaintiff in error that the judgment of the district court should be reversed, for a number of reasons, which we will notice in their order.

1. It is first claimed that the court below permitted press copies of letters, purporting to have been written by the plaintiffs below to J. F. Myers to be read in evidence, over the objections of the defendants below, when no proper foundation had been laid for their admission. The evidence disclosed the fact that, before the shipment of the goods in controversy, the traveling salesman of the plaintiffs below had called upon the manager of Mr. Myers' store, before the removal of the stock of goods from Olathe, and prevailed upon him to go to Kansas City, and make a selection of goods to be sent to Eureka. After the selection of the goods, the balance of the negotiations took place by correspondence. Two letters were written, one on the 29th, and another on the 31st of October, 1887, and addressed to Mr. Myers, at Eureka, Kan.; and press copies of these letters were introduced, of which plaintiffs in error complain. It seems from the evidence that these letters were mailed, as stated by one of the witnesses, with the regular office letters; that they had been given to the office boy, whose duty it was to mail the letters; and that they were mailed with the other correspondence. From the evidence of J. F. Myers, it appears that a correspondence was had with the plaintiffs in error in regard to his dealings with them. One letter, dated November 2, 1887, and an invoice of the bill of goods, showing a consignment by R. G. Wallace & Co. to J. F. Myers, of certain merchandise, were admitted in evidence, without objection. And it was shown from the testimony of the witness that he had received a letter, or letters, prior to the date of November 2d; that he had made diligent search for all the correspondence between him and the plaintiffs below, and had been unable to find the letters; that he had only received the shipments he had testified to from Wallace & Co., and had had no other dealings with the firm. From another witness, it appeared that there was a letter dated October 29th, addressed to "J. F. Myers, Eureka, Kan.," and that the evidence offered was the original copy of that letter; that he saw Mr. Wallace write the letter dated October 31st; and that it was mailed with the office letters. The letter-book containing the original copies of these letters was before the court below, and we think there was sufficient foundation laid for admitting the copies in evidence. "The principle, based as it is upon the assumption that, as absolute certainty in such proof cannot be obtained, it is enough, in order to make out a prima facie case."

to show that a letter is forwarded in a way in which letters are usually received, applies to other than post-office delivery." 2 Whart. Ev. § 1327; Tayl. Ev. 202.

2. It is next insisted that the court below should have sustained the demurrer of the defendants below to the evidence, for the reason that there was no evidence to prove that the goods replevied had not been paid for. We do not think this was necessary. The invoice offered in evidence, and the letters introduced, showed clearly that the goods were consigned to Myers to be sold, in the usual course of business, by retail, and title was to remain in the consignors until the goods were paid for. The transfer of the title depended on the payment, and no evidence of payment was necessary to entitle the plaintiffs below to recover.

3. The plaintiffs in error again contend that the findings of fact, made by the court below, are not sustained by the evidence; that there was no proper evidence on the trial to show that the goods were consigned to J. F. Myers, with the understanding that the title to the goods was to remain in the plaintiffs below until paid for, or sold in the regular course of trade as a retail merchant. This raises substantially the same question we have already decided. We think there was sufficient evidence upon which to base the finding the court made. The evidence of the plaintiffs below was to the effect that the goods were consigned to J. F. Myers. The invoice of the bill of goods read: "Consigned by R. G. Wallace & Co. to J. F. Myers." It is true that it also contained a memorandum: "Sold by Berry;" but this only indicated the salesman who took the order. The letters of October 29th and 31st also indicated that goods had been consigned to Myers. Now, the word "consigned" has a well-defined legal meaning. "To consign, in the mercantile law, is, ordinarily, to send or transmit the goods to a merchant or factor for sale, and a consignee is consequently the person to whom they are consigned, shipped, or otherwise transmitted." 3 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 667. "Consigned" implies "agency." Rolker v. Insurance Co., 42 N. Y. 17. We do not think the defendants below were in a position to raise the question of estoppel. The goods were shipped to be sold by retail, and this gave no authority to dispose of the goods of plaintiffs below with the stock previously owned by Myers. The power to sell in the regular retail way does not create a scope of authority to sell at wholesale, or to trade the stock of goods. 1 Lawson, Rights & Rem. § 65. We find no reversible error in the record of this case, and recommend an affirmance of the judgment.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

Error from district court, Atchison county; B. F. HUDSON, Judge pro tem.

This was an action in the nature of ejectment brought in the district court of Atchison county, on July 28, 1883, by John M. Price against Samuel C. King, to recover certain real estate, hereafter described. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and the court made special findings of fact and conclusions of law, and upon such findings and conclusions rendered judgment in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff for all the property in controversy except two lots, and the plaintiff, as plaintiff in error, brings the case to this court for review. The findings and conclusions of the court below, so far as it is necessary to give them, read as follows:

"(1) On December 1, 1864, and until May 1, 1868, Charles Gould, of New York city, was the full fee-simple owner of lots 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, in block 43, and lots 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, in block 44, in L. C. Challis' addition to the city of Atchison, Atchison county, Kan., together with other property in said addition, by deed, which was duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds of this county, December, 1864. (2) On May 1, 1868, said Charles Gould and Henrietta S. Gould, his wife, conveyed to Courtland Palmer, of New York city, an undivided one-half of said lots, and other property, by deed, which was duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds of this county on June 15, 1868. (3) On June 24, 1880, a deed was executed in which the parties were described as follows: 'Courtland Palmer, Charles P. Palmer, and Henry Draper, executors of the estate of Courtland Palmer, deceased, and Henrietta S. Gould, executrix of the estate of Charles Gould, deceased, parties of the first part, and R. F. Smith, party of the second part.' The consideration named in the deed was $225, and for said sum, the receipt of which was acknowledged in said deed, it was stated that the parties of the first part did remise, release, and quitclaim unto said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns forever, all of block 43, being lots 1 to 30, inclusive, all of block 44 east of lots 10 and 11, being lots 1 to 20, inclusive,—which included the property in controversy, and also other property; all in Challis' addition to the city of Atchison, Atchison county, Kan. Said deed was without covenants or recitals as to ownership of any kind, and it did not purport to have been executed by the authority of any court, and it was signed as follows: 'Courtland Palmer, Ex'r, Charles P. Palmer, Ex'r, Henry Draper, Ex'r, Henrietta S. Gould, Executrix.' Said deed was duly acknowledged, and, on February 7, 1881, the same was duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds of this county. (4) On June 25, 1881, said R. F. Smith and his wife executed and delivered to the plaintiff, John M. Price, a quitclaim deed for all the property described in said deed of June 24, 1880, and the same was duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds of this county on July 5, 1881. (5) It further appears from the evidence introduced upon the trial in aid of the plaintiff's claim of title that, prior to the execution of said quitclaim deed of June 24, 1880, the said Charles Gould, mentioned in conclusion of fact 1, and the said Courtland Palmer, referred to in conclusion of fact 2, had died, both testate. Said Charles Gould died prior to November 4, 1870, and his last will and testament was admitted to probate in the surrogate's court of the county of New York, in the state of New York, on November 22, 1870. By said will, Henrietta S. Gould, widow of Charles Gould, was made his sole devisee, in case she survived him, and she did survive him, and the said Henrietta S. Gould was also made the sole executrix of said will. Said will did not contain any provision as to the sale of any real estate or other property by his executrix as such. An exemplified and duly authenticated transcript of the record of said will, and the probate thereof, was admitted to record by the probate court of this county on April 1, 1882, and duly recorded on page 99 of the proper record book. Said Courtland Palmer died prior to May 14, 1874, and his last will and testament was admitted to probate in the surrogate's court of the county of New York, in the state of New York, on June 2, 1874. By the terms of said will, after certain specified provisions not material in the consideration of this case, the residue of the estate of said Courtland Palmer, deceased, real and personal, was devised in four equal shares to Courtland Palmer, Jr., Chas. Phelps Palmer, Mary Anna Draper, and the children of Richard S. Palmer, deceased; and said Courtland Palmer, Jr., Charles Phelps Palmer, and Henry Draper, the husband of Mary Anna Palmer Draper, were named as executors of said will. All of said devisees were living at the time of the probate of said will, and at the time of the execution of said quitclaim deed of June 24, 1880, there being two children of the said Richard S. Palmer, deceased, they being minors, and Mrs. Fanny Arnot Haven, their mother, being their guardian. Said will did not contain any provision as to the sale of any real estate, or other property, by the executors as such. An exemplified and duly authenticated transcript of the record of said will, and probate thereof, was admitted to record by the probate court of this county, on April 1, 1882, and duly recorded on page 103 of the proper record book. The said Courtland Palmer and Charles Phelps Palmer, who executed said quitclaim deed of June 24, 1880, were two of the devisees under said will, and the said Henry Draper, who joined in the execution of said deed, was the husband of another of the devisees under said will, and the said Henrietta S. Gould, who executed said quitclaim deed, was the sole devisee under the will of said Charles Gould, deceased. (6) It further appears from said evidence that Charles W. Gould, son of said Henrietta S. Gould, a practicing attorney of New York city, entered into correspondence with Thomas M. Pierce, an attorney at law of the city of Atchison, Kan., who had been the agent of the said Palmer and Gould estates, as to the management of certain real estate in Atchison, regarding the proposed sale of the interests of said estates in blocks 29, 30, 43, and 44, in L. C. Challis' addition, which had been previously sold at tax-sale, and were involved for taxes, interest, penalty, and costs. Said Henry Draper and said Courtland Palmer had conferred with said Charles W. Gould, and authorized him to act in the interest of said Palmer estate, and the said Henrietta S. Gould authorized him to act in the interest of said Gould estate. The question as to whether the devisees or executors were the proper persons to sell and convey any interest in said property which had been owned by said Charles Gould, deceased, does not appear to have been discussed or considered by any of the parties who executed said quitclaim deed of June 24, 1880, and in the said correspondence the property was referred to as belonging to the Gould and Palmer estates at the time of the transmission of said quitclaim deed of June 24, 1880, which transmission was on July 8, 1880, by said Charles W. Gould to said Thomas M. Pierce, for delivery to said R. F. Smith. Such exemplified and authenticated copies of said two wills, and of the probate of the same, were also transmitted. Said quitclaim deed was delivered by said Thomas M. Pierce to said R. F. Smith early in February, 1881, at which time the said R. F. Smith paid the said Thomas M. Pierce the said sum of $225, which was soon afterwards remitted by the said Thomas M. Pierce to said Charles W. Gould, and he paid the same to the executors of said Palmer estate and the executrix of said Gould estate. Shortly after the delivery of said quitclaim deed to said R. F. Smith, the question was raised as to the authority of said executors to sell and convey said real estate, and some correspondence followed, and on April 18, 1881, said Courtland Palmer, Charles Phelps Palmer, and Henry Draper filed in the office of the surrogate's court of said New York county, and state of New York, a petition for the confirmation of said sale to R. F. Smith, and on May 23, 1881, said Charles W. Gould appeared in behalf of said petitioners in said court, and an order was thereupon made by said court purporting to sanction and confirm said sale." The findings of fact, from the seventh to fourteenth, inclusive, have relation to the defendant's claim of title, and to two lots not now in controversy, and need not be given. "(15) That on June 24, 1880, and until the delivery of the deed in February, 1881, the property described as in the said four blocks in said deed, of date June 24, 1880, was worth from $10,000 to $12,000, and the incumbrance thereon, by reason of the tax-sales herein described, then amounted to about the sum of from $300 to $500."

Conclusions of law: "Said quitclaim deed, of date June 24, 1880, did not convey to said R. F. Smith, under whom the plaintiff claims, any property of the estate of Courtland Palmer, deceased, and Charles Gould, deceased, nor of the grantors as executors and executrix of said estates respectively, and the decree of said surrogate's court, of date May 23, 1881, was of no validity as a decree, and was inoperative as a confirmation of said conveyance. (2) Said deed of June 24, 1880, and the receipt of the consideration from the said R. F. Smith by the executors of said estates, was insufficient to convey to the said R. F. Smith the title, legal or equitable, of the said Courtland Palmer, Charles Phelps Palmer, Mary Anna Palmer Draper, the two children of said Richard S. Palmer, deceased, and Henrietta S. Gould in said premises." The third and fourth conclusions of law have reference to the defendant's title, and need not be given. (5) The plaintiff is entitled to recover the possession of said lots Nos. 23 and 24, in block 43, as described in the petition herein, upon the payment to the defendant of the sum of $31.91, and interest thereon, according to law, from April 21, 1880, being the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs paid by said defendant. The plaintiff is also entitled to judgment for his costs herein. (6) That said defendant is entitled to judgment against plaintiff for all of the said described property other than lots 23 and 24 in block 43, L. C. Challis' addition."

The aforesaid quitclaim deed, dated June 24, 1880, and delivered in February, 1881, reads as follows:

"This indenture, made this twenty-fourth day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty, between Courtland Palmer, Charles P. VALENTINE, J., (after stating the facts as above.) This was an action in the nature of ejectment, brought in the district court of Atchison county to recover certain real estate. The plaintiff, John M. Price, claims under a certain deed of conveyance, a quitclaim deed, executed to R. F. Smith by the three executors of Courtland Palmer's estate, to-wit, Courtland Palmer, Jr., Charles P. Palmer, and Henry Draper, and by the sole executrix of Charles Gould's estate, to-wit, Henrietta S. Gould, and a certain quitclaim deed from Smith and wife to himself, together with certain other facts and circumstances which he claims create in himself an estate in the property, either legal or equitable, or both. The defendant, Samuel C. King, claims the property under certain tax-deeds executed to him by the county clerk of Atchison county, and also by virtue of being in the actual possession and occupancy of the property. With respect to nearly all the property, the judgment of the court below was in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, upon the ground, principally, that it was not shown, even prima facie, that the plaintiff ever had any title or estate, either legal or equitable, in or to the property. The deed under which the plaintiff claims was evidently intended by all the parties thereto to be the deed only of the aforesaid executors and executrix, executed in the capacity only of executors and executrix, and not executed in any other capacity, or by any other person or persons. All the evidence upon the subject tends to show this. The deed was indorsed on its back, "Executors' deed." It was executed in the name of the executors and executrix as such. It was signed by them as executors and executrix. It was witnessed by the subscribing witnesses to the same effect, and it was also acknowledged by the grantors only as executors and executrix. And, as a matter of fact, according to all the extrinsic evidence upon the subject, the grantors intended to execute the deed only as executors and executrix, and afterwards, with the desire and wish of all the parties, it was confirmed by the surrogate's court of the city and county of New York, and state of New York, as the deed of the executors and executrix; and afterwards, at the instance of the plaintiff and Smith, authenticated copies of the wills under which the executors and executrix attempted to execute the deed, and the proceedings of the said surrogate's court showing the probate of the wills, etc., were filed and recorded in the office of the probate court of Atchison county, Kan.—the county in which the land supposed to have been conveyed, including the land in controversy, is situated. And further, each of the parties executing the aforesaid deed was actually an executor or executrix, and all together they were all the executors and the only executrix of the Palmer and Gould estates, and one of such executors, Henry Draper, had no possible interest in the property supposed to be conveyed except as executor, and as the husband of one of the heirs and devisees, and the grantors mentioned in the deed included the names of only three of the heirs or devisees, and there were three of the heirs and devisees of the Palmer estate, and the six heirs of the Gould estate, who were not mentioned in the deed as grantors or otherwise.

If the foregoing deed shall be construed to be only the deed of the foregoing executors and executrix, then it must unquestionably be held to be absolutely null and void as a conveyance; and we think it must be so construed and so held. No one of the executors or the executrix, as such, had any title or estate in or to any part of the property. The wills under which they attempted to act did not give to them, or to any one or more of them, any title or estate in or to the property as executors or executrix. Nor did such wills confer upon them, or upon any one or more of them, or upon any one else, any power or authority to sell or convey the property, or any part thereof, or to alienate the same in any manner whatever. Nor did any court ever attempt to give to them, or to any other person or persons, any such power or authority. And there was always an abundance of personal property on hand belonging to each estate with which to meet all demands that might be presented against such estate. Hence, no fact existed authorizing any court to grant any such power or authority. The plaintiff, however, claims that, even if the aforesaid deed is void as a conveyance, and even if for that reason the plaintiff has no legal title to the property in controversy, still, under all the facts of the case, and in equity, he has the paramount equitable title thereto. Now in what does the plaintiff's equities or his equitable title consist? His title, so far as any writing is concerned, is founded solely upon a quitclaim deed to himself from Smith, the grantee of the aforesaid executors and executrix, and hence, so far as his written title is concerned, he claims only under a quitclaim deed from a party (Smith) whose title was founded upon a void executors' and executrix's deed, which also was and is only a quitclaim deed; and under a quitclaim deed the grantee therein cannot claim to be a bona fide purchaser or holder of the property, or an equitable owner thereof as against outstanding equities in other claimants of the property. Johnson v. Williams, 37 Kan. 179, 14 Pac. Rep. 537. Indeed, the grantee in a quitclaim deed gets nothing except what his grantor in fact owned at the time of the execution of the deed, which, in the present case, was nothing, as the executors and executrix, as such, owned nothing in the present case. And such a deed will not stop the maker thereof from afterwards purchasing or acquiring an outstanding adverse title or interest in or to the property, and holding it as against his grantee. Simpson v. Greeley, 8 Kan. 586, 597; Bruce v. Luke, 9 Kan. 201, 207, et seq.; Scoffins v. Grandstaff, 12 Kan. 469, 470; Young v. Clippinger, 14 Kan. 148, 150; Ott v. Sprague, 27 Kan. 624; Johnson v. Williams, 37 Kan. 180, 181, 14 Pac. Rep. 537. It is possible that there might be cases where a party claiming only under a quitclaim deed would have equities beyond the mere terms of his quitclaim deed, but we do not think that this case falls within any of such cases. It is possible, where a party purchases real estate, and pays a full consideration therefor, and takes only a quitclaim deed as a conveyance, that his claim of title to the property should be treated at least with favor; but such is not this case. The real estate claimed by the plaintiff to have been conveyed in this present case was worth, at the time of its supposed conveyance, from $10,000 to $12,000, with an incumbrance on it for taxes amounting to from $300 to pay for the individual rights of any person. Of course, in the beginning, there was some talk of conveying the title to the property, and Smith at all times desired that such should be the case; but the executors and executrix refused, and consented only to quitclaim as to any interest which they might possibly have in the property as executors and executrix. They did not agree to sell or convey any interest which they or others might have in the property in any other capacity; and, in the capacity of executors and executrix, they will probably never dispute the plaintiff's title. Indeed, all the parties will at all times admit that Smith got by his quitclaim deed, and conveyed to the plaintiff by another quitclaim deed, all interest which the executors and executrix ever possessed in the property, which in fact was nothing.

$500, and yet the plaintiff's grantor, Smith, paid only $225 for such real estate,—less than 1-40 of the actual value of the property,—and the plaintiff in fact, as well as presumptively, knew all this. Also, where there is fraud on the part of the vendor, or a mutual mistake of the parties, or some accident intervening, it is possible that the holder of a quitclaim deed might obtain equities beyond the terms of his deed; for instance, where the deed is defective, or does not fully express what the parties intended that it should express, equity might reform it, or might consider it as reformed, so as to make it express or accomplish what both the parties intended that it should express and accomplish. But that is not this case. The deed in the present case is just what the parties intended that it should be, and, if it were changed in its form or effect in any particular, it would be what the parties intended it should not be. It is true that Smith desired a different kind of deed, and at the instance of Smith, two different deeds were sent to the agent of the grantors for execution, but they refused to execute the same, and would not execute any other or different kind of deed than the one which they did in fact execute; and the negotiations with reference to the matter were going on and pending between the parties for about eight months before any final agreement was reached, and, after all the parties were well informed as to the facts, Smith finally agreed to take, and knowingly did take, the very deed which is now in controversy in this case, and afterwards paid the aforesaid $225 for the same. He took it knowing what it was, and that he could not obtain any other or different kind of deed. And the plaintiff knew the same. There was no fraud, no concealment, no misrepresentation, no deception on the part of the grantors, or their agents, and no mistake with reference to the facts on the part of any one. A quitclaim deed was executed by the grantors merely as executors and executrix, and all the parties knew it; and this quitclaim deed really conveyed nothing, leaving the entire title to the property in the heirs and devisees. By this deed Smith got nothing, and he conveyed nothing to the plaintiff by his quitclaim deed to the plaintiff. And the facts were not such as to create or vest such equities or equitable title in the plaintiff that he may now disturb the rights of the defendant who holds and claims by a separate and independent title adverse to both the plaintiff and his grantors. There are also cases where an agent or trustee attempts to bind his principal, but from some lack of authority, or from irregularity, he fails to do so, and in effect binds himself. But such is not this case. The executors and executrix in this case did not attempt to bind any person. They merely quitclaimed any interest which they might have as executors and executrix in the property, and, as before stated, no party was deceived or defrauded or mistaken as to the facts, but all were fully and completely cognizant of the same. Smith got all he purchased or paid for when he got his quitclaim deed. He did not purchase or

The defendant makes the claim that no title passed to Smith or to the plaintiff for the further reason that neither the wills nor the probate thereof, nor any of the proceedings of the surrogate's court of the city and county of New York, were filed or recorded in the office of the probate court of Atchison county, Kan.,—the county in which the land in controversy is situated,—until long after the aforesaid deed from the executors and executrix to Smith, and the deed from Smith to the plaintiff, were executed, delivered, accepted, and recorded. The first of the foregoing deeds was executed in New York on June 24, 1880. It was transmitted to Kansas on July 8, 1880, but on account of disputes between the parties, it was not accepted by Smith until about February 7, 1881, when it was accepted by him, paid for, and then recorded in the office of the register of deeds. It was confirmed in the surrogate's court of the city and county of New York on May 23, 1881. The deed from Smith to the plaintiff was executed on June 25, 1881, and was recorded on July 5, 1881. The wills were never probated in Kansas, and no proceedings, with reference thereto, were ever had in Kansas until April 1, 1882, when authenticated copies of the wills, and the records of the proceedings of the aforesaid surrogate's court, were filed and recorded in the office of the probate court of Atchison county, Kan. Now it is claimed by the defendant that no will can be effectual to pass title to real estate unless the same has been probated or recorded in Kansas, according to the statutes of Kansas, and sections 24 and 29 of the act relating to wills, and section 1 of chapter 102 of the Laws of 1879, (Gen. Laws 1889, par. 2932,) are referred to as sustaining this claim. Said section 29 reads as follows: "Sec. 29. No will shall be effectual to pass real or personal estate unless it shall have been duly admitted to probate, or recorded, as provided in this act."

Upon the foregoing facts and statutes referred to, it is claimed by the defendant that no title had ever passed to any one under the wills when the foregoing deeds were executed and delivered, and therefore that no title could have passed to Smith or to the plaintiff because of the wills or otherwise when the foregoing deeds were executed, for at that time neither the executors nor the executrix, nor the devisees, nor any one else who might claim title under the wills, had any such title under the same to pass to any one; and that, as both such deeds were merely quitclaim deeds, which could not operate to pass future-acquired titles, no title could ever subsequently have passed under them, and the cases heretofore cited are referred to as authority for such claim. With reference to these claims of the defendant just mentioned, we shall express no opinion, as we do not think it is necessary for the decision of this case.

We decide in this case, however, the following: The first quitclaim deed executed by the executors and executrix to Smith did not, of itself, and at the time it was executed, convey to Smith any title or interest in or to the property described in the deed, for at that time the grantors, as executors and executrix, had no such title or interest to convey, nor any power or authority to convey any such title or interest, and nothing afterwards passed under such deed, or by virtue of its terms, for it was only a quitclaim deed, and such is and always has been the law with respect to quitclaim deeds; and nothing at any time passed by virtue of any of or all the facts and circumstances taking place prior to, contemporaneous with, and subsequent to the execution of the deed, for no fraud, deception, concealment, mistake of facts, or accident occurred or intervened, and it was not the intention of the parties that anything but the interest of the executors and executrix as such, or the interest which they might have had the power to convey, should pass. And we might further say that a party can never obtain by way of estoppel or ratification or otherwise what it was never expected or intended that he should obtain. Finding that the plaintiff's supposed legal title founded upon the aforesaid quitclaim deeds is void, and not finding any equities in favor of the plaintiff sufficient to create an equitable title, we think the judgment of the court below is correct. There are a few other questions presented in this case, but we do not think that they need comment. The plaintiff may pay the taxes due on the two lots adjudged to him at any time, and may then obtain the possession thereof. The judgment of the court below will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

Error from district court, Saline county; S. O. HINDS, Judge.

Garver & Bond, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. This was an action in the court below for damages for personal injuries, received by Harry E. Busenbark while in the employ of the defendants, Beeson & Selden. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $12,000, and judgment was entered for that amount against the defendants. They complain, and bring the case here. It appears from the record that the Kansas & Colorado Railroad Company, an auxiliary of the Missouri Pacific Railway, is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and doing business as a railroad company in this state. W. V. McCracken & Co. were the original contractors with the railroad company for the construction of its road through Saline, McPherson, Rice, Barton, and other counties of the state. McCracken & Co. sublet the construction of the road to Beeson & Selden between Salina and the east line of Ness county. McCracken & Co. were to furnish all the locomotives, not to exceed three, and cars, including boarding-cars, for the use of Beeson & Selden in carrying out the contract. Beeson & Selden were to receive all material at Salina, and transport the same at their own cost and expense, including all unloading, loading, and reloading of such material, under direction of the engineer in charge, and as he should deem necessary. After 15 miles of track had been laid from Salina, west, Beeson & Selden sublet a portion of the work to Bracey & Harris. Bracey & Harris were to do all work in the track—laying and to load and unload material, but Beeson & Selden were to transport the material, and provide the train service. Beeson & Selden employed and paid the trainmen, including the plaintiff. Trains were operated on the road by Beeson & Selden. About October 25, 1886, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company began running trains over the road between Salina and Geneseo. Beeson & Selden retained their own trains in completing the construction of the road. On October 27, 1886, just after dark, Harry Busenbark, a fireman in the employ of Beeson & Selden, while at Geneseo with his engine, getting ready to go with a train of cars to Salina after material, under the order of his engineer, went under his engine for the purpose of cleaning the ash-box. While in that position, another train operated by Beeson & Selden was backed against the train to which the engine was attached, under which Busenbark was cleaning the ash-box. This caused the engine to move. Busenbark's foot was crushed by one of the wheels of the engine. Subsequently it was amputated. The petition alleged, and the evidence tended to prove, that a brakeman or employe of Beeson & Selden, whose duty it was to attend to the displaying of warning lights, failed to display any light or signal at the end of the train against which the other one backed. The petition alleged, and the evidence tended to prove, that both trains were negligently handled by the employes in charge thereof, and that the collision was caused by the negligence of such employes, as well as the failure to display any warning lights or signals. The petition alleged that J. H. Beeson and H. P. Selden were partners as Beeson & Selden in the work of construction. The petition nowhere alleged that Beeson & Selden were a railroad company organized under the laws of this state, or any other state, or that they were a de facto railroad company. The evidence upon the trial did not tend to show that Beeson & Selden were a railroad company of this state, or of any other state. The court, among other instructions, gave the following: "If the defendants were, at the time of the injury complained of, operating the Kansas & Colorado Railroad, or running trains upon said road for the purpose of carrying construction material, as well as freight and passengers when offered, not connected with the road, they would be liable, under the statute, for any injury which one employe of defendants might receive because of the negligence of another employe, without regard to who or what such negligent employe may be. The statute reads as follows: 'Every railroad company, organized or doing business in this state, shall be liable for all damages done to any employe of such company, in consequence of any negligence of its agents, or by any mismanagement of its engineers or other employes, to any person sustaining such damages.' And, in order to be doing the business of a railroad company, and to be liable under this statute, it is not necessary that they should hold themselves out to be common carriers, or that they should be required to carry all freight and passengers presented. It is the character of the work done rather than the particular manner in which it is done, or the quantity done, that should determine this question. Neither is it necessary that defendants should have absolute control and management of the road. It is sufficient that they actually operate trains upon the road, either by themselves, or with the co-operation of others." This instruction was not applicable under the petition or the facts disclosed upon the trial, and therefore was erroneous. Not only was it erroneous, but it was greatly prejudicial to the defendants. The statute referred to was passed in 1874. Its title is "An act to define the liability of railroad companies in certain cases." The statute so far modifies and changes the common law that a servant or employe of a railroad company may maintain an action against such railroad company for any injury received, while in the line of his employment, through the negligence of a fellow-servant or employe engaged with him in the same common work of the master or employer, unless such injured servant or employe has himself been guilty of negligence or want of ordinary care, which has directly contributed to produce the injury complained of.

Previous to the statute of 1874, the rule of law which prevailed in this state exempted from liability all employers, including railroad companies, for injuries to their employes, caused by the negligence or incompetency of a fellow-servant, unless they had employed such negligent or incompetent servant without proper inquiry as to his qualification, or had retained him after knowledge of his negligence or incompetency. Dow v. Railway Co., 8 Kan. 642; Railway Co. v. Salmon, 11 Kan. 83; 24 Amer. Law Rev. 175. This was the rule of the common law; but this rule of the common law was abrogated by the statute of 1874, so far as it related to railroad companies organized in this state, or railroad companies doing business in this state. The statute of 1874 fixes a new liability upon railroad companies organized in this state, and railroad companies doing business in this state. This statute is in derogation of the common law, therefore it is not to be extended by implication or construction. "As a rule of exposition, statutes are to be construed in reference to the principles of the common law; for it is not to be presumed that the legislature intended to make any innovation upon the common law, further than the case absolutely required. The law rather infers that the act did not intend to make any alteration other than what is specified, and besides what has been plainly pronounced; for, if the legislature had had that design, it is naturally said they would have expressed it." Chancellor Kent says: "This has been the language of courts in every age, and when we consider the constant, vehement, and exalted eulogy which the ancient sages bestowed upon the common law as the perfection of reason, and the best birthright, and noblest inheritance of the subject, we cannot be surprised at the great sanction given to this rule of construction." Potter's Dwar. St. 185. The statute of 1874 is to be construed strictly. It cannot apply to masters or employers not within its terms; neither can it be construed to give protection to persons not in the employ of a railroad company. The statute has reference to servants and employes of railroads, not to servants or employes of other masters, companies, or corporations. The statute does not include partnerships, or persons in the employ of partnerships; it does not include construction companies, or persons in the employ of construction companies; it does not include bridge companies, or persons in the employ of bridge companies,—although such partnerships and companies construct railroads, build bridges, and do other public work. Statutes similar to the one referred to, changing the common-law rule between masters and servants, employers and employes, are in force in a number of the states of this country: but, with one exception, these statutes are all confined in their operation to railroad companies. The single exception—the Rhode Island statute—embraces only the cases of common-law carriers. 7 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 859; 24 Amer. Law Rev. 181, (1890.)

The legislature has full authority to extend the operation of the statute to all corporations, companies, masters, or employers of every occupation or business. It has not seen fit to do so. It might very properly have extended the operation of the statute to all partnerships, masters, or others engaged in the work of operating trains upon railroads, or in constructing railroads, or other like work. It has not done so. In various opinions of this court, we have frequently held that the statute applied to persons engaged in the hazardous work of operating trains upon a railroad, but, in all those cases, we had reference to the employees of a railroad company organized in this state, or of a railroad company doing business in this state. Railway Co. v. Haley, 25 Kan. 35; Railway Co. v. Mackey, 33 Kan. 298, 6 Pac. Rep. 291; Bucklew v. Railway Co., 21 N. W. Rep. 103.

Again, we have held that when a railroad is being constructed, and is in the exclusive possession of and operated by a contractor for its construction, and the railroad company, at the time the injuries complained of are committed, has no control thereof, such company is not liable for the damages resulting from the operation of such railroad. Railway Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 34; Railroad Co. v. Willis, 38 Kan. 330, 16 Pac. Rep. 728. If the statute of 1874 were extended so as to include the firm of Beeson & Selden and their employees, it must also be extended so as to include every firm, partnership, contractor, or private person having servants or employees at work on the track, or in the yard, of a railroad company. Trust Co. v. Thomason, 25 Kan. 5; Railroad Co. v. Harris, 33 Kan. 416, 6 Pac. Rep. 571; Railroad Co. v. Koehler, 37 Kan. 463, 15 Pac. Rep. 567. The statute does not go so far. The courts construe laws, but do not make them. The trial court attempted to fix a liability on Beeson & Selden under a statute which has no application to them as masters or employers; they not being a railroad company organized in this or any other state. The general rule is that he who engages in the employment of another for the performance of specified duties and services for compensation takes upon himself the natural and ordinary risks and perils incident to the performance of such services. The perils arising from the carelessness and negligence of those who are in the same employment are no exception to this rule. If Beeson & Selden used due diligence in the selection of competent and trusty servants, and furnished them with suitable means to perform the service in which they employed them, and did not retain negligent or incompetent servants, after knowledge or notice of their negligence or incompetency, they are not answerable to Busenbark, or any other employee, for any injury received by them, or either of them, in consequence of the carelessness of any co-servant or co-employee, while they were engaged in the same service. Outside of the statute, Beeson & Selden were required to assume the duty, towards their servants and employees, of exercising reasonable care and diligence in providing them with a reasonably safe place at which to work, and also in furnishing them proper means or instrumentalities, such as engines, cars, oil, lights, etc., to work with. Railroad Co. v. Holt, 29 Kan. 152; Railroad Co. v. Moore, Id. 632; Railway Co. v. Fox, 31 Kan. 586, 3 Pac. Rep. 320; Railway Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 434, 11 Pac. Rep. 408; Railway Co. v. Dwyer, 36 Kan. 69, 12 Pac. Rep. 352; Railroad Co. v. Wagner, 33 Kan. 660, 7 Pac. Rep. 204; Railroad Co. v. McKee, 37 Kan. 592, 15 Pac. Rep. 484. As the instruction complained of did not place the liability of Beeson & Selden upon the duty of master and servant under the common law, but solely upon a statute which has no application to them, and applies only to railroad companies organized in this state, and to railroad companies doing business in this state, the case was not correctly submitted to the jury. The judgment of the district court must be reversed. All the justices concurring.

STONESIFER et al. v. ARMSTRONG, Judge.
(No. 13,989.)

MANDAMUS—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SETTLEMENT.

A judge of the superior court, who has exercised his discretion in refusing to settle a bill of exceptions not presented to him within the time prescribed by law, owing to the mistake or excusable neglect of appellant's attorneys, cannot be compelled so to do by writ of mandate, conceding that he has the power to relieve against such mistake under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 473, which confers on the superior court discretionary power to relieve a party from a "judgment, or order, or other proceeding" taken against him through his mistake or excusable neglect.

In bank. Application for writ of mandamus.

Edward J. Pringle and Stonesifer & Minor, for petitioner. William Matthews and Wright & Hazen, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to settle a bill of exceptions in a case tried before him in Stanislaus county entitled "Stonesifer et als. vs. Kilburn et als." The bill was not presented to the judge for settlement within the time prescribed by law, or by any order or stipulation extending the same. Upon presentation, although the judge found, and in his order certified, that the same was not served in time by reason of the mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect of one of the attorneys of the plaintiffs who had charge of the matter, he sustained the objection of the other party to the settlement thereof, on the ground that the same was not served in time, and that he had no power to relieve the party from such mistake, inadvertence, and neglect, and refused to settle the bill. In Bunuel v. Stockton, 83 Cal. 320, 23 Pac. Rep. 301, this court, in bank, said: "The moving party must prepare and serve his statement within the time allowed by law for that purpose, or it cannot be settled, or, if settled, cannot be considered, either at the hearing of the motion or on appeal to this court." The same rule of law, in this regard, applies to bills of exceptions as to statements. When the objection was interposed in the court below, the plaintiff, upon notice and affidavits, moved to be relieved from the objection on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect, and it was upon the hearing of that motion that the order was made, and the settlement of the bill refused. Assuming that the court has the power to grant this relief, under section 473, Code Civil Proc.,<sup>1</sup> (which, however, we do not now decide, for we do not think the case a proper one in which to determine the same,) whether it shall do so or not is a matter resting in the discretion of the court. We cannot command what its action shall be. At most, we could only command it to act. It has already done so. If there was error or abuse of discretion in its action, the same may be reviewed on appeal, but we cannot reverse its action by mandate. The writ must be denied.

TAYLOR v. BLACK DIAMOND COAL MIN. CO.
(No. 12,965.)

ATTORNEY'S CONTRACT—ASSIGNMENT.

The principle that an attorney cannot assign a contract for his services, and substitute another attorney in his place, without the client's consent, has no application where the attorney has practically rendered all the services he contracted to do before the assignment was made; and in such a case the assignment of the contract is valid, being substantially the assignment of a debt due.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

W. H. L. Barnes, for appellant. Wm. M. Pierson, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, as assignee of Hoyt & McKee, attorneys at law, to recover from defendant a balance due for professional services. Judgment went for plaintiff in the court below, from which, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Hoyt & McKee made a contract with defendant by which they were to receive a certain compensation for their services as attorneys, provided they should accomplish certain results. Afterwards McKee, as surviving member of the firm of Hoyt & McKee, (Hoyt having died before the services were quite all rendered,) assigned to the plaintiff Taylor all the right and title of said firm in said contract, and all the moneys due or to become due thereunder. Appellant contends that the assignment was invalid upon the ground that an attorney cannot assign a contract for his services, and substitute another attorney in his place, without the consent of his client, such contract being special, and founded upon personal qualities. The general principle thus invoked is no doubt sound, but we do not think that it applies to the case at bar. A careful examination of the pleadings, the evidence, and the findings shows that the services which Hoyt and McKee promised to render, and the ends which they agreed to accomplish, were all practically rendered and accomplished before the assignment to plaintiff; and that appellant had received the full benefit of those services and the accomplishment of those ends before said assignment. The assignment, therefore, was substantially the assignment of a debt due. The judgment and order are affirmed.

PERKINS v. WAKEHAM. (No. 13,670.)

QUIETING TITLE—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—VALIDITY OF JUDGMENT.

A judgment, in an action to quiet title, is binding against a non-resident defendant, who does not appear or answer, and who is served by publication only while absent from the state, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 412, 413, providing that where a person on whom service is to be made resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, and the fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court, and it also appears that a cause of action exists against such person, such court may order that the service be made by publication of the summons.

Wells, Guthrie & Lee, for appellant. Victor Montgomery, J. W. Townner, and A. W. Hutton, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, so far as it affects the respondent, town of Santa Ana, must be dismissed. The notice of intention to move for a new trial was not served on said respondent. There was an attempt to serve the statement, but the attorney upon whom it was served had no authority to accept service, which fact was known to appellant at the time of service. The motion of respondent, the town of Santa Ana, to dismiss the appeal from the order denying a new trial is granted, and said appeal, in so far as it affects said respondent, is dismissed. A motion was made on various grounds, also, to dismiss the appeal from the judgment, but as the findings support the judgment, and no error appears on the face of the roll, we deem it best not to pass on the motion to dismiss, but to affirm the judgment. The court found that in a former action, brought by Wakeham against Perkins and others to determine all adverse claims to the property described in the complaint herein, judgment was entered in favor of said Wakeham, defendant herein, adjudging him to be the owner of the property. It is claimed by appellant that the decree in the former action to quiet title is in personam, and not in rem, and that as the service of summons was by publication while he was absent from the state, and as he did not answer or appear, the judgment is void. If it be true that a state has no power by statute to provide for the determination of adverse claims to real estate lying within its limits, as against non-resident claimants, who can be brought into court only by publication; if the state in her sovereignty is impotent to protect the title of citizens to her soil against the asserted claims of non-residents, who will not voluntarily submit their claims to her courts for adjudication,—great evil must result. Certainty and security in the titles of real estate, and convenient and effective procedure for the determination of individual rights in such property, are essential to the prosperity of the community. If those who cannot be reached by the process of the courts may assert adverse claims to real estate, and hold unlawful clouds over the title of the owner, every homestead and lot in the state may have a cloud cast upon it for all time. We do not think that a sovereign state is so limited in its power. The state is paramount in power over all things real within its territorial boundaries, except so far as its authority is limited by the constitution and laws of the United States; and the courts of the state, acting within that limitation, have and may exercise all the jurisdiction over all persons and things which the constitution and laws of the state confer upon them. The manner of obtaining such jurisdiction, and the procedure for its exercise, are matters of state legislation. The legislature of this state has provided that: "An action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim." Section 738, Code Civil Proc. It has also provided: "Where the person on whom the service is to be made resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state, or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons, or is a foreign corporation, having no managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary within the state, and the fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court, or a judge thereof, and it also appears by such affidavit, or by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service is to be made, or that he is a necessary or proper party to the action, such court or judge may make an order that the service be made by the publication of the summons. The order must direct the publication to be made in a newspaper, to be designated, as most likely to give notice to the person to be served, and for such length of time as may be deemed reasonable,—at least once a week; but publication against a defendant residing out of the state, or absent therefrom, must not be less than two months." Sections 412, 413, Id. Unless the method of giving notice above prescribed is unreasonable, or is in conflict with some provision of the constitution or principle of natural justice, it cannot be held invalid. In determining the question of its validity, the nature of the action and the effect of the judgment must be considered. While it is true, as a general proposition, that an action to quiet title is an action in equity, which acts upon the person, it is also true that the state has power to regulate the tenure of immovable property within its limits, the conditions of its ownership, and the modes of establishing the same, whether the owner be citizen or stranger. U. S. v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315. While a decree quieting title is not in rem, strictly speaking, it fixes and settles the title to real estate, and to that extent certainly partakes of the nature of a judgment in rem. But it is not necessary, in support of a judgment in such an action, where service has been had by publication, to determine the question whether it is a judgment in personam or one in rem. This precise point has recently been decided by the supreme court of the United States. Mr. Justice BREWER, speaking for the court, said: "The question is not what a court of equity, by virtue of its general powers, and in the absence of a statute, might do, but it is what jurisdiction has a state over titles to real estate within its limits, and what jurisdiction may it give by statute to its own courts to determine the validity and extent of the claims of non-residents to such real estate?" Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 320, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557. There the power of the state to quiet title as against non-residents by constructive service is upheld, and the cases upon which appellant herein chiefly relies are fully considered and elaborately reviewed. In that case, it is true, the statute of the state of Nebraska, which was under consideration, expressly provided for service by publication "in actions which relate to, or the subject of which is, real or personal property in this state, where any defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent, therein, or the relief demanded consists wholly or partially in excluding him from any interest therein, and such defendant is a non-resident of the state or foreign corporation," but the authority conferred by the legislature of this state in section 412, supra, is as great as that given by the Nebraska statute. While our statute is general, and in terms applies to all actions, it is not invalid because it includes in its provisions proceedings purely in personam. If the judgment in the action of Wakeham is valid and binding,—and we hold that it is,—other questions raised by appellant need not be noticed. The judgment and order are affirmed.

CUTTING PACKING CO. v. PACKERS' EXCHANGE. (No. 12,337.)

ASSIGNMENT—RIGHT OF ASSIGNOR.

While the assignment, by the purchaser, of a contract for the purchase of fruit at a specified rate will not relieve him from his obligation to the seller, who has not consented to the assignment, as provided by Civil Code Cal. § 1457, yet, as between the purchaser and his assignee, the latter is bound to receive and pay for the fruit, under section 1589, which provides that "a voluntary acceptance of the benefit of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it;" and the purchaser, who paid the seller the full contract price for the fruit on his assignee's refusal to accept it, and who then sold it in the open market at a loss, is entitled to recover the difference from his assignee.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Action by the Cutting Packing Company against the Packers' Exchange of California for refusal to accept fruit under a contract assigned by plaintiff to defendant. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Civil Code Cal. § 1457, provides: "The burden of an obligation may be transferred with the consent of the party entitled to its benefit, but not otherwise."

A. N. Drown, for appellant. Olney, Chickering & Thomas, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This appeal is brought here on the judgment roll, which includes a bill of exceptions, from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff in an action for damages for breach of contract, tried before the court without a jury. In September, 1881, the plaintiff and one William C. Blackwood made the following contract of purchase and sale:

"San Francisco, September 17, 1881. Bought of W. C. Blackwood his crop of apricots, at Haywards, for the seasons of 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, and 1886, not less than seventy-five tons, and not exceeding two hundred tons, per annum, at three cents per pound f. o. b. Haywards. CUTTING PACKING COMPANY. By A. D. CUTTER."

"San Francisco, September 17, 1881. Sold Cutting Packing Company my crop of apricots, at Haywards, for the seasons of 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, and 1886, not less than seventy-five tons, and not exceeding two hundred tons, per annum, at three cents per pound f. o. b. Haywards. WM. C. BLACKWOOD."

Plaintiff assigned its interest in the contract to the defendant about March 15, 1882, but Blackwood refused to accept the defendant in place of plaintiff. Blackwood, between July 10 and August 15, 1884, in performance of the contract upon his part, delivered to plaintiff, in different lots, 235,693 pounds of apricots, which the plaintiff, from time to time as they were delivered to it, tendered to the defendant, which refused to accept or pay for each or any lot so tendered. Plaintiff, as each lot was refused, placed it on sale in open market, and realized from the whole, after the cost of freight and seller's commissions were deducted, the net sum of $4,770.50. This sum was $2,300.29 less than the amount it was compelled to pay Blackwood. The two papers above set forth were construed in Blackwood v. Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. Rep. 248, to be a contract of purchase and sale. It was a non-negotiable contract in character, but, under section 1459, Civil Code, it could be transferred by indorsement the same as a negotiable instrument. "Such indorsement," the same section further provides, "shall transfer all the rights of the assignor under the instrument to the assignee, subject to all equities and defenses existing in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement." But the burden of the obligation that rested upon the plaintiff—that is to say, to pay to Blackwood three cents per pound for any quantity of apricots between 75 tons and 200 tons for the seasons specified in the contract—could not be transferred without the consent of Blackwood. Civil Code, § 1457. And, as he refused to consent to a novation by accepting the defendant in place of plaintiff, so as to release the latter, which he might have done, (Id. § 1531, subd. 2,) the relations of himself and the plaintiff as to such burden were not affected by the assignment of the contract. Section 1457 is only intended to protect the party to be benefited from the effects of an assignment of an obligation. So far as the parties to this suit are concerned, the appellant contracted with the respondent to accept and pay for the fruit Blackwood had contracted to deliver to the latter. It could make no difference, therefore, whether the fruit was delivered to the appellant by Blackwood directly, or by the respondent. As between the parties to this suit, the appellant was bound to receive and accept the fruit, and it cannot relieve itself from this obligation by showing that Blackwood had refused to relieve the respondent from its obligation to him. As the fruit contracted to be sold was to be the product of trees presumably owned by Blackwood at the time the contract was made, it must be considered as having had a potential existence at that time, and was therefore subject to sale. Arques v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 620. This being so, although the contract was construed in Blackwood v. Packing Co., supra, as not having passed the legal title to the fruit before the same was delivered, the plaintiff here at least acquired the right to purchase the fruit, and the assignment of the contract transferred such right to the defendant, whereby it became alone entitled to purchase the fruit for each of the seasons that occurred subsequent to the assignment. Myers v. Water Co., 10 Cal. 579. Now, while the plaintiff was not released, as we have seen, from the burden of the contract by the assignment of it, yet when the defendant took the right to purchase the fruit, which was the benefit of the contract, it also assumed the burden of paying for the fruit, in accordance with the following principle of section 1589, Civil Code: "A voluntary acceptance of the benefit of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it, so far as the facts are known, or ought to be known, to the person accepting." The obligation thus assumed was apparent on the face of the contract. We therefore think it plain that as the plaintiff, as assignor, was still bound to Blackwood to pay the price stipulated in the contract, notwithstanding the assignment, and as the defendant, as assignee, assumed such obligation, the plaintiff, as between it and the defendant, stood in the nature of a surety for the latter for the performance of the obligation. If this be correct, it then follows that from the assignment an implied contract arose between the plaintiff and defendant, whereby the latter became bound to the former to receive and pay for the apricots, according to the terms of the original contract. This is, we think, the proper construction of section 1457 of the Civil Code, under which the assignment of the non-negotiable contract in question was made. Although the liability of an assignee to his assignor under that section has never been determined by this court, still we are fortified in our conclusion by the analogous doctrine prevailing in the state of Ohio, where a similar liability arises upon the transfer of shares of the capital stock of a corporation. There, as in this state, the transferor of shares by constitutional and statutory provisions continues liable to the creditors of the corporation, who became such while the transferor held the shares. And in the recent case of Harpold v. Stobart, 21 N. E. Rep. 637, the supreme court of the state stated the doctrine under such provisions thus: "In construing these provisions, the holdings in this state are to the effect that the individual liability of stockholders attaches in favor of creditors at the time the debt is contracted, or the liability incurred by the corporation, and that such liability is not discharged by the subsequent assignment or transfer of the stock; but the successive assignees impliedly undertake to indemnify or discharge the assignor from the liability which attached to him while he held the stock." See, also, 2 Mor. Priv. Corp. §§ 879, 888. This doctrine, it seems to us, is just and reasonable, because, if the transferee should be insolvent, the creditors of the corporation whose claims attached while the transferor held the shares would not be affected by the transfer; while, on the other hand, if the transferor, after the transfer, pays his proportion of any indebtedness of the corporation that he was liable for, such payment certainly adds that much to the value of the stock he transferred, and the transferee should reimburse him for the outlay. This last consideration would not apply in Ohio with the same force as in this state, for it appears, in Harpold v. Stobart, supra, that the liability of stockholders "is not a primary fund or resource for the payment of the debts of the company, but is collateral to the principal obligation which rests on the corporation, and is to be resorted to only in case of the insolvency of the corporation, or where payment cannot be enforced by ordinary process." But in this state, such liability is a primary fund or resource to which creditors of a corporation may resort, regardless of the solvency of the corporation. Morrow v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. 383, 1 Pac. Rep. 354, and Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117. It is clear that a breach of the implied contract, thus created, between the parties here, was made when the defendant refused to accept and pay for the crop of 1884; and the plaintiff, upon the breach being so made, having stepped in and received and paid for the crop pursuant to the original contract, as it was obliged to do, thereby acquired the right to recover, as damages, from the defendant, the difference between the price paid under the contract to Blackwood and that realized from the sale of the fruit in open market at current rates. As the solution of this question is decisive of this appeal, we do not deem it necessary to discuss the other points made by the appellant, but will add that we discover no error in the record. Judgment affirmed.

WOLVERTON v. BAKER et al. (No. 13,766.)

RES ADJUDICATA.

1. A judgment to the effect that a conveyance of land by a mother to her son was free and clear of any condition for the mother's support and maintenance, though palpably erroneous on the facts found, is a bar to another action between the same parties for a relitigation of the matters determined by such judgment.

2. In California, where both law and equity are administered by the same court, and where a party may have any relief called for by the case made by his complaint, whatever he may have denominated his suit, a decree in equity may, in a proper case, be pleaded in bar to a subsequent action at law.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. HUNTER, Judge.

J. H. G. Weaver and E. W. Wilson, (John F. Crowe, of counsel,) for appellant. J. D. H. Chamberlin, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This was a suit for a reconveyance of real property conveyed by a woman over 70 years of age to her son, Erastus J. Baker, upon condition that he would apply to her support and maintenance so much of the rents and profits as should be sufficient to support and maintain her in a suitable manner during the rest of her life, and for the cancellation of certain deeds and mortgages made by the son, and a homestead declared by him. The trial court gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals upon the findings.

The findings show that the conveyance was without consideration, and upon the condition mentioned; that, for nearly two years before the commencement of the suit, the son has not applied any portion of the rents and profits to the support of his mother; that he declared a homestead upon the property, and conveyed half of it to other persons without consideration; and that he mortgaged it, "with the intent, on his part, to prevent the plaintiff from recovering anything from him." If these were the only facts, we should have no doubt of the right of the plaintiff to the relief she seeks, upon the ground of the breach of the condition, without reference to the other grounds alleged in the complaint. See Blake v. Blake, 56 Wis. 392, 14 N. W. Rep. 173; Humphrey v. West, 40 Mich. 597; Civil Code, § 1109. But the defendants have pleaded a judgment obtained in a former suit between the same parties, and we are constrained to say that, in our opinion, it is a bar to the present suit. The substance of the grounds of relief alleged in the complaint in the former suit are as follows: (1) That the plaintiff reposed confidence in her son. (2) That she was old and infirm. (3) That the property was conveyed "upon the sole and only consideration that the said defendant should hold the same in trust for said plaintiff, and that the rents, issues, profits, and proceeds thereof should be applied in providing for, and maintaining, said plaintiff during her natural life, in a manner suitable to her station," etc. (4) That the son accepted the conveyance with the intent of defrauding the plaintiff. (5) That he failed to furnish her any support whatever, but declared a homestead upon the property, mortgaged it, and conveyed away portions of it without consideration. The prayer was for a reconveyance of the property, and for the cancellation of the homestead, and the subsequent deeds and mortgages, "and that the plaintiff have such other and further relief in the premises as to the court shall seem meet and equitable." The allegations of that complaint were put in issue; and after a trial a judgment was entered by which it was "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff is not the owner of the lands and premises described in the complaint herein, but that the defendants, as against the plaintiff, are the owners in severalty in fee-simple of the several distinctive pieces or parcels of land mentioned and described in the complaint herein, free and clear of any and all of the trusts, exceptions, limitations, and conditions set forth and alleged in the complaint." This judgment was palpably erroneous upon the facts found, but nevertheless it prevents a relitigation of the matters determined.

The complaint here is substantially the same as that in the former case. It alleges the plaintiff's confidence in her son, her age and infirmity, the want of consideration for the deed, and that it was made and accepted upon condition of support, etc., the fraud of the son, the failure to furnish support to the plaintiff, the declaration of homestead, the conveyance to other persons without consideration, and the other incumbrances. And the prayer is, in substance, for a reconveyance of the property and the cancellation of the incumbrances, etc., "and for such other and further relief in the premises as to the court shall seem meet and equitable." The counsel for the plaintiff says that the first suit was in equity and proceeded "upon the theory that the deed was void ab initio," and that the present suit is at law and proceeds "upon the theory that the deed was valid ab initio."

We think that the counsel is mistaken as to the character of the second suit. It is a suit in equity. But if it were otherwise the result would be the same. It is said that, strictly and technically, a decree in equity under the old chancery practice could not be pleaded as an estoppel or bar at law, but that resort must again be had to equity which would take measures by attachment and fine to prevent the defendant from proceeding at law. See 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. (8th Ed.) p. 918, 919. But however this may have been, we think that, under the practice in this state, where both law and equity may be administered by the same court, and in the same case, and where a party may have any relief called for by the case made by his complaint, whatever he may have denominated his suit, a decree in equity may, in a proper case, be pleaded as an estoppel or bar to a subsequent action at law. See Parnell v. Hahn, 61 Cal. 131. So far as this case is concerned, the result reached is to be regretted. It is a shameful thing that a son should refuse to support his aged mother after obtaining her property without consideration upon the condition mentioned. But the law must be declared. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

KITTLE v. BELLEGARDE et al. (No. 12,873.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 2, 1890.)

DEATH OF PARTIES—SUBSTITUTION—JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT—QUIETING TITLE.

1. No notice of the substitution of an executor as plaintiff on the death of the original plaintiff need be given to defendants already in default for want of an answer; and, though it be conceded that their time to answer is extended, by the original plaintiff's death, until after the executor's substitution, yet, where judgment by default is entered in the executor's name, and recites the fact of substitution, the presumption is that the substitution was made at a date early enough to justify the entry of the judgment, in the absence of any showing to the contrary.

2. The failure to serve defendants with a notice of the entry of judgment by default is no ground for granting their motion to set it aside, made 20 months after the entry of the default, and 12 months after the entry of the judgment, of both of which facts they had actual knowledge at the time.

3. An action to quiet title may be maintained, though the complaint shows that the adverse claim of defendants rests on a sale of the land by a city for the non-payment of street assessments void on their face, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 738, providing for an action by any person against another claiming an adverse interest in real property.

4. Where the purchaser at such sale will become entitled to a deed if plaintiff does not redeem from the invalid assessment within a specified time, it is proper to grant an injunction against the execution of the deed as incidental to the main relief,—the annulment of the invalid assessment and the cancellation of the certificate of sale.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

R. Perry Wright, for appellants. Taylor & Haight, for respondent.

WORKS, J. When this action was before the department, the following opinion was prepared by Commissioner VANCLIEF:

"This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to set aside a judgment by default, and also from the judgment. The action was commenced by plaintiff's testator, September 29, 1886, against J. B. Bellegarde, and against William Patterson, as superintendent of public streets, etc., of the city and county of San Francisco. The complaint is in the usual form of complaints to quiet title to land under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and seeks to have determined the adverse claim of defendants to two lots of land situate in said city, of which plaintiff's testator is alleged to have been the owner. The complaint avers the nature of the adverse claim to be that of an alleged lien upon the lots acquired by and through proceedings of the board of supervisors, and the superintendent of streets, under the act entitled 'An act to provide for the improvement of streets, lanes, etc., within municipalities,' approved March 6, 1883; (St. p. 32;) that, to satisfy this lien, the superintendent of streets had sold the lots to defendant Bellegarde, and had given him a certificate of sale, and threatens to execute to him a deed in pursuance thereof, and will execute such deed if plaintiff fail to redeem from the sale within 12 months from the date thereof, unless enjoined from so doing; and that the defendants and each of them claim that Bellegarde will be entitled to such deed if no redemption is made, and also claim that such deed will convey to Bellegarde the title to said lots. The complaint further avers facts which, if true, show that the assessment upon the lots, to satisfy which the lien is claimed, is utterly void; and, consequently, that no such lien as claimed exists. The prayer of the complaint, in substance, is that the defendants be required to set out such claim or lien as they have upon the lots; that such claim and lien be deemed to be of no force or effect; that said assessment be annulled and set aside; that said certificate be canceled; and that defendant Patterson, as superintendent, etc., and his successors in office, be enjoined from executing any deed purporting to convey the lots to Bellegarde, or any other person. After having been duly served with summons, the defendants procured an order from the judge extending their time to answer until November 18, 1886. The plaintiff's testator, N. G. Kittle, in whose name, as plaintiff, this action was commenced, died, November 15, 1886. On December 8, 1886, the clerk of the court entered the default of the defendants, and nearly eight months thereafter, on July 29, 1887, the court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, as prayed for, but without costs, which judgment was preceded by the following recitals:

"Jonathan G. Kittle, as Executor of the Last Will and Testament of N. G. Kittle, Deceased, Plaintiff, vs. J. B. Bellegarde et al., Defendants. No. 18,593.

"JUDGMENT.

"In the above-entitled action, it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that each of the defendants in said action was duly served with the summons and complaint therein; that neither of said defendants, within the time required by law, appeared in said action or demurred to the complaint or answered the same; and that the clerk of the court has duly entered the default of each of said defendants, for not so appearing or demurring or answering. And it further appearing that plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for in his complaint. And it appearing that N. G. Kittle, the original plaintiff in said action, died after the commencement of said action, being at said time a resident of said city and county of San Francisco, and leaving a document purporting to be a last will and testament, wherein Jonathan G. Kittle was named as the executor thereof; that said document was, in the probate department of this court, duly admitted to probate, as the last will and testament of N. G. Kittle; and that letters testamentary were issued accordingly to said Jonathan G. Kittle; that the court thereafter, in this action, on motion duly made in open court, ordered that said Jonathan G. Kittle, as such executor as aforesaid, be substituted as the plaintiff in said action in the place and stead of said N. G. Kittle, and that said action be continued in the name of said executor as such plaintiff.

"Nearly one year after the entry of the judgment, to-wit, on July 27, 1888, the defendants moved the court to set aside the default and judgment on the ground that they were irregularly entered, because the defendants were not in default at the time said default was entered, nor at the time the judgment was rendered, and because the court had no jurisdiction to render a judgment in favor of the executor of the deceased original plaintiff, N. G. Kittle. The motion was heard upon the judgment roll, and the affidavit of the attorney of the defendants, of which affidavit the following is a copy: 'Percy Wright, being duly sworn, deposes and says: "(1) That he is an attorney and counselor at law, admitted to practice in all the courts of this state, and resides at No. 310 Pine street, in said city and county. (2) That he has examined the papers on file in the above-entitled action, originally entitled, 'N. G. Kittle vs. J. B. Bellegarde et al.,' also the papers on file in the office of the clerk of said superior court in the action therein entitled, 'No. 18,588, B. M. Hartshorne vs. J. McMullen et al.,' and also the papers on file in the office of the clerk of said superior court in the proceedings entitled 'No. 5,732, In the Matter of the Estates of N. G. Kittle, Deceased.' (3) That said N. G. Kittle, the original plaintiff in this action, died on the 15th day of November, 1886. (4) That at the time of the death of said plaintiff, N. G. Kittle, the time allowed for the defendants in this action, J. B. Bellegarde and William Patterson, superintendent of public streets, highways, and squares, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, to answer the complaint therein, had not expired, said time having been extended by an order of a judge of said superior court up to and including the 18th day of November, 1886, which said order was duly filed and served previous to said 15th day of November, 1886. (5) That, since the death of said plaintiff, N. G. Kittle, the complaint filed in this action has never been amended, nor has any amended complaint ever been filed therein. (6) That the only complaint filed in this action is still entitled: 'In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California. N. G. Kittle, Plaintiff, vs. J. B. Bellegarde and William Patterson, as Superintendent of Public Streets, Highways, and Squares in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Defendants.' (7) That, since the death of said plaintiff, N. G. Kittle, no notice or paper whatever in this action has ever been served on either of said defendants, nor has there ever been served on either of said defendants notice of the entry of judgment in this action in favor of Jonathan G. Kittle, executor of the last will and testament of N. G. Kittle, deceased, nor has there ever been any appearance by or on behalf of either of said defendants in this action." There was no affidavit or showing of merits, and no motion or request for leave to answer.

"1. On the appeal from the judgment, it is contended that the judgment is not warranted by the complaint, as it is not in favor of a person mentioned in the complaint. But it is in favor of a person substituted, by an order of the court, for the person named as plaintiff in the complaint, on suggestion and proof of the death of the latter, and qualification of the former as successor in interest; and such suggestion and proof may have been made ex parte, (Taylor v. Railroad Co., 45 Cal. 336;) and no notice thereof to the defendants in default was necessary, (Farrell v. Jones, 63 Cal. 194.) In Gregory v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 592, a judgment quieting title in favor of one Wenborne was attacked collaterally. Wenborne, the plaintiff, had died before the trial and verdict. The complaint, however, was not changed, and the judgment was entitled and rendered in favor of the original plaintiff, by name, but contained this recital: 'This action having been continued, in consequence of the death of the plaintiff, by his executor, Samuel Webb, and the jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, it is now ordered,' etc. The court, by Mr. Justice BALDWIN, said: 'We think this recital clearly shows, whether with formality or not, the suggestion of the death of the original plaintiff, and a continuance of the case, or a revival of it, in the name of the executor. If there was any irregularity in all this, it cannot be corrected in this collateral way.' This judgment was again brought in question between the same parties in 21 Cal. 443, where the court, by Mr. Justice NORTON, said of it: 'The continuing of the name of Wenborne, instead of inserting that of Webb (executor) as plaintiff, in the title of the judgment order in which this recital is contained, and also in the more formal judgment, was an error of form, not rendering the judgment void.' The irregularities here admitted were that the judgment was entitled and rendered in favor of the deceased plaintiff by name, and that the recital did not expressly show that any order of substitution of the executor had been made by the court before trial and judgment. In the case at bar, however, no such irregularity appears. The recital in the judgment expressly shows that the death of the plaintiff, and the appointment and qualification of the executor, had been proved, and the order of substitution made before the rendition of the judgment, although the date of the order of substitution is not made to appear; and the judgment is entitled and rendered in favor of the executor by name, as the substituted plaintiff. In all this there appears to have been no irregularity if the defendants were in default before and at the time the judgment was rendered; and that they were so in default is expressly admitted, unless the time allowed them by the court in which to answer was extended by the death of the original plaintiff until after service of notice upon them of the substitution of the executor. But we have seen that no such notice was required, and therefore the failure to serve it could not have had the effect to prolong the time to answer. The substitution of one party for another, by order of court, is not such an amendment of a pleading as is required to be made on notice, or to be engrossed otherwise than to be entered in the minutes of the court; so held in case of the substitution of the real name of a defendant for a fictitious name, (Brock v. Martinovich, 55 Cal. 516,) although all proceedings, after the order of substitution, should be in the name of the substituted party. The court's minutes of an order of substitution of parties is a part of the judgment roll which will always show and account for a change of parties by order of court more intelligibly than would a mere change of names in the pleadings. An order of court substituting a party is different from an order of court allowing 'a party to amend any pleading * * * by adding or striking out the name of any party' by authority of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The substitution is made by the court, whereas the amendment is allowed to be made by the party. A substitution may be made on suggestion and proof of the requisite facts, at the instance of either party, and might have been made on the suggestion, and at the instance of, the defendants in this case; whereas, an amendment by adding or striking out the name of a party is only allowed at the instance of the party whose pleading is to be so amended. Again, the substitution of a party plaintiff necessitates no change in the defense; whereas, the addition or striking out of a party by amendment may require or admit of a different defense. Conceding, without deciding, that, as contended by counsel, the death of the original plaintiff extended the time allowed the defendants to answer till after the substitution of the executor, still, the presumption must be that the substitution was made at a date early enough to justify the judgment, since the date of neither the order of substitution, nor of the qualification of the executor, is made to appear by the record. In the absence of a showing of the true date of the order of substitution, it is enough that the record expressly shows it to have been prior to the judgment. It devolved upon the appellants to show that it was not long enough prior to the entry of the judgment, if the fact was so. This they have failed to do. The same presumption should be indulged in favor of the ministerial act of the clerk in entering the default, if necessary to sustain the judgment; but, admitting that the default was entered by the clerk too soon, still the entry of the judgment was a sufficient entry of the default. (Montgomery v. Tutt, 11 Cal. 316; Miller v. Miller, 33 Cal. 355;) and from that alone, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, it must be presumed that the defendants were actually in default before the rendition of the judgment.

"2. It is contended that the complaint does not warrant any relief, because it shows that the adverse claim of the defendants rests upon proceedings which are void upon their face; but this objection is not available in an action to determine an adverse claim, under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such an action may be maintained against a person who claims under a void tax-deed. Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 234; Hearst v. Egglestone, 55 Cal. 365; Pearson v. Creed, 78 Cal. 144, 20 Pac. Rep. 302; Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. Rep. 1134. A judgment in such an action that the defendants have no right, title, or interest in, or lien upon, the land in question, is equivalent to a judgment canceling all papers and proceedings upon which the adverse claim is founded, and has the same effect; and therefore the defendants, having no right, title, or interest in or lien upon the lots in question, are not injured by this part of the judgment which purports to cancel the assessments and certificates of sale upon which their adverse claim is alleged to be founded, and which the objection itself admits to be void upon their face. People v. Center, 66 Cal. 551, 5 Pac. Rep. 263, and 6 Pac. Rep. 481; Head v. Fordyce, 17 Cal. 149; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1399.

"3. It is also objected that the injunction against executing deeds in pursuance of the certificates of sale is inappropriate and unwarranted. The injunction was merely ancillary to the principal relief, and was proper if necessary to make that relief effectual. Axtell v. Gerlach, 67 Cal. 484, 8 Pac. Rep. 34; Brooks v. Calderwood, 34 Cal. 563. If unnecessary to make the relief effectual, the injunction was superfluous, and did not injure the defendants, as they were simply enjoined from executing void deeds.

"4. Assuming that the defendants were in default when the judgment was rendered, the motion to set aside the default and judgment was entirely destitute of merit. It is not pretended that defendants did not have actual knowledge of the entry of the default by the clerk, and of the judgment by the court, at the times they were respectively entered, but only that 'no notice or paper whatever in this action has ever been served on either of said defendants;' yet, the motion was delayed nearly 20 months after the entry of the default, and nearly 12 months after the entry of the judgment. There is no affidavit of a meritorious defense, or of any supposed defense, and no intimation that the defendants desired to make any defense to the action, in any event."

We have re-examined the case in bank, and are satisfied with the above opinion, and, for the reasons therein stated, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

QUONG TUE SING V. ANGLO-NEVADA ASSUR. CORP. (No. 12,873.)

INSURANCE—CANCELLATION OF POLICY.

1. An insurance broker does not become the agent of the insured for the purpose of accepting a cancellation of the policy, by the mere fact that he acted as the agent of the insured in procuring the insurance.

2. The conditions on which an insurance company is allowed to cancel the policy must be strictly complied with; and a policy which provides that it shall be terminated only on notice by the company to the insured of its intention to cancel, and a return of the full amount of the unearned premium, is not canceled by the fact that the company's agent notified the broker who procured the insurance that the policy had been canceled, and paid him a part only of the unearned premium, and delivered to him a policy in another company for one-half of the original risk.

3. The insured, who refused to accept the second policy, and who declined to take anything less than the full amount of the unearned premium, does not waive a strict compliance with the conditions of the original policy by finally keeping the second policy on the broker's erroneous representation that the original policy had been canceled, and that his property was entirely without insurance.

Fox, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; FRANCIS E. SPENCER, Judge.

Lamar & Castle, for appellant. T. L. Bergin, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action on a policy of fire insurance. The only question in the case is whether the policy sued on was canceled before the fire occurred or not. The policy was procured by one Brandon, acting as a broker, from the local agent of the respondent, and was paid by such agent a commission of 15 per cent. The company was not satisfied with the risk, and the local agent was notified to cancel it. The policy contained this clause: "This insurance may also be terminated at any time, at the option of this corporation, on giving notice to that effect, and refunding or tendering a ratable proportion of the premium for the unexpired term of this policy, to any person named in this policy, whether as owner, mortgagee, or otherwise. It is a part of this contract that any person other than the assured, or the duly-authorized agent of this corporation, who may have procured this insurance to be taken by this corporation, shall be deemed to be the agent of the assured named in this policy, and not of this corporation, under any circumstances whatever, or in any transaction relating to this insurance." The local agent attempted to cancel the policy through Brandon. Brandon represented to him that the appellant wanted other insurance, and the agent reported to him that he could place a part of the insurance for $750, which was half of the amount of the original risk, in another company. He accordingly did so. The amount of the premium on the policy sued on, which had been paid by Brandon for the appellant, was $110. The local agent gave Brandon the policy of insurance in the other company, the premium for which was $60, and paid him the balance of the $110 in money. What took place between Brandon and the appellant is best told in his own words. He testified: "I went down to see Quong Tue Sing. I did not see him there. He was not in, and next morning I went down and informed him that his policy was canceled; that the company would not carry it any longer. He seemed somewhat aggrieved over the matter, and he and several other Chinamen that were in the place at the time talked the matter over, and said they wanted their insurance; wanted to carry their insurance. I told them I would go and place it if I could." He then tells of his efforts to place the insurance, and the fact that he procured the $750 policy above mentioned, and testified further: "I started to go to the Chinamen to deliver to the firm of Quong Tue Sing & Co. the money and the policy. I met Mr. William Patterson, the county license collector, on the road, and asked him to accompany me, which he did. I went in and talked to the one of the firm which was the butcher, and the one that was the book-keeper, both of which have been on the stand this morning, (the one that sits with the dark blue clothes, and the one this side of him,) and I stated to them,—neither of which could talk very plain English, but I always got along with the Chinamen well enough. I told them the condition of affairs. There was some little talk between them as to the matter. I tendered them at that time, in the presence of Mr. Patterson, the $750 policy that I received from Mr. Wright, to which was added the amount of my premium, which would make it $50. I tendered them $60 in a policy for $750, together with $50 in coin, a portion of which was in silver. The Chinamen would listen to nothing. I asked the one that has not been on the stand, who is sitting back there, who seemed to understand English more than the rest, or better than the rest, to go for Charley and bring him in; that is, Quong Tue Sing. He went out and tried to find him, and could not find him for quite a little while. They came in and talked about the matter, and the Chinamen told me that it was a unanimous opinion of theirs that they wanted it all in one company, and then came back and they said that they wanted it right away. I came back and I saw Mr. William Stewart,—William D. Stewart. Mr. Patterson left me, though I told them at that time that they had better let this amount remain, as they had no insurance whatever. I told them that there was no insurance on their stock of goods, and they had better receive this $750; and they did take it. Quong Tue Sing was not present when the policy was taken, but the other two members of the firm were present. They accepted the policy; but they would not accept the money, and wanted nothing at all to do with it,—they wanted all one policy." The court, on this point, finds as follows: "Thereafter, and on the 28th, or 29th, or 30th of April, 1887, and certainly before the 1st day of May, 1887, the said Brandon visited the store of plaintiffs, at said San Jose, and then and there delivered to plaintiffs aforesaid policy of insurance for $750, which plaintiffs, after they were told by Brandon that they then had no insurance on their said property, accepted and received and kept, and which neither they nor their assignee have ever since returned to said Brandon or to said Wright, or to said Prussian National Insurance Company of Stettin; that said Brandon also then and there, and at the same time that he delivered said $750 policy to plaintiffs, tendered to plaintiffs, as part of the return premium due them upon the cancellation of the policy of insurance sued on, the sum of fifty dollars, of which forty-five dollars was in lawful gold coin of the United States, and five dollars in lawful silver coin of the United States. Plaintiffs did not then and there receive said fifty dollars, so tendered them by said Brandon; but they then and there authorized him to procure for them $1,500 of insurance on the same personal property insured by the policy sued on herein, and, when he had obtained such $1,500 insurance, they authorized him to cancel said $750 policy of insurance." And the court, as a conclusion, found that, by the transaction between the local agent of the respondent, and between Brandon and the appellant, as above set out, "the policy of insurance sued on was properly canceled, and a correct proportion of the unearned premium thereon returned to plaintiffs before the destruction of the insured property by the fire mentioned in the complaint."

It is contended by the appellant that neither the evidence nor the findings of the court sustain or justify this conclusion. To maintain the conclusion reached by the court below, it must have been shown either that the conditions upon which the company was allowed to cancel the policy were strictly complied with, or that the insured, knowing all the facts, waived such compliance. Bennett v. Insurance Co., 115 Mass. 241. It is an undisputed fact that the agent of the company did not act directly with the insured. The tender of so much of the unearned premium as was returned was tendered, not to the appellant, but to Brandon. Therefore, in order to render this tender effective, if otherwise sufficient, it was necessary to show either that Brandon was, at the time, the authorized agent of the insured for the purposes of the cancellation of the policy, or that, not being authorized at the time, his acts were ratified by the insured. There is an entire lack of any evidence even tending to show that Brandon had any authority to receive the unearned premium under the policy, or to accept a cancellation of it, on any terms, unless such agency is established by a mere showing that he was the appellant's agent in procuring the insurance. That an agent authorized to procure insurance is not thereby made the agent of the insured to cancel the policy is well settled. Hermann v. Insurance Co., 100 N. Y. 411, 3 N. E. Rep. 341; Grace v. Insurance Co., 109 U. S. 278, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Broadwater v. Insurance Co., 34 Minn. 465, 26 N. W. Rep. 455; White v. Insurance Co., 120 Mass. 330; Insurance Co. v. Hartwell, 100 Ind. 566. This being so he was not the agent of the insured, and had no authority to bind him either by the acceptance of a strict tender of the unearned premium or the waiver of such tender, by the acceptance of an insufficient one. The tender in this case was not sufficient. There must have been an actual tender to the appellant, or his authorized agent, of the full amount of the unearned premium. May, Ins. § 69; White v. Insurance Co., 120 Mass. 330; Insurance Co. v. Hartwell, 100 Ind. 566. This tender was not made. There was a tender of only a part of the premium, and another policy of insurance in another company. It only remains to inquire, therefore, whether the appellant in any way waived the repayment of the unearned premium. We are quite clear that he did not. Two things were necessary in order to effect the cancellation, viz., notice of intention to cancel, and the return of the unearned premium. The notice required was not given. Brandon, who, as we have seen, was not the agent of the appellant, simply informed the latter that his policy had been canceled, and that he had no insurance, neither of which statements were true.

It is contended by the respondent that because the appellant accepted a policy in another company he thereby waived the notice and strict tender required by the policy. But the evidence shows conclusively that he did not consent to accept the policy for $750 tendered him, but refused to do so, although it was left with him, and insisted upon having $1,500 insurance all in one company, and that he refused to accept the money tendered him. He did express a desire and willingness to procure and accept another policy for $1,500, and, perhaps, if such a policy had been procured for him he would have been willing to accept it, and surrender the one sued on. But such a policy was not procured for him. He never at any time consented to accept anything else in lieu of the policy sued on, or to accept less than the full amount of the premium due him on a cancellation, or to deliver up the policy. He kept the $750 policy on the strength of the erroneous statement of Brandon that the policy sued on had been canceled, and that he had no insurance. Counsel for respondent rely mainly on the case of Hillock v. Insurance Co., 54 Mich. 531, 20 N. W. Rep. 571, to sustain the position that the appellant waived a strict compliance with the conditions necessary to effect a cancellation of the policy. But that case differs materially from this. The conclusion reached by the court in that case was that actual tender of the unearned premium was unnecessary to the cancellation of the insurance policy, because the "minds of the parties had met on the point that the policy was to be canceled." Here the minds of the parties had not met. No assent on the part of the insured is shown. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

FOLTZ v. COGSWELL. (No. 12,787.)

ASSUMPSIT—PLEADING—COMPENSATION OF ATTORNEY—LOBBYING.

1. The complaint alleged that defendant retained plaintiff as his attorney, and agreed to pay her fully for her professional services, "to-wit, the sum of $5,000;" and further that she rendered specified services which "were and are reasonably worth $5,000." Held, that the complaint as a whole showed that the action was on an implied contract, and evidence was admissible thereunder in support of a demand on a quantum meruit.

2. The evidence showed that a part of the services rendered by plaintiff consisted in personal solicitation of members of the legislature to act favorably on a bill she was seeking to have passed for defendant; but there was nothing to show that she used dishonest, secret, or unfair means, and there was evidence that such members knew she was acting for defendant. Held, that she was not "lobbying," within the meaning of Const. Cal. art. 4, § 35, which declares that "any person who seeks to influence the vote of a member of the legislature by bribery, promise of reward, intimidation, or other dishonest means, shall be guilty of lobbying."

3. The evidence showed that the legislation procured by plaintiff was to enable the board of regents of the University of California to reconvey to defendant land which he had donated to them; that, when the regents refused to reconvey, she prepared and submitted arguments designed to induce them to do so; and that she had prepared and was ready to bring an action to compel them to reconvey the land, when defendant discharged her. Held, that the fact that the legislation secured failed to accomplish the object of her employment—to procure a reconveyance of the land—will not bar her recovery of the reasonable value of her further services to that end.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

W. C. & Isaac Burnett and Garber, Boalt & Bishop, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This cause was submitted in department 2, and the following opinion prepared by GIBSON, C.:

"Assumpsit to recover for services rendered as an attorney and counselor at law. Plaintiff alleges in her complaint that, between the 27th day of January, 1883, and the 9th day of March, 1883, at the special instance and request of defendant, who promised to fully pay her for her professional services, 'to-wit, the sum of $5,000,' she devoted her entire time and skill as a lawyer in the preparation of an act entitled 'An act authorizing and empowering the regents of the University of California to convey certain lands,' designed to enable the defendant to obtain from said regents a reconveyance of certain real property in San Francisco that he had donated to the university, and in making the legislature acquainted with her bill, and in making arguments before the various committees of that body, in order that the justice and merits of defendant's demand for the passage of the bill might be fully understood, all of which services resulted in the passage of the bill into a law, entitled as above, on the 9th day of March, 1883; that between the latter date and March 17, 1885, she counseled with and advised defendant as to various legal questions concerning the property, and prepared for and submitted to the regents of the university written arguments in relation to the same property: that on the date last mentioned defendant gave her notice that her services were no longer desired; that all of the said services rendered to defendant were and are reasonably worth $5,000, no part of which has been paid. Defendant, in his answer, denies any agreement for any sum greater than $200 for her professional services; and avers that on December 12, 1882, plaintiff contracted with defendant to perform all the services mentioned in the complaint, and, in addition, to conduct and prosecute a suit, then intended to be commenced against the regents of the university to recover the property referred to in the complaint, through the trial and appellate courts, for the sum of $200; that all the services ever performed by plaintiff were pursuant to her own judgment as a lawyer, and in accordance with said agreement; and, as a further defense, that long before the present action was commenced defendant paid plaintiff in full for all services performed by her for him. The jury, upon the issues thus presented, rendered a verdict for plaintiff for $1,450. From the judgment entered thereon, and an order refusing a new trial, defendant appeals. The appellant asserts that the claim of plaintiff is based upon an express contract for the sum demanded for her services, and that it was error to admit evidence in support of a demand upon a quantum meruit. The complaint, it is true, states in one place that she was to be fully paid for her services, to-wit, $5,000, but reading the complaint as a whole, the substance of which we have set out above, we think it clearly shows that the action is upon an implied contract for the reasonable value of her services, alleged to be reasonably worth the sum demanded, and not upon an express contract for that sum. This construction was properly given to it by the trial court, and the evidence in support of it was admissible. Appellant, in his answer, does not deny that the services for which respondent seeks to recover were rendered substantially as alleged, but avers that they were rendered pursuant to an express contract, by the terms of which she was to receive, and did receive, $200, and that all services rendered by her were fully paid for. The contract referred to was in effect as above set forth in the substance of defendant's answer. But after visiting Sacramento, where the legislature was then in session, the respondent testifies that she found that she could not spend the time necessary to procure the passage of the act desired by the defendant, and upon returning to San Francisco, and informing him of that fact, he urged her to return to Sacramento and remain until the act was passed, believing that she could accomplish it, and agreed to pay her well for her services. She said they would be worth $5,000. He did not assent to this amount, but assured her that she would be fully compensated. There is sufficient testimony in the record, aside from that of the plaintiff, strongly tending to establish this agreement, and to show that it took the place of the original written contract. It is admitted in the answer that plaintiff, between the 27th of January, 1883, and the 9th of March, 1883, 'devoted some time, and her professional skill, ability, and learning,' in acquainting the legislature and its committees with the merits of the act that defendant desired, which resulted in the passage of the act on the date last mentioned, and that since the date last referred to, at divers times and occasions, and prior to September 14, 1883, after which date defendant refused to accept any further services from her, she counseled with and advised defendant in relation to the property he was seeking to regain from the regents of the university, and prepared written arguments concerning the same property, and placed the same before the said regents, but denies that the latter were placed before said regents until April 10, 1884, about seven months after defendant had refused to accept any further professional services from her. There is testimony tending to prove that she prepared the bill, which afterwards became a law, and made arguments in support of it, and caused it to be introduced in both departments of the legislature, appeared and argued the measure before at least one committee of that body, and also before the governor when the bill reached his hands for consideration; and further, that the written arguments she sent before the regents of the university after the passage of the act were sent before she was informed by defendant that he no longer required her professional services; and according to her own testimony and that of another witness, the services she so rendered were of a greater value than the amount awarded by the jury. The only expert witness called for defendant on this point placed the value as high as $1,000. Therefore, we do not feel justified in disturbing the verdict, unless, as claimed by defendant, the agreement relied upon by plaintiff was an agreement for compensation contingent upon success, and consequently void as against public policy. A sufficient answer to this objection is, that a careful review of the testimony fails to show, nor can it be fairly inferred therefrom, that plaintiff's compensation depended solely upon her success in obtaining the passage of the act. She, it is true, insisted in her testimony that she was to and should receive five thousand dollars for her services; and, when the act became a law, she demanded that amount, but there is not a word indicating that, in the event of her failure to secure the passage of the act, she should receive nothing for her services; consequently we cannot say that she was to be compensated only in the event of success.

"It is further contended by defendant that a portion of her services, in connection with the passage of the act, consisted not of arguments addressed to the legislature or any committee thereof when in open session, but of personal solicitation of individual members of the legislature, which is contrary to public policy, and that such illegitimate services were so blended with what may have been legitimate as to taint the whole, and prevent a recovery. In Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335, an action to enforce a trust that arose upon an agreement, by which Thorne and Miles agreed that if a franchise for a toll-road could be obtained from the legislature in Thorne's name, for which Miles should draw a bill, that upon the passage thereof, each would construct one-half of the road, and be equal owners thereof, and divide the tolls between them, the court said: 'We find nothing in the contract, as alleged in the complaint, which sustains the point made by the defendant that it is against public policy, and therefore illegal and void. The point is founded upon the idea that by the agreement the plaintiff was to use his influence to obtain from the legislature a grant of the franchise in question. The complaint furnishes no ground for such a charge. The plaintiff was to draft a bill for the franchise and place it in the hands of some member of the legislature, to be introduced by him to that body; but there was no promise or undertaking on his part to labor, either secretly or openly, with the members of the legislature to secure its passage. Yet, having by virtue of the agreement an equal interest with the defendant in obtaining the franchise, he had a legal right, equally with him, to urge its passage by all honorable means, provided he did not conceal, but openly acknowledged, his interest in the measure. Even had he agreed to act as the advocate of the defendant, the agreement would not have been illegal, if it was understood that he was to act openly as such, and did so act when the time came.' Citing Marshall v. Railroad Co., 16 How. 334. In the latter case, the court draws a distinction between the use of personal, or any secret or sinister, influence upon legislators by one who seeks the passage of an act which it holds to be contrary to public policy, and the open advocacy of the same before the legislature or any committee thereof in open session. Article 4, § 35, of our constitution defines 'lobbying' as follows: 'Any person who seeks to influence the vote of a member of the legislature by bribery, promise of reward, intimidation, or any other dishonest means, shall be guilty of lobbying, which is declared a felony.' * * * Now while the evidence does show that the plaintiff endeavored to persuade some of the members of the legislature, individually, to act favorably upon the bill she was seeking to have passed, it does not show that she used any dishonest, secret, or unfair means to accomplish her object. Besides, if she did not tell them that she was acting as an agent for pay, they must have known from the character of the bill that she was acting as the agent of Dr. Cogswell, which fact was sufficient of itself to disclose her motive. Hence, this contention cannot be sustained. It is further urged that, as plaintiff acted upon her own judgment as to what course to pursue to regain the property for defendant, and the legislation procured having turned out to be ineffectual, her services in procuring it were consequently worthless, and she cannot recover upon a quantum meruit. In support of this position, Timberlake v. Crosby, 81 Me. 249, 16 Atl. Rep. 896, and Bridges v. Paige, 13 Cal. 640, are cited. In the first case, which was to recover a balance due for professional services, it was held that the unnecessary services rendered by the attorney could not be recovered for, and that his failure to expend the few minutes necessary in the examination of the Revised Statutes and Digest, the former of which contained a reference to, and the latter the substance of, a case which would have shown him the futility of the additional course he pursued, amounted to negligence. This is in accordance with the rule stated in Weeks, Attys. § 335. In Bridges v. Paige, an action on a quantum meruit to recover for services rendered as an attorney in a suit, in which the attorney was successful, evidence offered by the defendant, which tended to show negligence and want of skill in the conduct of the case, was excluded. This was held to be erroneous, because a trial might result successfully, and yet the attorney, by his negligence or want of skill in conducting the case, might put his client to great expense to redeem his blunder, and evidence of such negligence or want of skill should be received to reduce the value of his services. Neither of those cases, it is to be noticed, goes to the extent of holding that, where services rendered are made up in part of those which were proper, and those which were negligently or unskillfully rendered, no recovery can be had for the former. In the case at bar, the evidence to the effect that the legislation procured through the assistance of plaintiff was useless must therefore have been considered by the jury in estimating the value of her services, which not only consisted, as we have seen, of the legislation she obtained, but of arguments prepared and submitted by her to the regents of the university, designed to accomplish the object the defendant desired to attain. She also had made preparations, and was ready, to commence and prosecute an action against the said regents to compel a reconveyance of the property when she was discharged by the defendant. This being so, then, in the absence of any showing that the amount awarded by the jury is excessive, the last exception must also be overruled."

Subsequently, the case was ordered into bank, and the same has been orally argued and resubmitted. Having given the case this further consideration, we are satisfied with the opinion of the learned commissioner, and the conclusion reached therein. Judgment affirmed.

GIBBS v. RANARD. (No. 12,631.)

CONTRACT TO PURCHASE—BREACH—EVIDENCE—DAMAGES.

1. Plaintiff agreed to sell to defendant his newspaper business, and defendant agreed to purchase it for a named sum, on condition that he should be able to make satisfactory arrangements with certain daily newspapers. Defendant refused to close the contract on the ground that he could not make such arrangements, whereupon plaintiff, after notifying defendant of his intention, sold out to the highest bidder, and sued defendant for the difference between the amount obtained, and that specified by their contract. There was evidence that defendant, before making the contract, knew of the arrangement subsisting between plaintiff and such newspapers, and expressed himself satisfied with the same; and that the newspapers agreed to continue the arrangement with defendant. Defendant himself testified that the objections of members of his family had some weight in inducing him to repudiate the transaction. Held, that the evidence warranted a verdict for plaintiff.

2. Evidence of what defendant stated to plaintiff with regard to the latter's arrangement with the newspapers was competent to show that he would be satisfied with a continuance of it, and that his repudiation of the contract was not in good faith, whether he made such statement before or after the execution of the contract to purchase.

3. As the contract was only an agreement to sell, and not a sale, and as title never passed to defendant, Civil Code Cal. § 1749 et seq., relating to the measure of damages in actions to rescind a sale or to enforce liens for purchase money, do not apply to plaintiff's action for the breach, and it is not necessary to prove the value of the property, as that was fixed by the contract.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Sonoma county; JOHN G. PRESSLEY, Judge.

W. B. Haskell and E. S. Lippitt, for appellant. Rogers & Munday, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The parties to this action entered into the following contract: "This agreement, made and entered into this 28th day of June, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, between J. D. Gibbs, of the city of Petaluma, county of Sonoma, and state of California, the party of the first part, and J. H. Ranard, of the same place, the party of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, in consideration of the covenants and agreements on the part of the said party of the second part hereinafter contained agrees to sell and convey unto the said party of the second part, and said second party agrees to buy the newspaper route, business, goodwill of said business, as carried on and conducted by the party of the first part, in said city of Petaluma, state and county aforesaid, and more particularly described as follows: The buying and selling of daily and weekly newspapers; the buying and selling of magazines; the buying and selling of other reading matter, and the delivery of the same; and the buying and selling of stationery, books, and other goods, as conducted and sold at his newspaper stand, in the Masonic block, situate on Western avenue, in said city of Petaluma, for the sum of five thousand dollars, lawful money of the United States. And the said party of the second part, in consideration of the premises, agrees to pay to the said party of the first part the sum of five thousand dollars, lawful money, as follows, to-wit: One dollar in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the balance, four thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars, ($4,999,) by note on demand, drawing interest from date, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, interest payable quarterly. It is understood and agreed on the part of both parties hereto that, in the event that such arrangements as shall be satisfactory to the party of the second part cannot be made with all the San Francisco daily papers, then this agreement shall be null and void. It is also understood and agreed that, on making a bill of sale of this said business by the party of the first part, he will enter into a written agreement not to go into the same kind of business in said city of Petaluma for the period of five years from this date. It is understood that this sale shall take place on the 1st day of July, A. D. 1886, and that the note shall be dated July 1, 1886. And it is understood that the stipulations aforesaid are to apply to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties. In witness whereof, the said parties to these presents have hereto set their hands and seals, the day and year first above written. J. D. GIBBS. [Seal.] J. H. RANARD. [Seal.] Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of H. P. BRAINERD." The complaint alleges the making of the contract; that the defendant, after the execution of said contract, made satisfactory arrangements with the proprietors and publishers of all the San Francisco papers; that he failed and refused to comply with the terms of the contract, and refused to pay the money or execute the note provided for therein. It is also further alleged: "That after the said defendant refused to perform his said contract as aforesaid, and refused to accept the said property and business as aforesaid, or to pay therefor, or to deliver his promissory note, as by him agreed, and to accept the said bill of sale as aforesaid, the plaintiff on the — day of July advertised the said property and business described in said contract by publication in the San Francisco Daily Chronicle, and offered the same for sale; and, after such publication and notice and advertisement, one J. E. Jewell offered to purchase the same, and pay therefor the sum of twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars. That, before selling the same to other parties than the defendant, the plaintiff notified the defendant of his (the plaintiff's) intention to sell the same; and, in case he could not within a reasonable time find a purchaser ready and willing to pay as much as the defendant agreed to pay, that he (the plaintiff) would sell the same for the best price obtainable, and hold the defendant liable for all loss and damage by reason of his said refusal to take and pay for the said property and business, and for the difference between the contract price, and the amount which he (plaintiff) should and could obtain from the other purchasers; and plaintiff receiving no other or better offer than the offer of said J. E. Jewell, and the defendant still refusing to perform his contract, sold and delivered, at Petaluma, said property and business to the said J. E. Jewell for the highest market price obtainable, to-wit, the sum of twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars, ($2,250,) to the plaintiff's damage in the sum of $2,750, being the difference between the sum of $2,250, the price at which J. E. Jewell purchased, and the contract price agreed to be paid by the defendant." The plaintiff recovered a verdict and judgment in the court below for $2,749. A motion for a new trial was denied, and the defendant appeals.

The appellant contends that the evidence fails to show that he was able to make satisfactory arrangements with the San Francisco papers, and that therefore the verdict is against law. But the evidence tends to show that the appellant was buying the route for his son and one Dickenson; that, at the time the contract was being made, the terms upon which these newspaper agencies were held by the respondent were stated by him; that such terms were satisfactory to the defendant, if the same rights could be transferred to him, or his son and Dickenson, for whom he was buying; that it was understood that the appellant's son was to go to San Francisco with the respondent, and see if such arrangements could be made; that they did visit the different newspaper offices, and found that the arrangements could be made; that the arrangements were then and there made by the son, and each and all of the papers instructed to change the agency, and forward the papers thereafter to the address of the appellant, which was done. The respondent also testified that when the appellant refused to carry out the contract he simply said he was not going to have anything more to do with it, and assigned no reason therefor; and, although the appellant denies this, he testifies himself that some of his family were objecting to his going into the transaction, and that these objections had some effect in inducing him to repudiate the purchase. Taking all of the evidence, it is quite clear to our minds that the defendant did not refuse to comply with his contract for the reason that satisfactory arrangements could not be made with the newspapers. The contract cannot be construed as giving him the right to say, arbitrarily, that the terms to be procured from the papers were not satisfactory, if they were reasonable and just, as appears to have been the case. It is true counsel for the appellant contend that this testimony was incompetent, for the reason that it tended to show that what was said was a part of the negotiations, and was merged in the contract when executed. The evidence is somewhat conflicting as to whether this conversation occurred before or after the contract was executed; but we think it makes no difference. It was competent for the purpose of showing that the defendant knew what the present arrangement with the papers was; that he would be satisfied with a renewal of the same arrangement; and that his refusal to consummate the agreement was not in good faith, and for the reason now assigned therefor.

It is further contended by the appellant that the respondent did not take the proper steps to fix the amount of damages he was entitled to recover from the appellant under section 1749 of the Civil Code and other sections relating to the enforcement of liens in such cases. But here there was no sale of the property, and therefore the sections of the Code relied upon have no application. The contract, a breach of which is alleged, was not one of sale, but an agreement to sell upon certain terms. This contract was never consummated by the execution of the bill of sale provided for, or the payment of the purchase money, or any part of it, or the execution of the note provided for therein. This action is not to rescind a contract of sale, or to enforce a lien, but to recover damages for the failure to execute a contract of sale as provided in the contract sued upon. The property not having been sold, the title thereto remained in the respondent, and he could not enforce a lien against his own property, or sell it as the property of appellant as provided in the Code. The evidence shows that the appellant, having refused to consummate the purchase, was notified by the respondent that he would sell the property to some one else for what he could get for it, and hold him responsible for the difference; that he advertised the route for sale in a newspaper, and finally sold it for $2,250; and that that was the greatest sum he could procure for it. We think this evidence was competent as tending to show the amount of damage resulting from the breach of the contract, and that the jury were justified, from the evidence, in finding for the respondent in the amount of the verdict. It was not necessary for the appellant to prove the value of the property. That was fixed as between these parties by the contract. For these reasons the court did not err in overruling the motion for a nonsuit, and the verdict of the jury was not against law, and was sustained by the evidence. Judgment and order appealed from affirmed.

WATSON v. SUTRO. (No. 12,596.)

VENDOR AND VENDEE—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE—TRUSTS—ESTOPPEL—LIMITATIONS.

1. Tenants in common of land conveyed it to a trustee by a deed absolute on its face, which was duly recorded; the trustee executing a declaration of trust, which was not recorded, reciting that the deed to him by the parties, naming them, had been made to facilitate the perfecting of title. Subsequently one of the tenants in common was substituted as trustee, and he also executed a declaration of trust to the same effect as the first, but omitting the name of one of the tenants in common, owning an undivided five acres, and crediting his share to one of his co-tenants. Held, that a purchase of this five acres by the substituted trustee from the co-tenant did not constitute him an innocent purchaser, as it was his duty, when he accepted the position of trustee, to know for whom he was acting.

2. In an action by the owner of the undivided five acres to charge the substituted trustee as a purchaser with notice, it appeared that the co-tenant who sold them had acted as administrator of the estate of plaintiff's father-in-law, and had acquired 15 acres, as tenant in common, during such administration. Long before the conveyance in trust, he had conveyed the five acres now in dispute to plaintiff, whose deed was duly recorded. After the conveyance in trust, plaintiff with his wife and other heirs, in settlement of the administration, executed to the co-tenant a written instrument reciting that the latter, during the course of his administration, had acquired land, "the legal and equitable title to which is now in him," and empowering him to sell such land. Held, that this instrument conferred no authority on the co-tenant to sell the five acres previously conveyed to plaintiff, as the co-tenant had neither the legal nor the equitable title thereto; the legal title being in the trustee, and the equitable title in plaintiff.

3. The distinct statement in the power of sale that it embraced only such lands, "the legal and equitable title to which is now" in the co-tenant, will limit a subsequent general description of such land as "15 acres or thereabout," and these general words will not enlarge the power of sale previously conferred.

4. Where the attorneys for a purchaser from the substituted trustee have examined all the various conveyances under which he claims the five acres now in dispute, their knowledge is the purchaser's knowledge, and he is chargeable with constructive notice of all that appears on the face of the instrument; and the fact that the attorneys made a mistake of law in interpreting the power of sale, and advised the purchaser that it embraced the five acres now in dispute, does not constitute him an innocent purchaser thereof.

5. As plaintiff deceived neither the substituted trustee, nor the purchaser from him, the power of sale, which was accessible to both, and which was actually examined by the attorneys for the latter, does not estop plaintiff from asserting his title to the land.

6. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 752, which permits an action of partition to be brought by a tenant in common having an estate of inheritance, does not confine the right of action to the holder of the legal title, but a tenant in common having an equitable estate of inheritance may establish his right to the land, and have a partition thereof, in one and the same action.

7. As plaintiff was ignorant of the omission of his name from the second declaration of trust, and of the conveyance by his co-tenant to the substituted trustee, the possession of the substituted trustee, who was also plaintiff's co-tenant, must be deemed to have been for his benefit; and hence Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 319, which provides that plaintiff in an action affecting the title to land must have been in possession thereof within five years of bringing the action, and section 322, which provides that the possession of land by one entering under a written instrument purporting to convey it shall be deemed to be adverse, have no application to the case.

PER CURIAM. We have heard this case the second time, and upon a further examination of the record, and the briefs of counsel, we feel constrained to adhere to the reasoning of the former opinion, and the conclusion therein reached. The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We dissent: MCFARLAND, J.; FOX, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The deed executed in quadruplicate in April, 1870, by Watson, Sullivan, and the Davis heirs contains a distinct declaration—a solemn admission—by Watson that Sullivan was at that time the owner of the equitable interest here in controversy. The conduct of Watson, and of all parties to these transactions, was for many years consistent with that declaration, and inconsistent with any serious claim of ownership on the part of Watson. The holder of the legal title with knowledge of that admission, bought in the equity, and transferred both to Sutro. I do not think that Watson should now be heard to deny the truth of a solemn admission upon which others have acted.

NUISANCE—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL.

1. In a suit to restrain defendant from operating his foundry in such manner as to constitute a nuisance to plaintiff's dwelling, plaintiff alleged that he was the owner of the dwelling which he had occupied ever since it was built, 30 years before, and that its foundations had never been changed. The only evidence in rebuttal was that of defendant that the house was nine inches over on his land. Held, that it was proper to refuse an instruction that if the house was nine inches over on defendant's land, and that if the shaking complained of was due to this, and would not occur if the house was wholly on plaintiff's land, then plaintiff cannot recover damages.

2. Where this proposition was included in a single request with others that may have been proper, it was not incumbent on the court to separate the proper from the improper parts; and hence it was not error to refuse the whole request.

3. The error, if any there be, in allowing a witness to refresh his memory from a memorandum of the action of a committee of the board of supervisors which once investigated the alleged nuisance is immaterial where other witnesses testified as to the action of such committee, and defendant himself testified to substantially the same facts as did the witness who used the memorandum.

4. Affidavits of persons who did not testify on the trial that the acts complained of did not constitute a nuisance are merely cumulative evidence, and are no ground for a new trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

Joseph Hutchinson, Frank Otis, and Hutchinson & Campbell, for appellants. T. J. Crowley, for respondent.

On rehearing. For former report, see 24 Pac. Rep. 172.

v.25P.no.2—5

HAYNE, C. The complaint in this action was for an injunction to restrain the defendant from operating his foundry in such a manner as to constitute a nuisance to the adjoining dwelling, and for damages. The case was submitted to a jury, and a general verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $500 was rendered. The judgment did not award any injunction, but was for the damages only. The appeal is by the defendant.

1. It is contended that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury as requested by the defendant. As we construe the transcript, the defendant requested one instruction involving several distinct propositions. The transcript is not substantially clear upon this point. But it is incumbent upon the appellant to show error; and we do not think that upon this record the court would be justified in saying that each proposition in the paragraph referred to was requested as a separate instruction. This being the case, if any one of the propositions contained in the request ought not to have been given, the court was justified in refusing the whole instruction. Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 485; Preston v. Keys, 23 Cal. 194. And we think that at least one of such propositions was in this category. The plaintiffs alleged that they were at all times the owners of the premises described in the complaint, and the evidence was that they had been in possession for about 30 years. The house in which they lived was of that age, and its foundations had not been changed since it was built. From this the presumption certainly arose that the plaintiffs were the owners of the said premises. This presumption was not rebutted by the general statement of the defendant that the "house described in the complaint is nine inches over on my own property," and there is no other evidence on the subject. In this condition of the evidence it certainly would have been improper for the court to have instructed the jury that "if the plaintiffs' building stands nine inches or any other distance over upon the property leased by Mr. Tobey, and if the shaking of the house, claimed by the plaintiff to exist, is produced because of the fact that the plaintiff's house stands upon Mr. Tobey's ground, and if the Williamsons' house was upon their own ground, said shaking would not occur, then the plaintiffs cannot recover damages caused by the said shaking;" and, as above stated, it was not incumbent upon the court to separate the improper part of the instruction from the remainder, even if it be assumed that the remaining propositions were correct and applicable.

2. It is argued that it was error to allow the witness Farnsworth to refresh his memory from a memorandum as to the action of a committee of the board of supervisors who once looked into the question of the alleged nuisance. The objection shown by the record seems to go more to the admissibility of the memorandum than to the propriety of the evidence of the witness. Evidence as to what the action of the committee actually was, was given by several other witnesses without objection; and the defendant himself, when called to the stand, testified to substantially the same facts testified to by the witness Farnsworth from his memorandum. Under these circumstances, if there was any error in allowing the witness to look at the memorandum, it was immaterial. Similar observations apply to the reading of the memorandum by counsel in his argument to the jury.

3. Assuming, as must be done at this stage of the case, that the plaintiffs' evidence was true, we have no doubt that the defendant's foundry was a nuisance; and under the circumstances we cannot say that the damages were excessive.

4. The court did not err in refusing a new trial on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. The affidavit of Gates was in relation to the action of the committee of the board of supervisors above mentioned. If this was relevant at all, it was thoroughly gone over at the trial, as is above stated. The affidavit of the attorney relates to the same subject, and to the question of diligence. The affidavit signed by 10 other persons was merely to the general effect that the acts complained of did not constitute a nuisance. It is too clear for discussion that all this was merely cumulative, and not such as to render a different result probable, if a retrial should be had. We therefore advise that the judgment and order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CREW V. DILLER et al. (No. 13,572.)

APPEAL—TIME OF TAKING.

A judgment was rendered in December, 1887, and an order denying a new trial filed September, 1889. A notice of appeal was filed October 25, 1889. The undertaking recited the appeal from the judgment, but made no mention of the appeal from the order. Held, that the appeal from the judgment was too late, under the laws of California, and the appeal from the order was not perfected.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, Butte county; JOHN GALE, Judge.

John Gale, (A. P. Catlin and W. C. Betcher, of counsel,) for appellant. Park Henshaw, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment, and an appeal from an order denying a new trial. The judgment was entered in December, 1887. The order was made in September, 1889. The notice of appeal was filed on October 25, 1889, and was served the next day. The undertaking recited the appeal from the judgment, and was conditioned to pay the damages on "the appeal," but made no mention of the appeal from the order. In May, 1890, the plaintiff presented a new undertaking, sufficient in form, to one of the justices of the supreme court, and it was approved by him, and filed. The appeal from the judgment was too late. The appeal from the order was not perfected. In this regard, the case is precisely like Schurtz v. Romer, 81 Cal. 245, 22 Pac. Rep. 657. The counsel for the plaintiff say that this case should be overruled; but we think that it is in accord with the statute, and in the line of previous decisions. We therefore advise that the attempted appeals be dismissed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the attempted appeals are dismissed.

DALY et al. v. PENNIE et al. (No. 13,805.)

JUDGMENTS—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

1. Mere error, either as to the law or the facts, in the decree of a probate court distributing an estate, is no ground for relief in equity; the remedy being by appeal, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 963.

2. The dismissal of an appeal from the decree because of the inadvertent omission of the appellant's attorneys to file an undertaking on appeal within the time required by law is not a ground for equitable relief.

3. The fact that some of the heirs were not personally notified of the proceedings in the probate court, and that they failed to appear therein, does not authorize a court of equity to set aside the decree of distribution, as Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1633, 1634, do not require personal notice of the final settlement and distribution of a decedent's estate, but only the posting of notices in three public places in the county.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

John F. Burris, (Henry E. Wills, of counsel,) for appellants. A. H. Loughborough, for respondents.

HAYNE, C. The defendants had final judgment upon demurrer to the second amended complaint, and the plaintiffs appeal. The material facts shown by the pleading are as follows: Anna J. Skerrett died in London, England, being a resident of said place at the time of her death, and leaving a will. This will was proved in an English court, and an administrator with the will annexed appointed there. A duly-authenticated copy was filed in the probate court of San Francisco, and the defendant Pennie was appointed administrator with the will annexed here. In due course, the San Francisco court made a decree of settlement of the final account of the administrator, and of final distribution of the property remaining in his hands. This decree recited, among other things, that there were unpaid creditors in England whose claims had not been presented here, that the estate in England was not sufficient to pay such claims, and that all the legatees and devisees resided in England, except one whose legacy had lapsed, and another who had received his share, and contained a provision that the sum remaining in the hands of the administrator here should be delivered to the administrator in England. See Code Civil Proc. § 1667. The plaintiffs are the successors in interest of certain heirs at law, and the suit is for the review of the decree of distribution, and for a decree of distribution in accordance with the plaintiffs' views of what is proper under the circumstances, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from obeying the decree of the probate court. The main ground upon which relief is sought is that the decree of distribution is erroneous both as to the law and as to the facts; that the bequests were void under the law of this state and of England; and that upon a proper construction of the will the persons to whose interests the plaintiffs succeeded would be entitled to portions of the estate. But an appeal from the decree is provided by the statute, (Code Civil Proc. § 963,) and on such appeal the whole decree can be reviewed. If it be erroneous either as to the law or the facts, the remedy is by appeal. Mere error is not a ground for relief in equity.

It is alleged, however, that an appeal was taken, but that "the clerk having charge of such matters in the office of the plaintiffs' attorneys inadvertently omitted to file an undertaking on appeal within the time required by law, and said appeal was for that reason dismissed by the supreme court without hearing the merits thereof." This is not a ground for relief in equity. Barnett v. Kilbourne, 3 Cal. 327.

It is further alleged that the plaintiffs' assignors "received no notice of said proceeding, and did not appear therein." But the statute does not require that personal notice should be given. Code Civil Proc. §§ 1633, 1634.<sup>1</sup> And it is not alleged that the notice which is required was not given. In re Griffith, 84 Cal. 109, 23 Pac. Rep. 528, 24 Pac. Rep. 381.

The other matters do not require special notice. We therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

REYNOLDS v. BOREL. (No. 12,616.)

VENDOR AND VENDEE—PERFECT TITLE—RECOVERY OF EARNEST MONEY.

Where a vendee makes a deposit to bind his purchase, upon an agreement that it shall be returned if the title is found to be "imperfect, and cannot be made good," he is entitled to recover the deposit when it is shown that one claiming an interest in the land adverse to the vendor's has conveyed that interest to a third person, who still holds it, and also that the land was conveyed to the vendor's grantor by her husband when he was heavily indebted, and while suits were pending to enforce his indebtedness.

<sup>1</sup> Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1633, 1634, require the clerk of the court to cause notice of the final settlement and distribution of an estate to be given either by posting copies of the same in at least three public places in the county, or by publication, as the court may direct.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover a deposit of money made by the plaintiff, Reynolds, to bind his purchase of land from the defendant, Borel. A part of the contract was that the plaintiff, the purchaser, should be allowed 20 days from the date of the contract, within which to search the title to the property, and if the title was found to be "imperfect, and cannot be made good, said deposit will be returned." The plaintiff submitted a proper abstract of title to the land to his attorney, who, within the specified time, pronounced the title imperfect, and objected to it on these grounds: "On the 4th day of June, 1880, Eugene Casserly, was the owner of the block of land including said land, and on said day conveyed the same to one R. Emmett Doyle in trust for the separate use and benefit of his wife, Theresa Casserly, in consideration of the love and affection he, Casserly, bore to his said wife, and to be conveyed to her in fee-simple as her separate property by said trustee whenever thereunto requested by her; and on the 5th day of June, 1880, the said R. Emmett Doyle did convey said block of real property to the said Theresa Casserly by grant, bargain, and sale deed,—consideration one dollar; and the title thus conveyed remained in said Theresa Casserly from thence until the 21st day of November, 1884, when she conveyed the same to Antoine Borel, but the deeds to Doyle, and from Doyle to Theresa Casserly, aforesaid, were not recorded until January 13, 1884. That on the 6th day of February, 1886, John Treat, who claimed to have some interest in said real property, conveyed the same to John Center, who still holds the interest thus conveyed to him. That at the time of the conveyances to Doyle and Casserly, aforesaid, to-wit, on the 4th and 5th days of June, 1880, said Eugene Casserly was subject to the following debts, claims, judgments, and liabilities: The claim and demand of J. F. Eagan for $15,225, and the claim and demand of Charles Mayne for $1,713.85. And upon these claims and demands actions were brought, judgments obtained, and appeals therefrom taken, without stay-bonds, or stay of proceedings affected, as follows, viz: 'In the fifteenth district court, San Francisco. Eugene Casserly, Plaintiff, vs. McNevin, et als., Defendants. (No. 10,227.) Action commenced September 28, 1877. Judgment entered therein against said Eugene Casserly on May 29, 1883, for the sum of $15,225, and costs, in favor of J. F. Eagan, as intervenor in said action; which judgment was appealed from to the supreme court of California, on the 7th day of February, 1884, and was not decided at the commencement of this action. An action in the nineteenth district court of San Francisco entitled "Charles Mayne, Plaintiff, vs. Eugene Casserly, Defendant. (No. 6,891.)" Commenced May 31, 1879, and judgment therein entered on the 13th day of February, 1882, against said Eugene Casserly, for $1,713.85, and costs; which judgment was appealed from to the supreme court of the state of California on the 21st day of February, 1882, and was not decided at the time of the commencement of this action.' And said claims, demands, judgments, and liabilities have in no wise been satisfied, vacated, or set aside, and are still in full force and effect against the property and estate of said Eugene Casserly, who died on the 14th day of June, 1883. But said defendant, Antoine Borel, purchased said block of land, inclusive of said real property described in plaintiff's complaint, without knowledge of any intent on the part of said Eugene Casserly to defraud his said creditors by the conveyances to said Doyle, and from him to said Theresa Casserly, other than from the record thereof, and of the actions aforesaid, and purchased the same for a valuable consideration. That at the time of the conveyances from Casserly to Doyle and from Doyle to Casserly, aforesaid, and by such conveyances, the block of land aforesaid, bounded by Twenty-Fifth street, Folsom street, Treat avenue, and Twenty-Sixth street, including the property in question, was transferred to said Theresa Casserly. That, upon the demise of said Eugene Casserly, his estate was appraised by the appraisers thereof at the sum of $12,091.46." These imperfections were duly reported to the defendant, and a demand made that they be removed and the title made good, or that the defendant warrant the same against all demands, which, being refused by the defendant, the plaintiff demanded the return of his deposit of $360, with which the defendant refused and still refuses to comply. The court below gave judgment for the plaintiff, from which, and an order denying a new trial, the defendant appeals.

There is nothing in the record to explain a claim of John Center to an interest in the land beyond the allegations of the complaint, and the finding of the court that at the time Eugene Casserly conveyed this property to R. Emmett Doyle, and Doyle to Mrs. Casserly, "one John Treat, who claimed to have some interest in said real property, conveyed the same to John Center, who still holds the interest thus conveyed to him." As it seems to us, this fact, existing with reference to a title, would not constitute it free from reasonable doubt, or make it improbable that litigation might grow out of it. Again, there is a state of facts presented from which a prudent man might infer that, at the time Eugene Casserly made this conveyance to Doyle, he was not able to pay his debts; for a conveyance is made in trust to Doyle, who carries out the trust the next day by making a deed to Mrs. Casserly. These deeds were delayed to be recorded for several years,—until after Eugene Casserly's death. Meanwhile, certain large judgments, which were rendered in suits brought before his death, are in existence, unstayed, but on appeal, and unpaid, which amount to more than the value of Casserly's whole estate at his death. Can it be said that, under this condition of things, (even admitting that the defendant here knew nothing but the fact that these judgments were existing and unsatisfied at the date of his purchase, and the delay of recording the deeds from Casserly to Doyle and Doyle to Mrs. Casserly,) these judgment creditors will not hereafter probably commence litigation with Borel as to his title to the premises, if they have not already done so? We think not. As it seems to us, it is very doubtful but what they may litigate. Is, then, the plaintiff here to be required to take the title of Borel as a perfect one, when this sort of reasonable doubt exists? "A perfect title must be one that is good and valid beyond all reasonable doubt. Whether the particular title is good or not is a question which it is often difficult to determine, and one upon which the lawyers and judges sometimes disagree." Turner v. McDonald, 76 Cal. 179, 18 Pac. Rep. 262. "A title to be good 'should be free from litigation, palpable defects, and grave doubts; should consist of both legal and equitable titles, and should be fairly deducible of record.'" Id. 76 Cal. 180, 18 Pac. Rep. 264. It seems to us, under the facts of this case and the refusal of the defendant to warrant the title, the plaintiff here was warranted in considering the title imperfect, and subject to grave doubts. For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed

STEEL V. HOLLADAY.

PLEADING—COMPLAINT—JURISDICTION OF COUNTY COURT—DEVASTAVIT AGAINST EXECUTOR.

1. In an action by an administrator with the will annexed against his predecessor in the trust for a devastavit, in failing to redeem certain stock in a private corporation belonging to said estate, and which had been sold under a decree of the United States circuit court, and by the terms of sale subject to redemption within six months, the complaint must allege that there were assets in the executor's hands available and applicable to the purpose of redemption, and that the proper county court ordered the redemption to be made.

2. Section 895, Hill's Code, confers upon the county court exclusive jurisdiction, in the first instance to direct and control the conduct and to settle accounts of executors, administrators, and guardians, and this includes the power to inquire into a case of devastavit, and to charge the delinquent with the amount thereof.

3. Devastavit is a violation of duty by the executor or administrator such as renders him personally responsible for mischievous consequences; a wasting of the assets; a mismanagement of the estate and effects of the deceased in squandering and misapplying the assets, contrary to the duty imposed on the executor or administrator.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

The defendant demurred to plaintiff's amended complaint, which being sustained a final judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which this appeal is taken. The plaintiff sues as administrator with the will annexed of Ben Holladay, deceased. The amended complaint, after setting forth at length the plaintiff's appointment and qualification, the previous appointment of Joseph Holladay as executor, the provisions of the will, and the condition of said 10,000 shares of the capital stock of the Oregon Real Estate Company, that they had been sold under the decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon for $334,000, and that the executor had been given by said court the right to redeem said stock within six months from the date of the decree, to-wit, July 30, 1888, by paying the said amount for which the stock had been sold, and that there were no other liens or incumbrances thereon, and that the same were owned by said Ben Holladay, deceased,—alleges as follows. "That the said real estate so standing in the name of said Oregon Real Estate Company was, at the date of said sale, and during the time said right of redemption existed, and is now, of the value of not less than $1,200,000, and that said shares of stock were, during all of said time, of the value of not less than $1,000,000, and that the redemption of said stock would have been vastly to the interest of said estate of Ben Holladay, deceased, and not in any way prejudicial to any of the creditors of said deceased, or other persons interested in said estate. That it became and was the duty of said Joseph Holladay, as executor of the will of said Ben Holladay, deceased, by virtue of his trust to pay off the amount of said claims against said deceased, for which said stock had been sold, as aforesaid, and redeem the same for the benefit of said estate, and to prevent said property, worth over $1,000,000, from being sold and taken away from said estate for said sum of $335,000, all of which, with due and reasonable diligence on his part, he could have done. That during the period allowed for such redemption, as aforesaid, there was real estate belonging to said estate of Ben Holladay, deceased, of the probable value of $200,000, which, under the provisions of said will, he had as such executor the power to sell and convert into cash, and that, in addition thereto, he had under his control as such executor personal property belonging to said deceased to the amount and value of over $500,000, out of the proceeds of which he could have easily procured funds sufficient to make such redemption of said stock, or that he could have pledged the same as security for the money with which to have made such redemption, without in any way impairing or affecting the claims or interest of any person in or against said estate, and thereby secured possession of said stock for the purposes of administration, all of which he failed, neglected, and refused to do. That it became and was the duty of said Joseph Holladay, as executor of the will of said Ben Holladay, deceased, within one month from the date of his appointment, or such further time as the court or the judge of the county court of Multnomah county, state of Oregon, might allow, to make an inventory, verified by his own oath, of all the real and personal property of the deceased which should come to his possession or knowledge, and, before filing the same with the clerk of said county court, cause the property therein specified to be appraised at its true cash value by three disinterested and competent persons appointed by said court or judge, and that said county court did appoint three competent and disinterested persons appraisers of said property. That it would have then been the duty of said Joseph Holladay, as such executor, upon the filing of said inventory, or at the next term of the court, to-wit, the first Monday in November, 1888, to have made an application to sell the said personal property of the estate, or so much thereof as was necessary, to pay the funeral charges, expenses of administration, and the claims against said estate, including said claims mentioned in said decree, and it would then have been the duty of the county court to have ordered such sale, and of the said Joseph Holladay, as such executor, to have sold the same and applied the proceeds thereof, or so much thereof as was necessary, to the payment of said claims for which said stock was sold, as aforesaid, and redeem the same as provided in said decree of confirmation. That it became and was the duty of said Joseph Holladay, as such executor, by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, to apply to the county court of Multnomah county, state of Oregon, for an order directing him, as such executor, to redeem said stock out of the proceeds of the other personal property belonging to said estate; and if, upon such application to the county court, such redemption had been deemed not proper or expedient, said county court would have been bound to have ordered said property sold in the manner provided by law, subject to the lien of said decree, and that he was offered and could have sold said stock during the said period allowed for redemption thereof for the sum of $500,000 or $165,000 subject to the lien of said decree and for an amount largely in excess of said $335,000. But said Joseph Holladay, in violation of his duty under the law as such executor, willfully, purposely, and maliciously failed, neglected, and refused to make and file an inventory and appraisal of the property belonging to said estate, or any part thereof, or of said shares of stock; purposely, willfully and maliciously failed, neglected, and refused to apply for an order of sale of said property, or any part thereof, or to sell the same, or any part thereof, or to apply for an order to redeem said shares of stock out of the other personal property of said estate, or for an order to sell said stock subject to the lien of said decree; purposefully, willfully, and maliciously failed, neglected, and refused to redeem said stock, or to borrow the money with which to redeem the same, when offered to him at reasonable figures, or to sell or pledge or mortgage the property of said estate to raise the money with which to pay said indebtedness for which said shares of stock had been sold, and redeem the same, or otherwise to comply with his duty as such executor in the premises; but wrongfully, maliciously, purposely, and through his gross negligence and carelessness, suffered and allowed the time given for making such redemption of said stock to expire without redeeming the same or selling the same as aforesaid, whereby the same was wholly lost to said estate. That by reason of the premises said estate suffered loss and injury, and has been damaged in the sum of $500,000. That, upon petition of said Esther Holladay and said Linda and Ben Campbell Holladay, the county court of Multnomah county, state of Oregon, in the Matter of the Estate of said Ben Holladay, Deceased, on the 31st day of May, 1889, duly made and entered an order and decree in said matter finding and adjudging that said Joseph Holladay had been unfaithful to, and neglected his trust to the probable loss of, the petitioners therein, as alleged and set forth in said petition, and removing him from said office of executor, and revoking his letters as such executor, and that this plaintiff is his successor in office. And that it is necessary for the complete administration of said estate, and to enable the plaintiff to secure funds with which to pay the claims, debts, and charges against said estate, that said defendant should make good to this plaintiff the said loss, and that, unless he does so, plaintiff will be unable out of the remaining assets to pay the debts, claims, and charges against said estate in full, or to pay the legacy provided for in said will. Wherefore plaintiff, as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Ben Holladay, deceased, prays judgment against said defendant in the sum of $500,000, and for costs and disbursements of this action." Defendant demurred to the amended complaint upon the grounds (1) that the said amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and (2) that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit alleged in said complaint.

A. H. Tanner, for appellant. C. H. Carey, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The only question presented on this appeal is the sufficiency of the complaint. It appears that Joseph Holladay had been the executor of Ben Holladay's will, and for cause was removed from his trust. While he was acting as such executor, the property described in the complaint was sold under a decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon, and a time specified in the decree of the federal court within which a redemption might be had. The amount for which the property sold was more than $330,000. Independently of the provision of the Code conferring exclusive jurisdiction on the county courts to settle the accounts of executors and administrators, presently to be noticed, does the complaint state a cause of action? We do not think it does, for two reasons: First. It is not alleged in the complaint that the county court of Multnomah county made any order authorizing or directing the defendant to make such redemption. Manifestly, the executor had no power or authority without the direction of the county court, or at least he was under no legal duty to act and apply so large an amount of the estate under his control, to the redemption of the stock in question. The value of such stock fluctuates, and at boom prices it might appear to be worth a very large sum, and yet, if subjected to the true test of its actual market value in cash, it might not appear to be so desirable as an investment. At least there is room for differences of opinion, and, in the absence of a positive direction by the county court on the subject, the executor might lawfully forbear making the redemption without subjecting himself to the charge of the devastavit. Second. It does not appear from this complaint that there were any assets in the hands of the executor available and applicable to the purposes of such redemption. The fact that he had property is not enough. Whether the county court would have ordered it converted into money, and applied to the exclusive purpose of this redemption, without regard to all other claimants, cannot be known; and to assume that it would have been so ordered, and that the money necessary could have been realized by a sale of the property in time to have made the redemption, would be going further to sustain this action than the facts would justify.

But there is another objection equally fatal to this complaint. The constitution, § 12, art. 7, provides: "The county court shall have the jurisdiction pertaining to probate courts * * * as may be prescribed by law." And Hill's Code, § 895, provides: "The county court has the exclusive jurisdiction, in the first instance, pertaining to a court of probate; that is, * * * (3) to direct and control the conduct and settle the account of executors, administrators, and guardians."

The complaint attempts to charge the defendant with what would have constituted devastavit at common law. It is defined to be a violation of duty by the executor or administrator such as renders him personally responsible for mischievous consequences, and which the law styles a devastavit,—that is, a wasting of the assets; or, to take the definition of the courts, a mismanagement of the estate and effects of the deceased in squandering and misapplying the assets contrary to the duty imposed on him. For a devastavit the executor or administrator, it is said, must answer out of his own means, so far as he had, or might have had, assets of the deceased. Schouler, Ex'rs, § 383. To the same effect is 7 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 346, where the authorities are very fully collated. For a devastavit an executor or administrator is liable to be called to an account in the county court. 2 Woerner, Admin', § 534; Schouler, Ex'rs, § 383; In re McEvoy's Estate, 3 N. Y. Supp. 207; Stiles v. Burch, 5 Paige, 132; Brown v. Brown, 53 Barb. 217; Irwin v. Backus, 25 Cal. 214. And the decision of this court in Adams v. Petrain, 11 Or. 304, 3 Pac. Rep. 163, very fully sustains the exclusive jurisdiction of the county courts in such matters, to the authority of which we fully accede. Counsel for appellant argued that it was the defendant's duty to have gone into the county court and endeavored to obtain an order for the redemption of this stock, and that his failure to do so constituted a devastavit. But the defendant may have honestly believed that method of procedure to have been impracticable, or that the money could not have been thus raised, or even that the interest of the estate would not have been promoted by the redemption; in either of which cases, if he honestly exercised his best judgment, he would not be personally responsible for a mistake. Besides this, if other persons interested in the estate differed with him on this subject, it was their right to apply to the county court and obtain its direction in relation to the redemption which, when given, the defendant would have been bound to obey. It follows that the judgment appealed from must be affirmed.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE—INDICTMENT.

1. In an indictment for selling spirituous liquor without a license, under the act of 1889, it is not necessary to allege in the indictment that such sale did not take place within an incorporated town or city.

2. A motion asking the court to direct an acquittal in a criminal case on account of the failure of proof on the part of the state unless such failure is a total one, must specify wherein it is claimed such proof fails.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; L. B. STEARNS, Judge.

The defendants were jointly indicted, tried, and convicted of the crime of selling spirituous liquors without first having obtained a license therefor, as provided in the act of 1889. The charging part of the indictment is as follows: "M. Tamler and Joseph Petty are accused by the grand jury of the county of Multnomah, state of Oregon, by this indictment of the crime of selling spirituous liquors in this state in less quantities than one gallon, without having first obtained a license from the county court of the county of Multnomah for that purpose, committed as follows: That said M. Tamler and Joseph Petty on the 5th day of July, A. D. 1889, in the county of Multnomah, and state of Oregon, did unlawfully and willfully sell spirituous liquors in this state, namely, whisky, in less quantities than one gallon, to-wit, about one gill of whisky, to one Timothy Maloy for ten cents, the said M. Tamler and Joseph Petty not having first then and there obtained a license from the county court of Multnomah county for that purpose, namely, for the purpose of selling that quantity of liquor, contrary to the statutes in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Oregon. Dated at Portland, in the county aforesaid, this 15th day of July, 1889."

Sears & Beach and Ed. Mendenhall, for appellants. T. A. Stevens, Dist. Atty., for the State.

BEAN, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The bill of exceptions in this case contains several assignments of error, but, upon the argument, they were all abandoned by counsel except that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a crime, and the refusal of the court to sustain defendants' motion for a judgment in favor of the defendants on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify a verdict made at the close of the testimony of the state. The appellants contend that the indictment is insufficient, in that it does not allege that the sale therein charged was not made within an incorporated town or city. The contention is that, as section 11 of the act of 1889 provides that "nothing in this act shall be so construed as to apply in any manner to incorporated towns and cities of this state," it is necessary that the indictment should negative this section. The general rule on this subject is that where the exception or proviso is stated in the enacting clause it is necessary to negative them in order that the description of the offense may in all respects correspond with the statute, but where such exception or proviso is contained in another or subsequent section of the statute it is a matter of defense; and need not be negated in the indictment. 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. §§ 631, 633; Mills v. Kennedy, 1 Bailey, 17. While this seems to be the general rule, there is much diversity of judicial utterances, as to the proper application, and to attempt to reconcile the authorities would be a useless, if not hopeless, task. When the exceptions or provisos are a material part of the description of the offense, it is necessary to negative them in the indictment. The indictment must contain such averments as show affirmatively an offense; and, where the exceptions or provisos are a material part of the description of the offense, the indictment must aver that the act charged does not come within the exception or proviso. The exceptions should be negated only when they are descriptive of the offense, or a necessary ingredient of its definition; but, when they afford matter of excuse merely, they are matters of defense, and therefore need not be negated in the indictment. The offense defined in the act of 1889 is that of selling spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors in certain prescribed quantities, without first having obtained a license in the manner prescribed by law. The provision of section 11 is no part whatever of the description of the offense, nor a necessary ingredient of its definition, but is simply a limitation in the application of the provisions of the act. The description of the offense of selling liquor without a license is full and complete without reference to the provisions of this section; and, since it forms no part of the definition thereof, it is mere matter of excuse or defense, and need not be negated in the indictment.

As to the remaining point urged by counsel for appellants, we are of the opinion that the record before us does not properly present the same for our consideration. The record discloses the fact that, after the state had rested, "counsel for defendants moved the court for a judgment in favor of the defendants on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict." This motion being overruled, an exception was duly taken, and this ruling is now assigned as error. This motion was no doubt intended to follow the practice provided in civil cases where the plaintiff fails to prove a case sufficient to be submitted to a jury, but we have already held in State v. Jones, 18 Or. 256, 22 Pac. Rep. 840, that such practice is not applicable to criminal cases; but the proper practice is to ask the court to direct an acquittal. But, treating this as a motion to direct an acquittal of the defendants, we still think it is insufficient to raise the question argued by counsel in this court. As this is an appellate tribunal, constituted to revise and correct the errors committed by the trial court, it is only when that court has acted, and the act is claimed to be error, and disclosed by the record, that such error becomes the subject of our power and duties. The motion in this case is a general one, and only challenges the general sufficiency of the evidence; that is, says, in effect, there is a total failure of evidence upon a motion of this kind. The only question raised is whether there is any evidence tending to prove the crime charged, not whether the evidence fails in some particular matters. In a motion asking the court to direct an acquittal, where it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to prove the crime charged, it ought to specify the particulars in which it is claimed the evidence is insufficient, unless there is a total failure of proof, otherwise the attention of the trial court will be directed to the evidence as a whole, that is, whether there is any evidence upon which a verdict may be founded, and wholly omit to consider the particular matter in which the alleged insufficiency consists, and which is relied upon in this court, and perhaps subsequent research may have suggested. It is true, unless there is some evidence upon which a jury can find a verdict for the party producing it, such verdict ought not to stand, nor will it, under a motion of this kind, when the evidence considered as a whole reveals a total failure of proof, or want of any evidence upon which to found a verdict. But where there is some evidence tending in a general way to prove the offense charged, but its alleged insufficiency lies in some particular matter or specific objection which requires to be designated or specified to make apparent in what particular that insufficiency consists, and to attract the attention of the court to it, it ought, as a general rule at least, to be specified in the motion of nonsuit, to be entitled to consideration in this court. The evidence in this case tends to show that three and one-half miles from Portland, on the MacAdam road, there is a place known as the "Blue House;" that it is fitted up as a saloon, with bar and other fixtures, with glasses and bottles on the shelves; that it is known as a "saloon;" that defendant Petty usually had charge of the place in the forenoon, and sometimes defendant Tamler in the afternoon, and the general reputation was that the defendants, Tamler and Petty, were the proprietors thereof; that about the 5th day of July, 1889, defendant Petty sold to one Malloy a drink of liquor, which the witness supposed to be whisky, and that Malloy paid for the same; that neither Petty nor Tamler had a license to sell spirituous liquors. A witness by the name of Timothy Malloy was called, and testified in the case, and said he had purchased liquor at different times, and about July 5, 1890, in the saloon claimed to belong to defendants, and had paid for the same. A cursory examination of this testimony would naturally lead a court to think there was sufficient evidence to be submitted to a jury; and while there may be a failure in some particular, unless the particular instance in which the failure occurs is pointed out, it would probably escape attention. The contention of counsel on this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient in this: (1) There is no sufficient evidence of the value of the liquor alleged to have been sold by defendants; (2) no sufficient evidence that the sale was made to Timothy Malloy named in the indictment; and (3) there is no sufficient evidence that the liquor sold was spirituous liquor, as alleged in the indictment. These objections are technical in their character, and do not go to the general sufficiency of the evidence. If counsel for defendants relied upon the grounds urged here for asking the court below to direct an acquittal of his clients, he should have so stated, and thereby given the court an opportunity to have passed upon them, and, if the ruling was against him, preserve the same on the record, so we could be advised thereof. It is very possible that the grounds upon which the appellant now contends the motion should have been granted might have been obviated at the trial, had they been stated. We are not advised from the record what reason, if any, was assigned in the court below, why this motion should have been allowed, nor what question the court actually did decide. We have repeatedly held that error is never presumed, but must be made to affirmatively appear; and, in a case of this kind, the motion should direct the attention of the court and opposite counsel to the precise point made, and the grounds thereof. In other words, as was said by FIELD, J., in Killer v. Kimbal, 10 Cal. 267: "The party must lay his finger upon the point of his objection." To the same effect, McGarrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 429: "It is a wholesome rule," says CHURCH, C. J., in Schile v. Brokhahus, 80 N. Y. 620, "that the attention of the court must be drawn to the precise point intended, otherwise an exception will not prevail." In Edwards v. Carr, 13 Gray, 238, SHAW, C. J., says: "It is very important that no objection to a verdict be brought before this court by an exception which was not in some form taken at the trial, especially in a case where there is ground to believe that if it had been brought to the attention of the judge and adverse counsel it might have been avoided by an amendment, or by a more specific direction by the judge sustaining or overruling it. The party objecting would have the full benefit of his objection in matters of law, if well founded, either by a ruling in his favor or by an allowance of the exception, and the rights of both parties be secure." This court, in the case of Kearney v. Snodgrass, 12 Or. 311, 7 Pac. Rep. 309, has announced substantially the same rule. These rules have their foundation in a due regard to the fair administration of justice, which requires that, when an error is supposed to have been committed, there should be an opportunity to correct it at once before it has had any consequences. The law should not permit a party to make a general motion, as in this case, and lie by without making the particular grounds of his motion known to the court, and take the chances of success, on the grounds which the judge may think proper to put his ruling, and then if he fails to succeed, with either court or jury, avail himself of an objection, which, if it had been stated, might have been removed. This works no injustice to a party, for if there be merit in his motion or objection, he has the full benefit of it, and if there be no merit he certainly ought not to succeed. In the midst of a trial ad hoc, the judge is necessarily compelled to rule upon many questions of law without the opportunity for deliberation the importance of the questions demand, and it is but an act of justice to him that such rulings be not reversed, unless his mind was specifically drawn to the point upon which the reversal was asked and acted upon as deliberately as time and circumstances would admit. In this case, how can we say that the court below committed an error in overruling the motion, unless we knew upon what grounds he was asked to allow it? His attention was not called to the points upon which we are asked to reverse the judgment, nor was there any suggestion as to what counsel would have him hold. Had the court below been asked to sustain this motion upon the grounds argued before us, we cannot say how it would have ruled, and certainly, before we can be asked to reverse this judgment, it must sufficiently appear that the court committed some error justifying such reversal. It follows, therefore, that the judgment below must be affirmed.

MORTGAGES — DESCRIPTION — REFORMATION — STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

1. Where the terms used in the description contained in a deed or mortgage are clear and intelligible, the court will put a construction on those terms, and parol evidence is not admissible to control the legal effect thereof.

2. In a suit to reform a deed or mortgage on the grounds of mistake, complaint must allege distinctly what the original agreement was, and point out with clearness wherein there was a mistake, and that it did not arise from gross negligence of the plaintiff.

3. Section 2840, p. 1314, 2 Hill's Code, does not apply to land sold for delinquent street assessment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; L. B. STEARNS, Judge.

This was a suit for injunction, and to quiet title to certain land in subdivision block 26, of large block C, of Carter's addition to the city of Portland. The only defendants served were Penumbra Kelly, the sheriff, V. B. De Lashmunt, H. B. Oatman, and Sidney Dell, judgment creditors. A temporary injunction was had which, on final hearing, September 27, 1889, was made perpetual. The defendants above-named appeal. The amended complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner in fee-simple, and in possession of the south-east quarter of block 26, of Carter's addition to the city of Portland, Or., which land was, on and prior to June 12, 1876, owned by C. M. Carter; that it was known and designated upon a map, duly filed in the office of the county clerk, as the east 115 feet of lot 5, in subdivision block 26, of large block C, in Carter's addition to the city of Portland, and, according to other maps filed in the office of the county clerk, and by common usage, it is known and designated as lots 3 and 4, block 26, in Carter's addition, there being no block of the number 26, except said block of which said parcel forms the south-east quarter; that prior to June 12, 1876, on February 16, 1876, C. M. Carter made a mortgage to Catherine Quinney upon said property, describing the same as lots 3 and 4, in block 26, in Carter's addition to the city of Portland, that being all the property owned by him in that block or vicinity,—mortgage recorded same day; that, on July 19, 1877, Carter was adjudged a bankrupt; that A. J. Fleurot (assignor of defendant Dell) obtained judgment against Carter, June 12, 1876, and proved her claim in the bankrupt court as a secured claim, by virtue of said judgment lien; that Knapp, Burrell & Co., (assignors of defendant Dell,) and defendants V. B. De Lashmutt and H. B. Oatman, obtained judgments against C. M. Carter subsequent to said mortgage, and proved the same in the bankrupt court in like manner; that Quinney, by leave of the bankrupt court and on notice to the said judgment creditors, who were made parties, foreclosed said mortgage upon lots 3 and 4, block 26, in Carter's addition, which is the same property afore described; that the sheriff, upon an order of sale thereunder, sold the same to D. J. Malarkey, who afterwards conveyed to Quinney, who afterwards obtained a sheriff's deed for said land described therein as lots 3 and 4, block 26, Carter's addition; that afterwards, on notice to said lien creditors, Quinney, by order of the bankrupt court, obtained a deed from Carter's assignee for said land, describing it as the E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of lot 5, in block C, in Carter's addition to the city of Portland; that since July 20, 1878, Quinney and her grantees have been in possession of said land; that on September 25, 1888, C. M. Carter and wife made to said Meier a deed for said land, reciting that in said mortgage it was their intention to describe a parcel of land correctly described as the E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of lot 5, in subdivision 26, in block C, in Carter's addition; that on June 23, 1885, the chief of police of the city of Portland, upon due proceedings had for assessment for street improvements, sold and conveyed to the city of Portland the said property described as lot 5, in block C, in subdivision 26, in Carter's addition to the city, and afterwards said city conveyed same to plaintiff; that plaintiff and his assignors have been in possession of, and paid taxes upon, said tract of land for more than 10 years last past, and neither of defendants have been in possession for 10 years last past; that large sums have been paid on the judgment of A. J. Fleurot; that said and the other judgments constitute a cloud on plaintiff's title. The answer to the original complaint was, by stipulation, to stand as an answer to the amended complaint in so far as it applied, and all further allegations of amended complaint to be considered as denied. It alleges that the sheriff, P. Kelly, had levied upon "the east 115 feet of the south 100 feet of subdivision block 26, of large block lettered C, in Carter's addition to the city of Portland, Multnomah county, Oregon." It denies that Carter, on June 12, 1876, owned the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of block 26, or that he executed a mortgage thereon to Catherine Quinney; denies that the mortgage description was a correct one of the land in controversy, or was in common use, or so described in the maps in common use; denies notice of proceedings in bankrupt court as to said land; denies possession and adverse possession by plaintiff and grantors, and payment of taxes, except as upon lots 3 and 4 of block 26; admits that whatever title Catherine Quinney and Carter's assignees had is owned by plaintiff; also other formal denials. The answer further alleges that on and prior to June 12, 1876, C. M. Carter was the owner of said land levied upon; that previously, in 1871, said C. M. Carter and others, then the owners of said Carter's addition, laid out and platted it into blocks and lots according to law, and caused it to be duly recorded on said date; that there was never at any time, and is not now, any other or further or different description of the lots and blocks of said addition, so far as C is concerned, by any plat of said property than as is in said plat, found on page 490 of Book P of deeds; alleges the making of a mortgage prior to June 12, 1876, by Carter to Quinney upon lots 3 and 4, of block 26, of Carter's addition to the city of Portland, Oregon; the foreclosure of said mortgage without any allegation of mistake, describing the property as above; the sale thereof in 1878, and the sheriff's deed on July 30, 1880; the assignee's deed on October 14, 1880, without notice to the judgment creditors; and thereafter the said Quinney and her successors were in constructive possession only of said land, which is now and always has been, vacant land. The answer further alleges the amounts due upon the said several judgments, and that they have been kept alive; that said judgments are liens upon said land; and pray for a decree therefor. The reply to original answer was also stipulated to stand. It denies that there was never any other or further description of said lots than as set forth in the answer, but alleges that all the blocks in Carter's addition, including said block 26, were so divided into lots that the south-east quarter comprised lots 3 and 4; denies that there were no such lots as 3 and 4, in said block 26; denies that the judgments are a lien on the land; denies knowledge of existence of judgments and of the amounts due thereon; alleges notice at all times to defendants of the rights and claims of plaintiff and his grantors, and that they understood that said mortgage was intended to and did include this tract of land in controversy. Aaron Meier, plaintiff, having died pending suit, his heirs, administrator, and assign under bond for title, were, by stipulation, made parties plaintiff. The plat of Carter's addition to the city of Portland referred to in the pleadings and evidence in this case, is as follows:

The evidence shows that there is no block or subdivision of a block in Carter's addition to the city of Portland numbered 26, except the subdivision 26 of lettered block C, and that, at the time Carter made the mortgage to Quinney, he owned, of record, no property in large block C, except the property in dispute in this suit. The plaintiff, having succeeded by mesne conveyance to the title of Quinney and Carter to the property in dispute, brings this suit to enjoin defendants from selling said property under their judgments, and to quiet their title to the same. A decree was entered by the court below in favor of plaintiff, from which this appeal is taken.

BEAN, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The property in controversy in this suit is the S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of subdivision 26, of block C, of Carter's addition to the city of Portland. Plaintiff claims that the description of the property in the mortgage from Carter to Quinney as lots 3 and 4, block 26, Carter's addition to the city of Portland is a good and sufficient description of the property in dispute, and that, when this mortgage was foreclosed and the property sold, the purchaser obtained a title thereto, free from the liens of defendants, while defendants claim that the mortgage did not describe this property, and, although they were parties to the foreclosure suit, their lien, as against this particular property, was not affected thereby. The plat of Carter's addition, being referred to in the mortgage to Mrs. Quinney, becomes a part of the description contained therein, and is considered as incorporated in the mortgage itself. 2 Devl. Deeds, § 1020. A reference to the plat is therefore necessary in order to determine the sufficiency of the description of the mortgaged property, and whether such description includes the property in dispute in this case. This plat shows a large block lying north of Montgomery street, 480 feet square, with streets all around it. It appears to be subdivided by two lines, one running east and west, and the other north and south, and intersecting each other in the center of the block, forming four subdivisions or smaller blocks, each 230 feet square. In each of these subdivisions are the numbers 23, 24, 25, and 26, respectively, commencing at the north-west corner of the block. This block C is also subdivided by four parallel lines running east and west, which, by their intersection with the north and south lines, make eight smaller subdivisions, or lots, in the block, and are numbered consecutively from 1 to 8 inclusive, commencing at the north-east corner of the block, thus making two of these smaller subdivisions or lots in each of the larger subdivisions, the two in subdivision 26 being numbered 5 and 6. This plat also shows a number of blocks lying south of Montgomery street, each being designated by numbers. The greater portion of the numbered blocks are 200 feet square. One of these blocks, No. 41, is subdivided into eight equal parts, and these parts are numbered consecutively from 1 to 8 inclusive, commencing at the north-east corner of the block. In the center of this block are written the words: "Order of numbering lots." The contention of plaintiff is that subdivision 26 of block C should be deemed one of the blocks of Carter's addition, and that the order of numbering blocks, as indicated in block 41, should be applied to this block, thus making the description of the property in dispute, lots 3 and 4, of block 26, of Carter's addition to the city of Portland, the same as in the mortgage from Carter to Quinney. It appears from the evidence that there is no other block 26 in Carter's addition, except this subdivision of block C, and that, at the time of the mortgage, Carter owned no other property of record in block C, except the property in dispute in this case. I think, from the evidence before us, we may safely assume that, when Carter made the mortgage to Mrs. Quinney, he fully intended to describe therein that property, and that the description of the property in the mortgage was intended to do so; so that if we could disregard the language of the instrument, and construe it according to the actual intention of the parties, whether expressed in the mortgage or not, we would have no difficulty with this branch of the case. But in our construction of the mortgage we are confined to the intention of the parties, as gathered from the contents. As a matter of construction, we cannot change or vary the description actually contained in the mortgage, although it may be plain that it is not the description intended to be inserted therein. Where the terms used in the description contained in a deed or mortgage are clear and intelligible, the court will put a construction on the terms, and parol evidence is not admissible to control the legal effect of such description, (Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. 261; Bond v. Fay, 12 Allen, 86;) but when the description is uncertain and ambiguous, parol evidence will be admissible to fit the description to the thing described, but not to add to or change the words of the description, (Radford v. Edwards, 88 N.C. 347.) In this case we find no uncertainty or ambiguity in the description, but it is definite and certain, and in every way clear and intelligible; and therefore there is no room for the admission of parol evidence. Nor can we agree with respondents' counsel in the construction of the plat. There are two classes of blocks shown in this plat,—one numerical, and the other lettered; and there is indicated on the plat a key for the numbering of the lots in the numerical blocks, and it is sought to apply this key to the subdivisions of the lettered blocks. It would seem from the plat that, after platting that portion of the addition south of Montgomery street into numerical blocks of a given size, and indicating on block 41 the manner in which these blocks should be divided into lots, the parties making the plat, for reason sufficient to themselves, laid off and platted another, and much larger, block south of Montgomery street, and designated it by the letter C. They also took the precaution, it seems to us in order to avoid any question as to the division of the block, to indicate on the plat itself the manner in which it should be done. This block is completely divided and subdivided, and there can be no reason, as we can conceive, why the order of numbering lots as indicated in block 41 should be applied to it, nor could it be done without doing violence to the expressed intention of the parties as indicated on the plat itself, and besides such a division would be impracticable, to say the least. If the order of numbering lots as indicated in block 41 should be applied to each subdivision of block C, there would be eight lots in the center of the block, abutting on neither street nor alley, and with no public way of ingress or egress, a condition evidently never contemplated by the parties making the plat. This is a case where the parties simply made a mistake in the description in the mortgage, that can only be corrected in a proper proceeding.

Plaintiff insists that, if we should be of the opinion that the property in controversy is not described in the Quinney mortgage, we ought, nevertheless, in this suit to reform it so as to make it conform to the actual intention of the parties; but we are precluded from the consideration of that question by the fact that the complaint contains no allegation upon which such a decree could be based. It has been repeatedly held by this court that, in a suit to reform a written instrument on the ground of mistake, the complaint must allege, distinctly, what the original understanding and agreement was, or point out with clearness and precision wherein there was a mistake, and that it did not arise from the gross negligence of the plaintiff, and the mistake must appear to have been mutual. Lewis v. Lewis, 5 Or. 169; Stephens v. Murton, 6 Or. 193; Ramsey v. Loomis, Id. 367. The complaint in this case contains no allegation of a mistake in the mortgage, but is drawn up on the theory that there is no mistake, but an uncertain description. If we should undertake to reform this instrument under the present complaint, we would do so without any allegations to support the decree, and would be deciding a case not presented by the record. The defendants claim to be bona fide lienholders, but have not so framed their answers as to avail themselves of this defense if the facts are with them. The reason assigned for this is that they, relying on the allegations of the complaint, were not called upon to do so, or the complaint does not indicate a suit to reform this mortgage.

It is also claimed that the deed of the chief of police, made to the city of Portland for this property under the sale for delinquent street assessments, having been recorded more than three years prior to any of defendants' executions, defendants are barred from enforcing their liens, by virtue of the statute of limitations. This claim is based upon section 2840, p. 1314, 2 Hill's Code, which reads as follows: "Any suit or proceeding for the recovery of land sold for taxes, except in cases where the taxes have been paid or the land redeemed, as provided by law, shall be commenced within three years from the time of recording the tax-deed of sale, and not thereafter." The contention is that this section, applies to land sold for delinquent street assessments, as well as to that sold for general taxes. Assuming, for the purposes of this case, that the statute of limitations will run in favor of the holder under a tax-deed against a mere lienholder, a question we do not undertake to decide, we are of the opinion that section 2840 cannot be held to apply to sales made for delinquent street assessments. The language of the section is "land sold for taxes" and the section is a part of the general revenue system of the state. General taxes are a burden imposed upon property for the common good, and for the purpose of raising the ordinary revenues of a country, without regard to any special benefit to the owner, except such as may be anticipated from the general administration of the laws for individual protection and the general good. They are exactions from him for the purpose of either carrying on the general government or some subordinate department thereof, while special assessments, such as those made for street improvements, are founded upon the theory that a portion of the community is to be specially benefited in the enhancement of their property by reason of the contemplated expenditure of the public funds, and is therefore, in addition to general levy, required to make special contributions for the intended improvements. In theory at least, the property assessed is supposed to be benefited in an amount corresponding to the assessment, by its increased value on account of the improvement. Cemetery v. City of Buffalo, 46 N. Y. 506; Sharp v. Speir, 4 Hill. 76; King v. City of Portland, 2 Or. 146. There must be special legislative authority for imposing these special assessments, and land cannot be sold therefor, without specific legislation for the purpose. The ordinary authority to sell land for taxes is not applicable to an assessment for street improvements, nor can the statute of limitations provided for the holder under a general tax-deed, be considered applicable to such sales. Cooley, Tax'n, 469; Blackw. Tax-Titles, §615. Since there are important questions between the parties to this suit, as disclosed by this record, which cannot be litigated under the pleadings, we have concluded to dismiss the complaint without prejudice, neither party to recover costs on this appeal.

STEEL v. HOLLADAY.

SALARY OF RECEIVER.

When the parties to a litigation, by their attorneys, ask the appointment of a person as receiver who is an interested party, and represent to the court that his appointment would save the salary to the estate of the receiver then in office, and the court makes such appointment, and he serves as such receiver until removed, without making any claim for compensation, upon an application to the court, after such removal, to be allowed a salary during the time he so served, where the court below refused to make such allowance, held, that no error was committed.

R. & E. B. Williams and C. H. Carey, for appellant. Williams & Wood and Mitchell & Tanner, for respondent.

LORD, J. This is an application of Joseph Holladay for compensation as receiver for services performed as such, in the care, custody, and management of certain property, during the period named therein. The petitioner was appointed jointly with George Weidler, as such receiver, and alleges that a reasonable compensation for his services would be the sum of $250 a month, which aggregates, for the period during which he performed such services, in all the sum of $9,500, etc. After issue was joined, the evidence taken, and the courtfully advised in the premises, it found the following facts: "First, that, at the time of the appointment of said Geo. W. Weidler and Joseph Holladay receivers herein, by the order and decree of this court, it was the understanding and agreement, and it was so represented to the court at the time of their appointment, that, in case they should be appointed such receivers in place of D. P. Thompson, they should not receive or claim any compensation for their services as such receivers, they both being interested in the property of which they were appointed receivers,—the said Joseph Holladay as mortgagee in possession thereof, and the said Geo. W. Weidler as the owner of three-eighths of the capital stock of the Willamette Steam-Mills Lumbering & Manufacturing Company; and that said Joseph Holladay continued to be, while he was such receiver, a mortgagee in possession of said property of which he was appointed receiver, and having and holding a lien thereon to the extent of $346,686.46, and was largely interested in said property as such mortgagee, and was also the principal party defendant to the said suit to which he was appointed such receiver, and would not have been appointed a receiver therein without the consent of Benjamin Holladay; and that he consented thereto with the understanding that said Joseph Holladay, if appointed such receiver, would not claim or be entitled to any compensation as such receiver; and that, in order to be appointed one of said receivers, he consented to act without compensation, and continued so to act during the whole time he was such receiver, without ever having filed or made any claim herein for compensation as such receiver," etc. The evidence upon this finding tends to show that there never was any agreement that the petitioner Holladay should not receive any compensation for his services as such receiver, but it does tend to show that there was a general understanding among the attorneys who represented the parties to the suit, and that it was so represented to the court, that the appointment of the petitioner and Mr. Weidler would result in saving to the estate the salary of the receiver then in office. The petitioner was a heavy lienholder against the estate, and his appointment would hardly have been asked or allowed by the court, unless the consent of the adverse party was understood, at least, to have been obtained. Judge Bellinger, who was of counsel for the adverse party, after admitting some conversations in which it was talked over by the attorneys, in respect to an understanding or agreement among themselves, that the appointment of the petitioner and Weidler would save the estate the expense that was incurred in keeping D. P. Thompson in office, was asked: "Question. I think you and Mr. Strong and others were present at these conversations, and all parties were represented? Answer. Yes, we were present in court here when the matter was presented to the court. Q. Wasn't it stated to the court when this matter was submitted . . . that it would result in a saving to the estate? A. I think I so stated to the court myself. I think I urged it upon the court. Q. Saving the salary of the receiver? A. Yes."

It seems to me that these facts indicate that the matter of saving the expenses of a receiver had been talked over by the attorneys of the respective parties; that they were present in court when the appointment was asked, and when Judge Bellinger stated and urged upon the court, as a reason for the appointment, that it would result in saving the salary of the receiver; and that such representation so made became one of the material facts upon which the order for the appointment was predicated. It is true that, in this connection, Judge Bellinger immediately adds that it was then thought by them that the estate would soon be settled up; that he had no idea that it would continue in the way it has, and involve the labor it has imposed upon the receivers, and expresses the opinion that his statements in this regard ought not to preclude the petitioner, or especially Mr. Weidler, from his right of compensation; "for the fact is," he says, "at that time I supposed the thing would be over in a very little while. We were already negotiating, thinking we could raise the money, and sell this whole property out to a syndicate in the course of a few months, and straighten it all up." This is undoubtedly true, for all the evidence, so far as I have examined it, tends to corroborate it. The reason then, at the time the appointment of the petitioner was asked, that the matter of saving the salary was urged in favor of that appointment, was based on the supposition, honestly entertained and which circumstances seem to justify, that an arrangement could be made by which a speedy settlement of the estate could be effected and the whole matter cleaned up in a few months. This expectation was doomed to disappointment. Instead of requiring only a few months to settle the estate, over three years elapsed, in which the petitioner performed duties in regard to its custody and management prior to his removal, and the estate was not then settled. It perhaps might be inferred from an agreement in which all the parties had joined, which had been made two days previous to the appointment of the petitioner and Weidler, and in which it was stipulated that the court might remove the receiver then in office, and appoint the petitioner and George Weidler receivers to take charge of, manage, and dispose of the property mentioned in the memorandum specified during the term of three years provided in that agreement, that a longer period than a few months was understood and anticipated for the settlement of that estate. But, I take it, the time specified in the agreement was not considered, nor inserted, with reference to the time it was expected that such receivers, if appointed, should serve, so much as to make sure that, no matter what unforeseen complications might arise, enough time should be provided for other purposes for which that agreement was executed. In this view, it is not consistent with the expectation entertained that the estate might and would be speedily settled. Considering, then, that such was the expectation, that only a short period of service was anticipated when it was suggested to the court that the appointment of the petitioner and his co-receiver would save the expense of the salary of the receiver then in office, it does not appear that the court was cognizant of that expectation or calculation; or, however that may be, ought such consideration to influence us to obviate the effect of such representation if it induced the court to act and make the appointment, and grant the allowance prayed for by the petitioner, when he continued to serve during all that time without complaint or compensation? The circumstances already indicated present the parties pro and con, by their attorneys, before the court, all favoring the appointment asked for, and during the consideration of which it is represented and urged upon the court that the making of such appointment would result in saving the salary of the receiver to the estate, and the court, acting upon such representation, makes the order for the appointment. Is not such representation a foundation stone upon which that order of appointment was made, as much so as if the court had so stated in its order, and ought not the petitioner to be bound by it in the absence of any complaint or application for its modification and allowance of reasonable commissions or salary? Was not the court, and those interested in the preservation of the estate, justified in assuming, at least, under such circumstances that compensation was expected, and that the services were continued on the terms which induced and secured his appointment? When it is considered that the appointment lies with the court below, who is supposed to be familiar with the transaction or litigation requiring it, and the reasons for it, the ineligibility of the petitioner without the consent of the adverse party, the representation of saving expenses to the estate to secure it, the many reasons, family and otherwise, which will readily occur for his serving without compensation, the admission to others that he was so serving, the corroborating circumstances that he did continue to serve from the appointment to his removal without any claim for compensation, and the seeming want of any other object to be served by the removal of the receiver then in office, without some such reason, it seems to us no sufficient cause is shown for our interference, or to authorize us to remand the proceeding for the ascertainment of the value of such services. It results that, in our judgment, the decree must be affirmed.

KNIGHT V. FISHER.

DISMISSAL OF ACTION—VERDICT—MISCONDUCT OF JURY.

1. Authority to dismiss an action for failure to file the complaint within the time prescribed by the Code rests in the sound legal discretion of the court.

2. The action of the court upon motion to require security for costs from a plaintiff unable to pay, etc., under the statute, is discretionary.

3. Where the verdict states the facts fully and definitely, in reference to all matters at issue between the parties, it will not be disturbed, even in an action for the recovery of money, on the ground that it does not state the amount of the recovery.

4. Affidavits relating to improper arguments alleged to have been made use of by jurors among themselves while considering of their verdict are clearly inadmissible.

5. An agreement, in advance, by jurors to arrive at a verdict by each juror marking the amount on paper, he is willing to allow, and by adding the said several amounts together, and dividing the same by 12, and that the quotient, or result, shall be the verdict, is manifestly and essentially wrong; and whenever it is proved by competent evidence that a verdict has been obtained as the result of such an agreement, it should be promptly set aside. Quere, whether a verdict thus rendered is a chance verdict such as may be proved by the affidavits of jurors.

6. Jurors are bound upon their oaths and consciences to act intelligently, not blindly. They cannot discharge this responsibility by agreeing that the verdict, or any material part thereof, shall be determined by any process the result of which is unknown to them at the time of the agreement. Each juror must, at all times, be perfectly free to assent to, or dissent from, every material matter proposed to be incorporated into the verdict. They should take into consideration, and give due weight to, the judgment of their fellows; and they may properly be influenced thereby to change their own opinions. They may, in proper cases, base their verdict upon the average judgment of the whole jury, if such verdict finally commends itself to the judgment and conscience of each juror, and is not against the evidence, nor in conflict with the instructions of the court.

Appeal from district court, Ouray county.

Appellee, Fisher, plaintiff below, brought suit in the county court, stating, in his complaint, his demands against the defendant, Knight, in substance as follows:

For work and labor, 14 mos., at $40 per mo.....	$560 00
For money lent, and sundry other demands.....	223 60
Total.....	$783 60
The complaint admits sundry credits, aggregating.....	573 83
Leaving balance in favor of Fisher.....	$209 77

—For which he claims judgment against Knight. Knight, by his answer, admits the correctness of the demands and credits as stated in the complaint, except the claim for work and labor. As to that claim, he alleges that Fisher worked for him only 12 months at the agreed price of $25 per month. Thus, by the answer, a balance is shown in favor of Knight, for which he claims judgment against Fisher. Fisher, in reply, traversed the new matter set forth in the answer. On the trial in the district court, the jury found, "as a matter of fact, that the plaintiff worked for the defendant thirteen months, and that the reasonable value of such services was $36.50 per month." Taking the facts found by the jury in connection with the matters admitted by the pleadings, and the account stands thus:

Due Fisher for work and labor, 13 mos., at $36.50 per mo.....	$474 50
And for other demands.....	223 60
Total.....	$698 10
Less credits.....	573 83
Balance due Fisher.....	$124 27

Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for $124.25. The defendant brings this appeal.

E. I. Stirman and Karr & Kincaid, for appellant. Story & Stevens, for appellee.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The summons in this case was issued November 29, 1887, and served the next day. The complaint was not filed in the county court until January 3, 1888. On account of this delay, defendant's counsel, on December 21, 1887, moved to dismiss the action. This motion was based upon section 32 of the Code, which provides that, "the complaint must be filed within ten days after the summons is issued, or the action may be dismissed," etc. The court would undoubtedly have been justifiable in dismissing the action for failure to file the complaint within the time prescribed by the Code. Upon this point, the only case cited by counsel is Coombs v. Parrish, 6 Colo. 296. If the motion to dismiss had prevailed, the Coombs Case might have some bearing in support of the dismissal; but it certainly does not require the words "may be dismissed" in section 32 of the Code to be construed as equivalent to "shall be dismissed." The phrase "may be dismissed" is not the language of a command, nor of a penalty. It indicates rather that the authority of the court to dismiss the action rests in sound legal discretion. It should be accordingly so exercised.

The defendant, also, moved for a rule for security for costs on the ground that plaintiff was unable to pay costs, and so unsettled as to endanger the officers of the court in respect to their legal demands. That portion of the act of 1885, (Sess. Laws, p. 156,) upon which this motion was based, is the same as the statute of Illinois, where it has been held that the action of the court thereunder is necessarily discretionary, and cannot be assigned for error. It is clear that such discretion should not be overruled by the appellate court, unless it has been clearly abused; and no such abuse appears in this record. Gesford v. Critzer, 2 Gilman, 698; Selby v. Hutchinson, 4 Gilman, 319.

It is objected that the verdict of the jury is not in conformity with the requirements of the Code, and that it is not sufficient to support the judgment. Section 200 of the Code provides: "When a verdict is found for the plaintiff in an action for the recovery of money, or for the defendant, when a counter-claim for the recovery of money is established, exceeding the amount of the plaintiff's claim as established, the jury shall also find the amount of the recovery." It may be said in answer to this objection that the verdict in this case was not found "for the plaintiff," nor "for the defendant." It was a special verdict which the jury, in their discretion, were authorized to render, under section 199 of the Code, leaving to the court, as its legitimate province, the duty of pronouncing the sentence of the law upon the matter contained in the record. We are not disposed to commend the verdict as a model. Nevertheless, the admissions of the answer left nothing ing in controversy between the parties, except the length of time which Fisher had worked for Knight, and the wages he was to receive per month; and the court so charged the jury. The verdict states the facts fully and definitely in reference to both these matters at issue between the parties. Hence, considering the whole record,—the pleadings, as well as the verdict,—which the court is presumed to do in rendering judgment, the determination of the "amount of the recovery" was a matter of mere mathematical computation. There was no error in the charge of the court, nor in the verdict of the jury, prejudicial to the substantial rights of the parties. The difference between $124.27 and $124.25 cannot be regarded as substantial under the maxim, "de minimis non curat lex." Burritt v. Gibson, 3 Cal. 396; American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 360.

The overruling of the motion for a new trial is assigned for error. Among other grounds of the motion was the alleged misconduct of the jury. It was urged that some of the jurors were induced to consent to the verdict, as rendered, by improper arguments advanced by their fellow-jurors, and also that the verdict was the result of a resort to the determination of chance. Affidavits of several jurors, in reference to these charges of misconduct, were introduced upon this motion. The affidavits relating to improper arguments were clearly inadmissible. The courts would have their hands full, if they should undertake to guaranty that only proper arguments should be made use of by the jurors among themselves while deliberating upon the matters submitted to their consideration. The Code (section 217) permits the use of affidavits of jurors to prove that one or more jurors "have been induced to assent to any general or special verdict, or to a finding on any question, or questions, submitted to them by the court, by a resort to the determination of chance." The affidavits of several jurors bearing upon this subject were introduced. One affidavit states: "Finally, the jury determined to arrive at a verdict by each juror marking the amount on paper they were willing to allow, and by adding the said several amounts together and dividing the same by twelve, and that the quotient, or result, should be the verdict. This was done, and the result was the amount placed and brought in as the verdict in the cause." Five of the jurors concur in the following affidavit: "That there was quite a disagreement as to the amount per month to be allowed; * * * that, for the purpose of seeing if the said jurors could not arrive at a verdict, they did from time to time put on their respective ballots the amount which they thought the plaintiff entitled per month, but these affiants distinctly say that it was never agreed that any amount so arrived at should be the verdict of the jury, or that the sum total of said amounts should be divided by twelve, and that the result should be adopted as the verdict of the jury; that, on the contrary, the said jurors, from time to time, resorted to different processes to see if they could not arrive at a conclusion, but under none of said attempts to arrive at a conclusion was there any agreement beforehand that the result of any such attempt should be the verdict of the jury; that the last two ballots were taken upon the question as to whether the rate of $36.50 per month should be adopted as the rate to be paid or allowed the plaintiff, and on the last ballot all of the jurors voted in the affirmative, and the said rate was then for the first time agreed upon as the verdict of the jury."

The remaining affidavit is silent as to any agreement by which the verdict should be determined. From the affidavit first above quoted, counsel for appellant contend that the determination to arrive at a verdict by the method therein stated, was agreed upon in advance of the marking and casting of the ballots; and that each juror, in consequence of such agreement, felt himself bound to abide by the result. Such may be the natural, but is not the necessary, inference to be drawn from the affidavit. We do not hesitate to declare that an agreement in advance by jurors to abide the result of such a method of arriving at a verdict is manifestly and essentially wrong; and whenever it is proved by competent evidence that a verdict has been obtained as the result of such an agreement, it should be promptly set aside. Such means of determining a controversy would enable jurors to entrap, deceive, and defraud each other, and thereby work the grossest injustice upon litigants. Jurors are bound upon their oaths and consciences to act intelligently, not blindly. They cannot discharge this responsibility by agreeing that the verdict, or any material part thereof, shall be determined by any process the result of which is unknown to them at the time of the agreement. Each juror must, at all times, be perfectly free to assent to, or dissent from, every material matter proposed to be incorporated into the verdict. We are aware that the supreme court of California has decided under a statute similar to section 217, supra, that a verdict rendered in pursuance of an agreement, as above indicated, though "vicious and irregular," is not a chance verdict, within the meaning of their statute, and that the affidavits of the jurors rendering such a verdict cannot be admitted to impeach it. Turner v. Water Co., 25 Cal. 399; Boyce v. Stage Co., Id. 460. These California cases, if followed, are decisive against receiving the affidavits of the jurors to prove their alleged misconduct. But, as might be expected, there is considerable conflict of authority upon a question so important to the proper administration of justice. Hence, we postpone further consideration of the question until its determination shall be more imperatively required. Warner v. Robinson, 1 Root, 194; Smith v. Cheetham, 3 Caines, 57; Crabtree v. State, 3 Sneed, 302.

Fortunately, in the case at bar, whether we accept or reject the affidavits, the attempt to show misconduct on the part of the jury, as charged, must fail. The affidavits do not prove that there was an agreement among the jurors that the ver-

It should be determined by chance, or that it should depend upon any unknown result. The preponderance of the evidence is so clearly against such charge that we are inclined to think the juror making the affidavit first above quoted, did not intend to convey such inference. As indicated by the majority of the affidavits, the jury were merely desirous of ascertaining the average judgment of the several jurors as to the monthly wages which should be allowed. We see no objection to the method adopted for procuring such information, so long as each juror felt at perfect liberty to adopt or reject the result, after it became known. Jurors should take into consideration and give due weight to the judgment of their fellows; and they may properly be influenced thereby to change their own opinions. They may, in cases like the one now under consideration, base their verdict upon the average judgment of the whole jury if such verdict finally commends itself to the judgment and conscience of each juror, and is not against the evidence, nor in conflict with the instructions of the court. The evidence as to the length of time Fisher was employed by Knight, and the monthly wages he was entitled to receive, was conflicting; so the verdict cannot properly be disturbed on the ground that it is not sustained by the evidence. It was not error to overrule the motion for a new trial. This disposes of the various assignments of error, so far as they require consideration. The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

ARTHUR V. ISRAEL.

WIFE'S INTEREST IN HUSBAND'S ESTATE—DIVORCE—ESTOPPEL.

Where a wife abandons her husband to live in adultery with another man, whom she marries, after learning that her husband has procured a divorce, then, although after her first husband's death the decree is, at her instance, adjudged void for want of jurisdiction, she is estopped, by having accepted the benefits of such decree, from claiming any share in her first husband's estate as his widow.

Error to Larimer county court.

The case at bar was once before considered upon writ of error by the supreme court. Israel v. Arthur, 7 Colo. 5, 1 Pac. Rep. 438. It was then reviewed, and reversed, upon a record presenting the following facts: Defendant in error in May, 1881, filed her petition in the county court alleging that John Arthur died intestate and without children; that petitioner was his widow; that plaintiff in error, as administrator, being in possession of the property, was speculating with the funds in his own business, and, failing to account for interest, profits, etc.; that certain other parties, as brothers, sisters, and descendants of a deceased sister, claimed to be entitled to the estate, as heirs at law; that petitioner was, on the contrary, sole heir and distributee, under the statute, of said estate. She demanded that her rights in the premises be recognized, and the administrator be required to render his accounts accordingly. An answer was duly filed by the defendants named, in which petitioner's relationship and right to inherit, as the widow of Arthur, deceased, and the misappropriation of the estate, were denied. As a separate defense, defendants, admitting the intermarriage of petitioner with Arthur, alleged that on February 9, 1875, a decree of divorce was entered by the probate court of Larimer county, in favor of the said Arthur and against petitioner. And, for a further defense, defendants alleged that on June 12, 1877, a second decree of divorce was duly made and entered in said court, in favor of said Arthur, and against complainant. Replication was filed denying the new matter in the answer. The proofs upon the trial were confined to the issues thus made. The two decrees of divorce mentioned in the answer were offered and received, in evidence, over petitioner's objection. A judgment was duly rendered in favor of the defendants. Upon reversal by the supreme court, of the case thus presented, and by leave of the county court to which it had been remanded, petitioner filed an amendment or supplement to her original petition, in which the facts of such proceeding, on error and reversal, together with the conclusion reached by the reviewing tribunal in the premises, were duly set forth. Afterwards, plaintiff in error, also by leave of court, filed a supplemental answer to the original and supplemental petitions. In this supplemental answer, it was averred, among other things, that after the divorce decrees were entered, the said petitioner, with full knowledge thereof, and under and in pursuance thereof, and in the life-time of the said Arthur, "entered voluntarily into a contract of marriage with one James H. Israel, and caused and procured the said contract of marriage to be duly and legally solemnized, and, thereunder, took upon herself and assumed the relations of wife to the said James H. Israel, and thenceforward, and at all times thereafter, continuously, by virtue of the said solemnization of said marriage contract, lived and cohabited with the said James H. Israel, as his wife, until, and ever since, the death of the said John Arthur." That prior to the reversal of said cause, although plaintiff in error had continuously, from the commencement of the suit, made diligent and persistent efforts to ascertain the exact relationship existing between petitioner and the said Israel, he had been wholly unable to discover the foregoing facts, and for this reason alone did not plead them in bar at an earlier period. That he would sooner have ascertained these facts, but for the following reasons, viz.: That, in October, 1873, petitioner abandoned the said Arthur, and eloped and fled to remote and unknown parts with the said Israel, and thereafter, and until the divorce decrees were entered, and the marriage contract was solemnized, lived and cohabited with said Israel in a state of adultery, representing herself as his wife. That upon learning of the decrees of divorce, and procuring the solemnization of marriage, as aforesaid, both petitioner and Israel refrained from making the same public because of the desire to conceal and secrets "from their acquaintances and neighbors the illicit and adulterous relations previously sustained toward each other, and to prevent the scandal and disgrace which must necessarily have arisen from a public marriage, or from a marriage taking place at their usual place of abode," and in the usual way. And, finally, that it was only through confidential confessions of petitioner to certain friends, which were kept secret until after the determination of her writ of error, that plaintiff in error became aware of the facts connected with her said marriage to Israel. To the matters contained in said supplemental answer, petitioner demurred on the ground that they were not sufficient in law to constitute a defense. Upon the hearing, the court below sustained this demurrer; and, as leave to plead over was not requested, entered final judgment against plaintiff in error. To reverse this judgment, the present proceeding was instituted.

HELM, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The present controversy has been once before submitted to this court for adjudication. There was then, however, nothing in the record to show that Mrs. Israel, after deserting Arthur, and prior to the divorce decrees, had been guilty of immoral conduct; neither was there anything, aside from these decrees, to indicate that she had not, up to the commencement of proceedings therefor, conducted herself as a good, true, and affectionate wife, or that subsequent to the entry thereof, and with knowledge of the same, she had, during Arthur's lifetime, remarried, and lived and cohabited with another man as his wife. The single question then presented, wholly unembarrassed by any of these considerations, was whether or not the decrees, which were void because the records showed affirmatively that there was no jurisdiction over the person, should have been received in evidence and given the same force and effect as if valid and binding. The court held that they should not; and, for error in their admission, reversed the judgment.

The record now before us, on the contrary, discloses a voluntary acceptance by petitioner of the privileges resulting from the divorce decrees, as well as antecedent conduct on her part, that is highly reprehensible from both a legal and a moral standpoint. That petitioner's purpose was to secure the estate of deceased, was known then as now; but the question as to whether she may accomplish this purpose obviously rests at the present time upon very different considerations from those formerly brought to our attention. We cannot accept the assertion of counsel for defendant in error that the decision of the court upon the former case is decisive of the present review. We still adhere to the opinion that the decrees in question were void and not merely voidable; but assuming such invalidity, and giving to the declaration of this court reciting that fact all the force and effect of a final adjudication thereof, we feel warranted in holding that petitioner's right to the estate of Arthur may still be inquired of. It is to be hoped, for her sake, that the conduct of petitioner is not correctly set forth in the supplemental answer; but the averments of this pleading in that behalf are, by the demurrer, temporarily confessed, and for the purposes of the present decision must be treated as true. The question, therefore, now presented for determination may be stated as follows: When the wife, without cause, deserts her husband and home, and for years lives in adultery with another man, and afterwards, upon learning that a divorce has been obtained by her deserted husband, causes a marriage ceremony with her paramour to be solemnized, and continuously lives and cohabits with him as his wife, may she, upon the subsequent decease of her abandoned husband, take advantage of the fact that the divorce decree is void, for want of proper service of process, and successfully assert against other heirs, her right under the statute of descents and distributions to the deceased's estate, as his widow? An affirmative answer to this question would be so shocking to good morals, to sound public policy, and to the simplest principles of justice, that we shall decline to give it unless coerced into doing so by cogent and firmly established rules of law. As a matter of law, petitioner must, under the circumstances, be presumed to have known before Arthur's death that the divorce decrees were invalid; and it is fair to assume that such in fact was the case, as, besides the grounds upon which the legal presumption rests, she so promptly after that event asserted their invalidity. Had she properly challenged those decrees during the lifetime of Arthur, she would have incurred the hazard of a restoration of conjugal relationship, or of his procurement of a binding divorce. Either of these results was evidently objectionable to her, and both were carefully avoided. She voluntarily elected to postpone action until such time as she might secure all the benefits of the marriage contract, without discharging any of its burdens. Abandoning for years the performance of every marital obligation and duty, she awaited until death had rendered such performance impossible, and then boldly hastened to seize all the pecuniary advantages conferred by law upon the faithful wife and bereaved widow. Under these circumstances, petitioner cannot complain if we insist upon treating the present controversy as one relating solely to property rights, unaffected by those legal considerations which give to marriage and the family their peculiar status, with accompanying special privileges and protection. Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. Rep. 831. But if the divorce decrees receive the same treatment as judgments, or decrees in ordinary controversies relating to damages or property, petitioner's action must fail; for one who accepts and retains the fruits of a void judgment cannot afterwards repudiate his action and take advantage of its invalidity. Water Co. v. Middaugh, 12

Colo. 434, 21 Pac. Rep. 565, and cases cited; Duff v. Wyncoop, 74 Pa. St. 300. The foregoing principle has numerous other salutary applications,—as, for instance, that one, having accepted the benefits of an unconstitutional law, cannot, as a general rule, rely upon such unconstitutionality as a defense, even though the invalidity has been adjudicated in another suit. Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, and cases. Also, that a corporation, having exercised the privileges of its franchise, when sued for its negligent or malicious tort, shall not successfully invoke, as a defense, the plea of ultra vires. Bank v. Graham, 100 U. S. 699. And that in many cases the same inhibition applies after the benefits of otherwise binding corporate contracts have been enjoyed. Railway Co. v. McCarthy, 96 U. S. 258. We discover, upon principle, no sufficient reason why petitioner's conduct in the premises should not produce just as effective an estoppel as if she had received the proceeds of a void judgment for money. By her subsequent marriage with Israel during Arthur's lifetime, she accepted, so far as was within her power, the benefits or privileges of the divorce decrees. The fact that she did not then know that those decrees were void, is a matter of no more consequence than is the ignorance in this respect of one who, knowingly in all other particulars, receives the fruits of an ordinary void judgment at law. That, at the time of her marriage with Israel, she understood the decrees to be valid, is, if true, only an additional earnest of her acquiescence in the result, and sincerity in accepting and taking advantage of the benefits supposed to follow. Besides, had she believed them void, her obliquity would be even deeper than it is; because to her other alleged offenses would be added that of intentional fraud upon Israel, who may have thought that he was contracting a valid marriage. We are not unmindful of the fact that the analogy between accepting the fruits of void judgments at law, and accepting the pecuniary benefits, if any there be, together with the privileges of void divorce decrees, is not perfect in all respects. But the importance and justice of recognizing an estoppel in the latter case may be far more weighty than in the former. The immediate parties are not alone concerned. The public is always, and other individuals are usually, profoundly interested. Public policy, as well as private interest, requires that, so far as may be consistent with fundamental principles of law, one who has attempted to profit by a supposed divorce, and has exercised the resulting privilege of remarriage, shall not, for the mere purpose of obtaining property, be permitted to repudiate his election and thus demonstrate the invalidity of his second marriage, together with the unconscious adultery of his second wife, and the illegitimacy of her children, if any she have by him. Were petitioner attempting, in the light of the present record, to have the divorce decrees held void, her attempt would be futile. And the fact that upon another and different record this court was induced to declare such nullity is, as already suggested, not conclusive of her right to the property in question. It clearly appears from the admitted averments of the supplemental answer that petitioner herself is responsible for the failure of defendant to sooner plead in bar the facts which operate in the nature of an estoppel by conduct; and since, if these matters had been known in the first instance, petitioner would not, for the purpose of securing Arthur's estate, have been permitted to show the invalidity of the divorce decrees, we unhesitatingly conclude that she should not now be allowed to take advantage of such invalidity, in order to accomplish the same result.

The application of a doctrine analogous to that of equitable estoppels to cases which, in essential particulars, strongly resemble the one at bar, is by no means a novelty. Ellis v. White, 61 Iowa, 644, 17 N. W. Rep. 28; Garner v. Garner, 38 Ind. 139; Prater v. Prater, 87 Tenn. 78, 9 S. W. Rep. 361; Duke v. Reed, 64 Tex. 705; Odiorno's Appeal, 54 Pa. St. 175; Bourne v. Simpson, 9 B. Mon. 454; Bally v. Bally, 44 Pa. St. 274; Richeson v. Simmons, 47 Mo. 20; Yorston v. Yorston, 32 N. J. Eq. 495; Sedlak v. Sedlak, 14 Or. 540, 13 Pac. Rep. 452; Nichols v. Nichols, 25 N. J. Eq. 60. In two or three of the foregoing cases, the principle of estoppel was applied where wives had abandoned their husbands and formed adulterous relations with other men, or had simply renounced the marriage tie and forsaken the marital obligations, but where in fact no divorce proceedings were instituted. In at least two of the others, the learned judges who prepared the opinions dwell upon laches as well as acquiescence. These decisions are, in the main, well considered, and we have no disposition to reject the particular reasons, so far as applicable, given in support thereof, but we prefer to rest our conclusion especially upon the specific grounds hereinbefore considered. Petitioner's demurrer to the supplemental answer should have been overruled. The judgment of the court below is accordingly reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

MINING—CROSS-VEINS—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. Rights to cross-veins may be changed by contract, and the settlement of a dispute between the owners of such veins, though ignorant of their legal rights, if entered into in good faith, is a sufficient consideration to support a voluntary agreement for the amicable adjustment of the controversy. The law upholds and favors such consideration.

2. A purchaser of real property must take notice of the rights of those in possession when the circumstances of such possession are sufficient to put a reasonable person upon inquiry in respect thereto.

3. In an action for specific performance relating to real property, the doctrine of laches cannot be invoked by a party out of possession against a party in possession; and the latter is not prejudiced by delay in commencing suit so long as his possession is undisturbed.

4. When the contract upon which relief by specific performance is sought is certain, fair, reasonable, and just, and is proved substantially as alleged, the same may be enforced by decree when both parties are able, if the plaintiff is ready and willing to perform it.

5. The provisions of the Code in reference to uniting causes of action are liberal. Suits should not be unnecessarily multiplied, and statements of fact in pleadings should be in ordinary and concise language, without unnecessary repetition.

Error to district court, Boulder county.

Three causes, involving claims by the same parties to the same mining property, were argued and submitted before this court at one hearing, with the understanding that they would be considered and disposed of together. The causes bear the same title and are numbered 2,213, 2,241, and 2,768 respectively. The first cause is of the nature of an action of trespass quare clausum fregit. It was commenced in the court below in October, 1885, by Henry N. Coffey, Nelson K. Smith, and John W. Blackburn, as plaintiffs, against Charles C. Emigh, as defendant. Subsequently Alpheus Jackson became a co-defendant with Emigh. The allegations of the parties so far as they are necessary to an understanding of this opinion are in effect as follows: Plaintiffs complaining allege that, at the commencement of said action, and for 11 years prior thereto, they were and had been the owners and in possession and entitled to the possession of the Western Slope lode, a parcel of mineral lands situate in Boulder county, Colo., and they further allege that in September, 1885, defendants wrongfully and unlawfully entered upon said Western Slope lode against the consent of plaintiffs, while they were so in possession thereof, and dug, extracted, removed, and carried away valuable ore therefrom. Defendants answering admit the plaintiffs' ownership of the Western Slope lode, with certain exceptions, but deny the entry, trespass, and damage as charged. Defendants further allege that they are and at the time of the alleged trespass were the owners of a certain parcel of mineral lands called the "Emancipation Lode," and that the location of the Emancipation lode crosses the location of the Western Slope lode almost at right angles; that the veins of the two locations are cross-veins; that defendants have a right of way through and across the Western Slope lode for the purpose of working the vein of the Emancipation lode; that they own in their own right all ore taken from the Emancipation vein between north and south side lines of the Western Slope location, except within the space of intersection of the two veins; that prior to and since September, 1885, they have worked the Emancipation vein beneath the surface of the Western Slope location, and within the boundaries of the Emancipation location, but have not touched the vein of the Western Slope location within its side or end lines. Plaintiffs replying, among other things, allege that in January, 1880, there was a dispute and controversy existing between the owners of the Western Slope lode and the owners of the Emancipation Lode as to the ownership of the Emancipation vein where the same crosses the territory of the Western Slope lode claim; that, for the purpose of setting such dispute and controversy, the owners of said claims entered into a written agreement whereby it was mutually and definitely agreed that a certain portion of the intersecting territory of the two claims should be owned and possessed by the Western Slope owners, and a certain portion by the Emancipation owners respectively; and that the several owners entered into and took immediate possession of their several and separate portions as described in said written agreement, and have owned, possessed, and occupied the same continuously by themselves or their several grantees successively until the committing of the trespass complained of in September, 1885; that said trespass was committed upon that portion of the Western Slope territory crossed by the Emancipation territory as aforesaid, not within the space of intersection of the said cross-veins, but within that portion which by the written agreement was to be owned and possessed, and which was at the time of said trespass owned and possessed, by plaintiffs as owners of the Western Slope lode claim; and that defendants well knew of the existence and terms of the said written agreement, and of the rights of the several parties thereunder, at and before they acquired any interest in the said Emancipation lode claim. The foregoing portion of plaintiffs' replication was struck out on motion of defendants, and on the trial evidence of the alleged written contract was disregarded.

The next record discloses an action for specific performance. It shows that in June, 1886, the same plaintiffs commenced an action against the same defendants based substantially upon the matters struck from their replication as above set forth. The complaint states more circumstantially the making of the written agreement for the purpose of adjusting and forever settling the controversy as to the conflicting territory of the Western Slope and Emancipation lodes; it alleges the taking of open, notorious, peaceable, and undisputed possession of these several portions of the conflicting territory thus divided, and the continuous occupation and possession thereof by the several parties, according to the terms of said written agreement, from and after January, 1880; it alleges also that the parties agreed to perfect said written agreement by proper deeds of conveyance at as early a day as practicable; and also avers that plaintiffs are and ever have been ready, able, and willing to convey according to the terms of said written agreement; and concludes with the prayer that defendants may be required to specifically perform such contract by executing proper conveyances, etc.

The third record appears to be in the nature of an action of ejectment. It seems to have been originally a part of the trespass suit, but by order of the district court was separated therefrom, and given a different number, and was tried and determined separately. It is brought to this court as a distinct suit on error. On the trial of the action for specific performance, the court below submitted certain interrogatories to a jury, who found in response thereto that the owners of the Emancipation lode did, about January 1, 1880, enter into a contract in writing with the owners of the Western Slope lode, which writing was signed by all the parties, in which it was agreed that the portion of the vein of the Emancipation included within the side lines of the Western Slope should be divided as follows: The first 50 feet north of the south side line of the Western Slope to belong to the owners of the Emancipation, and the balance to belong to the owners of the Western Slope; and that the parties should exchange deeds in the fulfillment of said agreement as soon as they respectively acquired title from the government. The jury also found that the defendant Emigh did not have notice of the written agreement when or before he purchased an interest in the Emancipation mining claim. The court in its final decree found that the contract in writing was made as returned by the jury, but nevertheless found the equity of the cause with the defendants Emigh and Jackson, and dismissed the plaintiffs' complaints, without prejudice, however, to the trial of the issue at law as joined between the parties. On the last trial of the trespass case, which occurred some time after the trial of the action for specific performance, the court directed a verdict in favor of defendants. The ejectment proceeding shared substantially the same fate. The plaintiffs in error, Coffey, Smith, and Blackburn, assign for error, inter alia, the action of the court below in disregarding their rights under the written agreement.

Geo. S. Adams, John W. Blackburn, Bedford & Wikoff, and J. Berkley, for plaintiffs in error. L. C. Rockwell and S. A. Griffin, for defendants in error.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The three records before us are very voluminous. Nevertheless, as they have been argued and submitted together by counsel, and as the parties and the property involved are the same in each case, we shall endeavor to consider and dispose of them in one opinion. It is conceded that the territory of the Emancipation lode crosses the territory of the Western Slope lode almost at right angles, and that the veins therein are cross-veins. The Western Slope lode is the prior location. Hence, the owners of the Western Slope are entitled to the mineral within the space of intersection of the two veins; but, in the absence of contract, the owners of the Emancipation are entitled to a right of way through the territory of the Western Slope location for the purpose of working their own vein, and are entitled to all the ore found therein except within the space of intersection. Such is the law as declared in Branagan v. Dulaney, 8 Colo. 408, 8 Pac. Rep. 669; Lee v. Stahl, 9 Colo. 208, 11 Pac. Rep. 77. See, also, the latter case in 13 Colo. 174, 22 Pac. Rep. 436.

It is further conceded that the acts of defendants complained of were committed upon the conflicting territory,—that is, within the limits where the two locations cross each other, and within that portion of such limits which by the written agreement was to be owned and possessed as a part of the Western Slope location, though not within the space of actual intersection of the two veins; hence the question whether or not defendants were guilty of trespass depends upon whether or not the written agreement and the conduct of the parties thereunder, as set forth in the replication, controlled the rights of the parties in reference to the conflicting territory. In January, 1880, when the alleged written agreement was entered into for the division of the territory embraced within the conflicting locations, the law was unsettled as to the rights of owners of cross-veins within the limits of conflicting locations. The case of Branagan v. Dulaney was not decided until 1885, and up to this time we are not aware of any decision by the supreme court of the United States construing the act of congress relating to the precise question now under consideration. Rev. St. U. S. § 2336. We see no reason to doubt that the dispute between the owners of the respective mining claims as to their several rights within the space of the conflicting locations was caused by an honest difference of opinion in relation thereto, and that all parties acted in good faith in endeavoring to settle the same. There was, therefore, sufficient consideration to support the voluntary written agreement for the amicable settlement of such controversy. The law upholds and favors bona fide settlements based upon such considerations. 1 Pars. Cont. 438; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 850. In Hoge v. Hoge, 1 Watts, 216, 217, Chief Justice Gibson says: "The compromise of a doubtful title, when procured without such deceit as would vitiate any other contract, concludes the parties, though ignorant of the extent of their rights." Plaintiffs having alleged that they had taken and continued in possession of their several portions of the disputed territory in pursuance of said written agreement, were entitled to prove the same in support of their claim of lawful possession, and for the purpose of showing that the entry by defendants without license was unlawful. It was, therefore, error to strike from the replication in the trespass suit the averments respecting the written agreement, and the conduct of the parties in reference thereto. In the action for specific performance, the court and jury concurred in finding that the owners of the conflicting mining locations did enter into the contract in writing to divide the disputed territory, and to exchange deeds in fulfillment of such contract as soon as they should respectively acquire the government title. This finding corresponds substantially with the allegations of the complaint, and is abundantly sustained by the evidence. The defendant Jackson was a party to the written agreement, and joined in its execution; hence, as to him, no question of notice can arise. The jury, however, found that defendant Emigh did not have notice of the written agreement when he purchased an interest in the Emancipation lode; but the decree of the court does not in express terms confirm such finding. Whether Emigh had such notice or not before purchasing, the evidence is strong and convincing that after acquiring such interest he repeatedly recognized the title of the Western Slope owners under the written agreement. It is clearly established, also, that the owners of the Western Slope lode, immediately upon the execution of the written agreement, and in pursuance thereof, entered into possession of that part of the Emancipation territory so acquired by them, and proceeded to sink a shaft at the 50-foot division line designated in the written agreement, erected a shaft-house there, and thereafter continued their possession and working of that portion of the vein as a part of their own mining claim. Emigh himself testifies that he saw this shaft at the time he visited the property with a view of purchasing, and other witnesses testify that the shaft-house was in plain sight, and that the dump and evidences of fresh workings were observable there at the time. The court, therefore, should have found, notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, that plaintiffs were entitled to the premises thus acquired and occupied. Their possession under the written agreement, and the circumstances attending the same, were sufficient to put Emigh upon inquiry as to their rights in the premises. Besides, there is positive testimony from a witness, apparently disinterested, that before Emigh purchased he was expressly informed of plaintiffs' rights according to the terms of the written agreement. Emigh denies this, but his subsequent conduct indicates that he was not without satisfactory information upon the subject. Wade, Notice, § 10 et seq.; Filmore v. Reithman, 6 Colo. 120; Doyle v. Teas, 4 Scam. 202.

The contention that there were laches on the part of plaintiffs in not asking for a specific performance of the contract at an earlier date is without force. Plaintiffs were and had been in the undisturbed possession and enjoyment of the premises acquired by them under the written agreement for more than five years after the agreement was entered into, and until about one month prior to the commencement of this litigation. The agreement had thus been executed for all practical purposes, and, instead of plaintiffs' title becoming stale by delay, it was ripening by the continued acquiescence of defendants. See Great West Min. Co. v. Woodmas of Alston Min. Co., 14 Colo. —, 20 Pac. Rep. 771. In Bush v. Stanley, 122 Ill. 418, 13 N. E. Rep. 249, it is said: "The doctrine of laches can only be invoked by one in possession against one out of possession." That there may have been secret under-ground trespasses upon plaintiffs' territory thus acquired does not militate against the correctness of these views. Nothing appears to have been wanting to complete the execution of the written agreement except the formality of passing the title-deeds.

As to the alleged variance between the allegations and the proof on the part of plaintiffs it is only necessary to say that in view of the loss of the written agreement and the resort to parol evidence the proof is remarkably clear, strong, and harmonious, and, in general, corresponds with the substance of the issue as presented by the pleadings. This is all the law requires. It is true some testimony is contradictory of, and some is variant from, the terms of the written agreement as alleged, but such testimony is by no means sufficient to warrant an appellate court in setting aside the finding of the jury, confirmed as it is by the judgment of the trial court. Railroad Co. v. Lindsay, 4 Wall. 650; Crary v. Smith, 2 N. Y. 60. The failure of the trial court to confirm the finding of the jury as to want of notice to defendant Emigh, together with the dismissal of the complaint "without prejudice to the trial of the issue at law as joined between the parties," indicates, as we think, that the trial court considered that plaintiffs had established their right to the property in controversy as against defendants, but that the case was not a proper one for a decree of specific performance, and hence remitted them to their action for damages. The written agreement, as alleged and substantially proved, seems to us to be certain, fair, reasonable, and just. The parties had entered into and continued in possession of the property in pursuance of its terms for a long time. Both parties are still able to carry out the contract. Plaintiffs are willing so to do. No good reason has been shown why defendants should not be required to perform on their part. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 747-751; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1407; Crary v. Smith, supra.

It is unnecessary to consider in detail the third record, which for convenience we have called the "action of ejectment." Its separation from the trespass case was an irregularity. In the course of this litigation there has been an unnecessary multiplication of suits, and in each case the pleadings have been excessively voluminous. The provisions of our Code of Procedure in reference to the uniting of causes of action are very liberal. The statements of fact in pleadings are required to be "in ordinary and concise language without unnecessary repetition." In all cases, equitable relief may be granted, and legal and equitable defenses may, if separately and properly stated, be set forth in the answer. Code, §§ 49, 56, 59, 70; Bank v. Newton, 13 Colo. 245, 22 Pac. Rep. 444. The three judgments under consideration are accordingly reversed and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion. As the multiplied records and increased costs of the so-called ejectment proceeding were occasioned by the action of plaintiffs in the court below, the costs thereof are adjudged against them.

INTEREST—ACCOUNT—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

1. Gen. St. Colo. § 1707, provides, among other things, that interest at the rate of 10 per cent. shall be allowed "on money due on the settlement of an account, from the day of the last just entry that may have been made" therein. Held that, where lime was sold in various shipments, a payment made thereon, and afterwards a bill was presented which showed the last shipment, and thereupon the account was settled and the debtor agreed in writing to pay it, interest was properly allowed from the date of the last item.

3. When the sole error relied on is that the judgment is unsupported by the evidence, a bill of exceptions, signed and sealed by the trial judge, and exhibiting the testimony, is indispensable.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Arapahoe county court.

Gen. St. Colo. § 1707, provides, among other things, that interest at the rate of 10 per cent. shall be allowed "on money due on the settlement of an account from the day of the last just entry that may have been made in an account."

Joseph N. Baxter, for appellant.

BISSELL, C. The appellees, who were copartners in business, brought this action in 1887, before a justice of the peace, against Bergundthal, the appellant, to recover $300, which they alleged to be due for lime previously sold to him. The trial resulted in a judgment for plaintiffs for the amount claimed, which was, on appeal to the county court, affirmed. The case might easily be affirmed in this court upon the record as it stands. There is no bill of exceptions in the record, signed and sealed by the judge before whom the case was tried, exhibiting the testimony introduced upon the trial.

It has been repeatedly held by this court that such a bill, signed and sealed under the statute, is absolutely indispensable to warrant a hearing, when the sole error relied on is that the judgment is unsupported by the evidence. But it is wholly unnecessary to put the decision upon that technical ground. There is nothing in the record, or in the testimony as it is contained in what purports to be a bill of exceptions, which would warrant a reversal of the action taken by the court below. The judgment is abundantly supported by the testimony, for there was no controversy whatever concerning the amount of lime shipped, or the price at which it was sold, and which the defendant agreed to pay for it. Had all the damages been allowed concerning which the appellant testified, the judgment would not have been reduced below the sum for which it was entered. But apparently it is not seriously contended by the appellant that the recovery is not abundantly sustained by the evidence. The reversal is insisted upon, on the sole ground that the court erred in allowing interest upon the account from the time of the sale of the lime to the date of the rendition of the judgment. The claim that interest should not have been allowed is not well founded. There is no question that, under the statute and the authorities in force at the time of the trial, interest could only be recovered in matters of contract when the case was brought within the general terms of the statute regulating its recovery. This case seems to come absolutely within the statutory provisions. The lime was sold by the car-load, prior to the 16th day of July, 1884. The last car-load was shipped about that time. On the account the defendant made a payment amounting to $165 and some cents. The balance he agreed to pay, and, in express terms, over his own signature, promised to pay interest thereon. The account was determined, and the amount settled and agreed upon on the presentation of the bill for what had been already sold. The bill itself was rendered at that time, and upon its face showed the date of the last item of the account as it existed between the parties. When the bill was presented, its accuracy was not disputed, and the defendant agreed to pay it as soon as he was able. From this it appears that the amount of money sued for was due upon the settlement of the account, and had so become on the date of the last entry in it, which was the date of the sale of the last car-load of lime. It is thus apparent that, even though there had been a good record, with a proper bill of exceptions filed in this court, the judgment must in any event have been affirmed. The judgment is affirmed.

RICHMOND and REED, CC., concur.

COLORADO M. RY. CO. v. BROWN et al.

EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE.

1. In proceedings under the act of eminent domain in this state, the proper measure of the owner's recovery is: (1) Compensation for the land or property actually taken equal to the true and actual value thereof at the time of the appraisalment. (2) Damages to the residue of the land or property equal to the actual diminution of its market value, if any, for any use to which the same may reasonably be put.

2. In arriving at the value of the property taken, and the damages, if any, to the residue, all evidence having a bearing upon the compensation and damages to be awarded is admissible. With proper instructions from the court we must presume that the jury do not draw improper inferences from competent evidence.

3. It would be an unsafe rule to prevent the owner from recovering the actual damages done to the residue of his premises by the mere declaration of a witness that it was the intention of the party doing the injury to repair the damage at some future time.

4. Where evidence in relation to certain damage is admitted without objection or exception at the trial, the propriety of including such damage, if any, in the assessment, cannot be questioned on appeal.

Appeal from district court, Pitkin county.

This is an appeal from a judgment awarding compensation and damages to appellees for a strip of land through their premises taken for right of way for appellant's railroad.

H. T. Rogers, A. E. Pattison, and Wilson & Stimson, for appellant. C. W. Franklin, for appellees.

ELLIOTT, J. The assignments of error are very numerous, but counsel in their printed argument have very considerably abandoned most of them. This practice is to be commended. In the hurry of a trial ad nisi prius many exceptions are often taken which counsel find are of no avail when they come to prepare briefs for the appellate court. By frankly withdrawing all assignments except such as are seriously relied on, counsel save themselves and the court of review much unnecessary labor, and secure attention more readily to the important matters involved in the record. It is often hard to find a kernel of wheat in a bushel of chaff. The matters discussed in the brief of counsel relate solely to the admission and rejection of evidence. From the evidence it appears that the premises through which appellant sought to condemn a right of way were situated on the Roaring Fork river, and were occupied and used by appellees for a planing-mill and lumber-yard, and that it was necessary to keep large quantities of lumber stored upon the premises. The location was peculiarly available and valuable as a mill-site on account of its water-power, which could be used for operating different kinds of machinery. Appellees were permitted to show the market value of the water-power, and its adaptability to the operation of mining machinery and electric motors in and about the city of Aspen, although such uses had not been actually arranged for at the time. They were also allowed to show the cost of making certain changes in the flume which it was claimed would be rendered necessary by the construction of the railroad at the place designated, and also to show the loss which would be thereby occasioned to the water-power. Evidence was also admitted showing the quantity and value of the lumber stored on the premises, and the cost of removing the same to a place less exposed to the increased danger from fire which the construction and operation of the railroad would occasion. To the admission of these several matters of evidence objections were interposed by counsel for appellant on the ground that the same were entirely speculative, and furnished no proper criterion for the assessment of compensation and damages.

In proceedings under the act of eminent domain in this state, the owner's recovery is not limited to the value of the property for the special use to which it is devoted at the time of the taking or trial, nor to any particular use. The value of property must necessarily be a matter of opinion, and is, therefore, always somewhat speculative. The proper measure of the owner's recovery is: (1) Compensation for the land or property actually taken equal to the true and actual value thereof at the time of the appraisement. (2) Damages to the residue of the land or property not taken, equal to the actual diminution of its market value, if any, for any use to which the same may reasonably be put; and in determining such damages the use to which the property taken is subjected, and the loss and inconvenience thereby occasioned, may be taken into consideration, as the construction and operation of a railroad. Eminent Domain Act, (approved February 12, 1877.) § 17; City of Denver v. Bayer, 7 Colo. 113, 2 Pac. Rep. 6; Railroad Co. v. Allen, 13 Colo. 229, 22 Pac. Rep. 605; Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 478-

487; Railway Co. v. Vance, 115 Pa. St. 331, 8 Atl. Rep. 764; Johnson v. Railway Co., 111 Ill. 413; Weyer v. Railroad Co., 68 Wis. 180.<sup>1</sup> From the foregoing rules and decisions it will be observed that in arriving at the value of the property taken, and the damages, if any, to the residue, a wide range of evidence is admissible. It must be conceded that the matters admitted in evidence on the trial of this case, as above stated, have some bearing upon the compensation and damages to be awarded by the jury, though, without proper instructions from the court, the jury might be misled by such evidence. But as counsel do not urge in argument anything against the charge, and as upon examination the instructions appear to be full and fair, we must presume that the jury did not draw improper inferences from the evidence.

It was shown in evidence in behalf of appellees that appellant, while constructing its road-bed, rolled or deposited certain large boulders upon the land of appellees, some of them so large that it took six mules to move them out of the excavation. The amount of appellees' land covered by the deposit of the boulders is not shown in the record, though it was pointed out on the map at the trial. On the part of appellant, one witness testified that these boulders were deposited outside "temporarily, waiting for the track to be laid in order to take them off." The withdrawal of this latter testimony from the jury on motion of appellees is assigned for error. It would be an unsafe rule to prevent the owner from recovering the actual damages done to the residue of his premises by the mere declaration of a witness that it was the intention of the party doing the injury to repair the damage at some future time. No injustice was done by striking out this testimony. It was not shown nor offered to be shown that the boulders were ever removed by appellant; and, if appellees are allowed to recover for such damage, appellant cannot be required to remove the boulders. Dorlan v. Railroad Co., 46 Pa. St. 520.

It has been suggested, though not in the briefs of counsel, that the damage occasioned by depositing the boulders upon the lands of appellees is not recoverable in a proceeding of this kind on the ground that such damage cannot be reasonably foreseen or anticipated as a consequence from the construction or operation of the railroad. Water Co. v. Middaugh, 12 Colo. 438, 21 Pac. Rep. 565. Undoubtedly, if the trial and assessment of damages in the proceeding had taken place before the construction of the road, and the boulders had afterwards been thrown upon the land, appellees would not have been precluded from maintaining an independent suit for the trespass. But, as the damage was thus occasioned before the trial, it is not so clear that appellees must resort to a separate action therefor. It is unnecessary, however, to determine this question, for the evidence in relation to the boulders having been admitted in behalf of appellees in the court below, without objection or exception, the propriety of including such damage, if any, in the assessment, cannot be questioned on this appeal. Counsel doubtless desired that whatever liabilities appellant was responsible for should be settled in one suit, and so did not raise the question above suggested. The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

SAMPSON MINING & MILLING CO. v. SCHAAD.

MASTER AND SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

1. It is the duty of employers engaged in extracting ores from the bowels of the earth to exercise reasonable diligence to keep their mines secure from danger to their employes, and miners engaging in such service assume the ordinary risks and perils incident to such employment.

3. When the precise position, which a fallen stull occupied in the roof of a mine before an accident, could not be shown with certainty so as to determine whether there was or was not negligence in placing the same in the roof, it was proper to admit evidence showing the construction of other parts of the roof adjacent thereto so far as such other parts could be shown to have been constructed in a similar manner.

3. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence are generally questions of fact to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court upon matters of law.

4. Where a person not skilled in timbering mines was employed as a "trammer" in and about a mine for a considerable period before he was injured by the falling of a defective roof, held, that his means of knowledge concerning the condition of the roof was simply a matter for the consideration of the jury in determining the question of contributory negligence.

Appeal from district court, San Juan county.

Charles Schaad, plaintiff below, brought this action against the Sampson Mining & Milling Company for personal injuries suffered by himself while at work for defendant in the lower level of its mine. The injuries were very serious, and were occasioned by the falling of the roof of the mine, thus burying plaintiff under the roofing material and a great quantity of rock and other debris. The injuries are alleged in the complaint to have happened without any fault or negligence of plaintiff, and to have been caused by the improper construction and unsafe condition of said roof; that such unsafe condition was, at the time of plaintiff's injuries, and long prior thereto, known to defendant; and that said injuries happened in consequence of the failure of defendant to provide plaintiff with a place in which he could do his work with reasonable safety. The answer admits its employment of plaintiff, as set forth in the complaint, and that the roof of the mine fell upon plaintiff, but denies that the falling of the roof was caused by the negligence of defendant, denies the extent of plaintiff's injuries as alleged, and denies the other allegations of the complaint. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings this appeal. The only assignments of error insisted on are to the effect that the verdict is against the law and is not sustained by the evidence, and that the court erred in admitting improper evidence on behalf of plaintiff against the objection of defendant.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) That it is the duty of employers engaged in extracting ores from the bowels of the earth to exercise reasonable diligence to keep their mines secure from danger to their employes, and that miners engaging in such service assume the ordinary risks and perils incident to such employment, are legal propositions which were accepted as correct in the court below as well as on this appeal. Considerable evidence was given at the trial by persons of learning and experience in timbering mines, showing how timbers should be placed in and about the walls and roofs of mines in order that the same might be reasonably secure from danger. This evidence was for the purpose of establishing, in the minds of the jury, a standard by which they could determine whether or not the defendant company had discharged its duty to its employes by providing them with a reasonably safe place to perform their service, considering the nature of their employment. Evidence was also admitted tending to show that the timbers in defendant's mine were not placed in proper position to make a reasonably strong and secure roof; and, in this connection, evidence was admitted against the objection of defendant showing the position or angle at which the stulls were placed in, upon, or against the walls of the mine adjacent to the place of the accident, as well as the position of the particular stull which gave way.

It might be impossible to show with certainty, by direct evidence, the precise position which the fallen stull occupied before the accident, so as to determine whether there was or was not negligence in placing the same in the roof. Hence, it was proper to admit evidence showing the construction of other parts of the roof adjacent thereto so far as such other parts could be shown to have been constructed in a similar manner. From such data a legitimate inference might be drawn as to the cause of the roof giving way as it did. It was not error to admit such evidence.

It is insisted by counsel for appellant that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a finding of negligence against the defendant company; and that, even if the evidence would justify such finding, it also shows plaintiff to have been guilty of contributory negligence, inasmuch as he had been employed as a workman in and about the mine at different times for a considerable period before he was injured.

The plaintiff's employment was to haul ore from the interior of the mine to the ore-house by means of a vehicle called a "tram." In mining parlance, he was called a "trammer." He was not a skilled miner, but a common laborer. He did not profess to be skilled in timbering mines; nor does it appear that his duties required that he should be; neither does it appear that he had anything to do with constructing the roof which fell, or any part thereof. His means of knowledge concerning its condition, therefore, was simply a matter for the consideration of the jury in determining the question of contributory negligence. Wells v. Coe, 9 Colo. 167, 11 Pac. Rep. 50. We have carefully examined the evidence. It is somewhat conflicting, and it may be admitted that the jury would have been warranted in rendering a different verdict. We do not, however, perceive any clear and substantial reason which would justify an appellate court in exempting this case from the application of the rule that questions of negligence and contributory negligence are generally questions of fact to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court upon matters of law. Electric Co. v. Lubbers, 11 Colo. 508, 19 Pac. Rep. 479; Lord v. Refining Co., 12 Colo. 393, 21 Pac. Rep. 148. All questions of fact were fairly submitted to the jury by the charge of the trial judge. No objection whatever is urged on this appeal against the instructions. The judgment of the district court must accordingly be affirmed.

HAYT, J., having presided at the trial below, did not participate in this decision.

SUTTON V. DANA.

(Supreme Court of Colorado. May 19, 1890.)

CONVERSION—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—SALES BY INSOLVENT DEBTOR.

1. The general rule is that the measure of damages in actions for the conversion of personality is the value of the property at the time of the taking, with legal interest thereon from the date of the taking to the date of rendering verdict.

2. When instructions prayed state the law applicable to the issues and the evidence with substantial accuracy, they should be given in substance.

3. Ordinarily, an extended charge to the jury is unnecessary; but when the question to be determined by them is complicated, and dependent upon a variety of circumstances and conditions, it is important that the jury should be guided in their deliberations by the learning and experience of the presiding judge.

4. The fact that a party at the time of making a sale is insolvent or unable to pay all his debts does not deprive him of the power or render it unlawful for him to make such sale. A debtor in such condition may lawfully sell and dispose of his property, provided he does so for a fair and adequate and valuable consideration paid or to be paid by the purchaser, and from lawful motives, or without fraudulent intent as respects his creditors. His motives will be presumed to be lawful, and his intent not fraudulent, until the contrary is shown. Insolvency, if it exists, is only a circumstance to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the question of fraudulent intent, for which alone the sale may be set aside. Of itself, insolvency constitutes no obstacle to the sale, or to its lawfulness or validity, if fairly and honestly made.

5. An insolvent debtor may lawfully prefer some of his creditors to others, and pay some of them in full, leaving others partially or wholly unpaid so far as he shall be without means of payment, and may lawfully sell and dispose of his property for a fair, adequate, and valuable consideration, for the purpose of making such payment or payments. The law permits an insolvent debtor to make choice of the creditors he will pay, and the mode or means by which he will make such payment, and something beyond such preference or payment must appear before the transaction is to be considered fraudulent. The preference of creditors by a failing debtor is not necessarily fraudulent.

Appeal from district court, Douglas county.

The appellant was plaintiff below, and brought his action against defendant for the taking and conversion of a stock of merchandise, of which plaintiff claimed to be the owner. The defendant was sheriff of El Paso county, and justified the taking under judgment and execution against one Conant, the original owner of the property, pleading specially that the sale thereof to plaintiff was fraudulent and void as against the creditors of Conant. The evidence tended to show that Conant, being in the mercantile business, and in failing circumstances, sold the stock of merchandise in controversy to the plaintiff, Sutton, taking Sutton's notes therefor, and that Conant immediately transferred the notes to certain of his creditors other than the judgment creditors represented by the sheriff. The principal controversy at the trial was whether such sale of the goods to Sutton invested him with a good title as against such creditors. The defendant undertook to prove that Conant made the sale with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, and that plaintiff had knowledge of such intent; and also that the sale was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the goods sold. The plaintiff gave evidence tending to show that the sale was made in good faith for a valuable consideration, and with intent to apply the proceeds thereof towards the payment of Conant's indebtedness, and not for any unlawful purpose. The verdict and judgment were in favor of defendant. The assignments of error relate to the giving and refusing of instructions, and to the overruling of the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The general rule is that the measure of damages in actions for the conversion of personality is the value of the property at the time of the taking, with legal interest thereon from the date of the taking to the date of rendering verdict. It was error for the court to refuse to give an instruction to this effect, as requested by plaintiff's counsel. The error, however, is not material upon this review, unless it be found that other error was committed which may have improperly caused the trial to result in favor of defendant. Refining Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 59, 21 Pac. Rep. 925; Oppenheimer v. Railway Co., 9 Colo. 321, 12 Pac. Rep. 217. The charge of the court, as given, other than the matter relating to the measure of damages, appears to be unobjectionable. The principal matter complained of is the refusal of the court to charge the jury as requested by plaintiff's counsel. It is the right of a party to pray instructions in writing to be given to the jury at the proper time; and when instructions thus prayed state the law applicable to the issues and the evidence with substantial accuracy, they should be given in substance. The instructions prayed in behalf of plaintiff were numerous and comprehensive. They were each and all refused. Ordinarily, an extended charge, such as was requested in this case, would be altogether unnecessary, and perhaps injurious to the ends of justice, in a trial by jury. But the question of fraudulent intent in actions of the kind under consideration is often a complicated one. The acts which a failing debtor, situated as Conant was, may or may not lawfully do, depend upon a variety of circumstances and conditions. The law relating to such transactions is familiar to the legal profession, and may be supposed to be generally understood by business men engaged in commercial pursuits. Nevertheless, a jury may be composed of men whose minds are comparatively uninformed upon the subject. Hence, it is important, in such cases, that the jury shall be guided in their deliberations by the learning and experience of the presiding judge.

We shall not undertake to review all of the instructions prayed in behalf of plaintiff; a few will suffice for the purposes of this opinion. Under the issues, evidence, and circumstances developed at the trial, if Conant, at the time of making the sale, was insolvent, or unable to pay all his debts, that fact did not deprive him of the power or render it unlawful for him to make such sale. A debtor in such condition may lawfully sell and dispose of his property, provided he does so for a fair and adequate and valuable consideration paid or to be paid by the purchaser, and from lawful motives, or without fraudulent intent as respects his creditors. His motives will be presumed to be lawful, and his intent not fraudulent, until the contrary is shown. Insolvency, if it exists, is only a circumstance to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the question of fraudulent intent, for which alone the sale may be set aside. Of itself, insolvency constitutes no obstacle to the sale, or to its lawfulness or validity, if fairly and honestly made. An instruction to this effect was requested by plaintiff. It was error to refuse it. So, too, it was error to refuse to charge the jury in substance that a debtor, situated as Conant was, might lawfully prefer some of his creditors to others, and pay some of them in full, leaving others partially or wholly unpaid so far as he should be without means of payment, and might lawfully sell and dispose of his property for a fair, adequate, and valuable consideration for the purpose of making such payment or payments; that the law permits an insolvent debtor to make choice of the creditors he will pay, and the mode or means by which he will make such payment, and that something beyond such preference or payment must appear before the transaction is to be considered fraudulent. The preference of creditors by a failing debtor is not necessarily fraudulent. Campbell v. Iron Co., 9 Colo. 60, 10 Pac. Rep. 248; Bank v. Newton, 13 Colo. 256, 22 Pac. Rep. 444.

It is not our province to pass upon the weight of the evidence relating to the question of fraudulent intent, nor do we intimate that the verdict would have been different if the refused instructions had been given as prayed; neither must we be understood as saying that the trial court should have given all or any of the refused instructions in the precise form and manner as requested, but, as we have seen, since some of them correctly stated the law applicable to the issues and evidence, such correct instructions, or in their stead, others in substance like them, should have been given to the jury. Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 470. What we have already said will undoubtedly be sufficient to guide the court below on a retrial of the case without further expression of opinion as to the other instructions refused. We refrain from going further lest we might mislead rather than aid the trial court in so doing. Instructions should be appropriate to the evidence as introduced under the issues at the trial. They should be such as will properly guide the jury in their deliberations upon the particular matters brought before them for determination; hence, instructions cannot always be anticipated with safety, even where there has been one trial, inasmuch as the evidence may be different on the second trial. The judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause remanded.

CRIMINAL LAW—ORAL INSTRUCTIONS.

It is error for a trial judge to give a portion of his instructions to the jury orally, though they are taken down by the stenographer at the time, and afterwards copied and delivered to the jury, on retiring, with the other instructions.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

'Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Barber county; C. W. ELLIS, Judge.

Chester I. Long and E. C. Sample, for appellant. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and R. A. Cameron, for the State.

STRANG, C. This is an appeal from the judgment of the district court of Barber county. The appellant, who was there charged with grand larceny, was tried, convicted, and sentenced to three years in the penitentiary. He appeals to this court, and says the court below committed error in the trial of his case by giving a portion of its instructions to the jury orally. The bill of exceptions shows that the court gave some of its instructions to the jury in writing, and some of them orally, which latter were taken down at the time by the stenographer, and afterwards copied and delivered to the jury, on retiring, with the other instructions. Is this method of instructing a jury a compliance with section 236, Crim. Code, par. 5304, (Gen. St. 1889?) We think not. Paragraph 5304, so far as it relates to this question, reads as follows: "The judge must charge the jury in writing, and the charge shall be filed among the papers in the cause." The requirement of the statute seems to be imperative, and there is no reason why it should not be followed. It is argued by the attorney general that, so far as this case is concerned, the statute was substantially complied with, because the portions of the charge which were given to the jury orally were taken down by the stenographer, and afterwards copied and delivered to the jury, with the other instructions, before they retired to consider the case. The bill of exceptions shows that the portions of the charge given orally, and afterwards copied and delivered to the jury, were copied and delivered to the jury as they were about to retire. What purpose had the legislature in view in requiring the judge to charge the jury in writing? We think the legislature required the charge of the trial court to be given in writing, and filed among the papers in the case, for the following, among perhaps other, reasons: First. To preserve the instructions for use in appeals to this court, so as to facilitate the making of a correct and satisfactory bill of exceptions. Every one knows how difficult, if not impossible, it is for the judge himself to remember the exact language of his charge when, some time after the trial, a bill of exceptions is sought to be made, and that a change of a few words, or a slight change in the phraseology, might give to the charge a different color and meaning, and thus deprive the accused of his right to have the exact charge of the trial court reviewed in this court. Second. That the jury may have the instructions of the court, which are, so far as they are concerned, the law of the case, with them in the jury-room that they may refer to them, and thus settle among themselves any misapprehension of the language of the court, or difference of opinion, or want of recollection as to what the instructions were. Third. That the attorneys trying the cause may have the instructions in that form so that they may, with greater facility and accuracy, apply the law to the facts in their arguments to the jury. That this latter object was considered of some importance by the legislature is evidenced by the fact that in paragraph 5295, Gen. St. 1889, that body, in regulating the order of trial, provides that the court shall charge the jury before the counsel argue the case, changing the old rule in that regard. This change of the order of trial from the old rule, under which the instructions of the court were given to the jury after counsel had argued the case, was not without a purpose, and the object was to aid the counsel in the presentation of the case to the jury. Thus it will be seen that the legislature considered it a matter of importance that the instructions should not only be given in writing, but that the counsel in the case should have them before they commenced to argue the case. We think the attorneys in the case are entitled to the instructions, in the form in which the statute requires them to be given to the jury, before they commence their argument to the jury, and we think this right is a substantial one. It follows, therefore, that it is not a substantial compliance with the statute to give instructions orally, though they are at the time taken down by the reporter, and afterwards copied and handed to the jury with the rest of the instructions when they retire to consider the case. In Missouri, the court held, under a statute that requires the instructions to be given in writing, that it is error to instruct orally, even though the defendant consent that they shall be so given. Judge WAGNER, in promulgating the opinion of the court, uses the following pointed and forcible language: "The provisions of the law are express and positive. They were enacted for wise and beneficial purposes, and neither courts nor parties are allowed to substitute a different arrangement in their stead. Establish the practice pursued in the court below, and it will happen at the end of a wearisome trial, when the court and bar are anxious to terminate their labors, propositions will be made by the respective counsel to forego the work of drafting written instructions, and let the court deliver an oral charge. The jury are liable to misapprehend the language of the court; a full, perfect, and satisfactory bill of exceptions is unattainable; and thus a man's rights are invaded and frittered away through a violation of a law which was made for his protection. Public policy, and the uniform and explicit standard which should always prevail in the administration of criminal justice, demand that the statute should be literally construed, and rigidly adhered to and enforced." State v. Cooper, 45 Mo. 64. The same rule prevails in California. People v. Ah Fong, 12 Cal. 345; People v. Woppner, 14 Cal. 437; People v. Denint, 8 Cal. 423. Also in Texas and Alabama. Clark v. State, 31 Tex. 574; Edgar v. State, 43 Ala. 312. Then we have in our own state the cases of State v. Potter, 15 Kan. 302; City of Atchison v. Jansen, 21 Kan. 560; and Rich v. Lappin, 43 Kan. 666, 23 Pac. Rep. 1038, cited by counsel for defendant. We do not consider it necessary to review the other errors assigned. It is recommended that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and cause sent back for a new trial.

PROMISSORY NOTES—APPLICATION OF PARTIAL PAYMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

1. A note provided for the payment of "interest at the rate of one and one half per cent. per month from date till maturity; and, if this note is not paid at maturity, we will pay the same rate of interest upon the principal sum until the same is fully paid and satisfied." Held, that these words did not require that payments made after maturity should be applied first to the discharge of the principal, and then to the interest, but they should be applied first to the interest due.

2. The complaint alleged that two payments on a note were made, respectively on April 13, 1885, and September 29, 1886. The answer denied that the first payment was made on April 13, 1885, and averred that it was made on April 11, 1885, and denied that the second payment was made on September 29, 1886, but averred that it was made September 8, 1886. Held, that these pleadings brought the question of dates to an issue, and no reply was required.

3. One of the defendants testified that he "remembered the circumstances of the payment of $250 as stated in the complaint on April 13, 1885." Plaintiff testified that "the memoranda upon the note, 'Paid April 13, 1885, $250, on interest,' was made on that day. The memoranda of September 29, 1886, was made on that day, and is in my own handwriting." This was all the evidence on the point. The payments were indorsed on the note as made on the 13th and 29th respectively. Held, to be sufficient evidence to support a finding of payment on those dates.

Appeal from district court, Gallatin county; FRANK G. HENRY, Judge.

M. J. Liddell, for appellants. Armstrong & Hartman, for respondent.

HARWOOD, J. The main question brought to this court for determination by this appeal relates to the computation of interest and the application of partial payments on a certain promissory note made and delivered by appellants to respondent, in the following terms: "\$1,250. Bozeman, M. T., February 6, 1883. On or before the first day of August, 1883, we, or either of us, promise to pay to the order of David Anderson twelve hundred and fifty dollars, for value received, negotiable and payable without defalcation or discount, with interest at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month from date till maturity; and, if this note is not paid at maturity, we will pay the same rate of interest upon said principal sum until the sum is fully paid and satisfied. WILLIAM L. PERKINS. HOWARD STONE." It was admitted by plaintiff's complaint, and found by the trial court, that payments had been made on said note as follows: May 8, 1883, \$250; April 13, 1885, \$250; September 29, 1886, \$673.36. The appellants contend that, under the terms of said note, if the same was not paid at or before maturity, they had a right after maturity to apply their payments first upon the principal sum, and then upon the interest. If such payments were applied in that manner, the result would be that on the 20th day of February, 1890, prior to the commencement of this action, the defendants were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of \$875 only, as a balance of interest and principal due on said promissory note. Said sum was tendered to plaintiff on that date in full satisfaction of the balance due on said note, according to the construction of defendants. The plaintiff applied said payments first upon the interest accrued on said note to the date of payment, before crediting any portion of the payments to the principal sum; and, as a result of such application, the plaintiff claimed, and the trial court found, that defendants were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of \$1,256.52 at the time this action was commenced, April 25, 1890. In the absence of any conditions of the contract to the contrary, it is a well-established rule of law that, where partial payments are made on an interest-bearing obligation, the payment must be first applied to the liquidation of the interest accrued to the date of such payment, and the balance, if any, applied upon the principal. "The rule for casting interest," says Chancellor KENT, in State v. Jackson, 1 Johns. Ch. 13, "when partial payments have been made, is to apply the payment in the first place to the discharge of the interest then due. If the payment exceeds the interest, the surplus goes towards discharging the principal, and the subsequent interest is to be computed on the balance of principal remaining due; if the payment be less than the interest, the surplus of interest must not be taken to augment the principal; but interest continues on the former principal until the period when the payments, taken together, exceed the interest due, and the surplus is to be applied towards discharging the principal, and interest is to be computed on the balance, as aforesaid." This rule is generally adopted by modern authority, and in some states of the Union has been confirmed by statute. See 3 Rand. Com. Paper, § 1497; Story v. Livingston, 13 Pet. 359; Backus v. Minor, 3 Cal. 231; Estate of Den, 35 Cal. 692. There may be exceptions to this rule involved by special terms of the contract, or by the parties adopting a different method in their transactions. Stoughton v. Lynch, 2 Johns. Ch. 209; Backus v. Minor, supra. The general rule, as to the application of partial payments upon interest-bearing obligations, above set forth, apparently is not questioned by counsel for appellants, but he insists that the terms of the note in question indicate that, in case the same was not paid at maturity, the defendants had the right after maturity to apply their partial payments upon the principal first, and secondly upon the interest. To sustain this theory of construction, counsel refers to the fact that the note provides for "interest at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month from date till maturity; and, if this note is not paid at maturity, we will pay the same rate of interest upon said principal sum until the same is fully paid and satisfied." The counsel for appellants reasons that after maturity the interest and principal become two separate and distinct debts; and the debtor, therefore, had the right to require that his payments be appropriated according to his desire. In our view of this promissory note, we find nothing, in its terms to justify the construction contended for by appellants. Its terms are so plain and definite that they become their own interpreter. As to interest, the makers declare the rate shall be  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. per month from date until maturity, and the same rate from maturity, until payment is finally made. In other words, the note declares that the principal shall bear the given rate of interest before and after maturity from date until payment. We find nothing in the language of this note to indicate that the maker may, by reason of its terms and conditions, require that partial payments thereon should be applied, either in one manner or another.

It is further contended by appellants that at the time of making said note the parties thereto agreed that, in case the debt evidenced thereby was not paid at maturity, the maker might thereafter apply his payments—First, upon the principal; and, secondly, upon the interest.

The record shows that defendants introduced evidence on the trial in support of such an alleged agreement, and the plaintiff also introduced evidence in rebuttal thereof. The court found that the partial payments were made on the interest and principal of said note, and allowed said partial payments to be first devoted to the liquidation of accrued interest; and such finding is assigned as error. We fail to discover any error in the action of the court on this point, unless it be in allowing the defendant to introduce any evidence as to such an alleged agreement. The law will not permit a contemporaneous parol agreement to be set up to contradict or vary the terms of an agreement reduced to writing, except under certain circumstances, not involved here. Section 628, Code Civ. Proc.; Fisher v. Briscoe, ante, 30. It may be further observed in this connection that this court has repeatedly decided that, where the evidence is conflicting, the finding of the court, or verdict of the jury, will not be disturbed, unless some other grounds are shown therefor.

The further and last assignment of error to be determined relates to a controversy as to the date of the last two payments on said note. The parties agree as to the date of the first payment. The plaintiff alleges the last two payments to have been made respectively on the 13th of April, 1885, and the 29th day of September, 1886. The defendants' answer says: "They deny that they made any payment on said note on the 13th of April, 1885, but they admit and aver that they did pay the plaintiff $250 on the 11th day of April, 1885;" and further, "they deny that they paid plaintiff the sum of $673.36 on said note on the 29th of September, 1886, but they aver and admit that they did make the plaintiff a payment of $673.36 on the 8th of September, 1886." Counsel for appellants contends that, inasmuch as the plaintiff in his replication made no reference to said denials and admissions as to the date of said payments, the allegations of the answer as to such dates are to be taken as admitted to be true. We find in these denials of one date, and the averment of another, no matter which demands a further denial by plaintiff. In substance, the plaintiff alleged the dates of said payments. The true dates of payment are material in reference to casting interest. In substance, the defendants denied that the dates stated by plaintiff were the true dates of payment, and alleged, incidentally to such denials, dates which the defendants claimed were the true dates of payment. By these allegations and denials an issue was formed, which could not be made more certain by the plaintiff denying the dates named by defendants, or reasserting the dates which he had before alleged as the true dates of payment. Upon this issue, evidence was necessary to ascertain the correct dates of said payments. The evidence, as disclosed by the record, is meager and obscure as to the disputed dates of payment. The record shows that the defendants introduced no evidence on this point, except that W. L. Perkins, one of the defendants, testified that he remembered "the circumstances of the payment of $250 as stated in the complaint on the 13th of April, 1885." On this point Anderson, the plaintiff, testifies that "the memoranda upon the note, 'Paid April 13, 1885, $250, on interest,' was made on that day. The memoranda of September 29, 1886, was made on that day, and is in my handwriting." There is no other evidence on that point. The import of it all seems to be in favor of the allegations of the complaint, and there is no evidence to the contrary. The court found that the allegations of the complaint are true, and, being supported by all the evidence introduced on the point under discussion, we do not think the finding as to the dates of payment should be disturbed.

SULLIVAN V. CITY OF HELENA.

DEFECTIVE STREET—PERSONAL INJURIES—PRACTICE—NEW TRIAL.

1. The city of Helena, which was chartered by the territory of Montana, passed an ordinance expressly assuming for itself "the care and responsibility of streets, avenues, and alleys," and thereafter issued a permit to certain private persons to make an excavation in a street, by the negligent performance whereof, and while Montana was still a territory, plaintiff was injured. Held, that the city was liable in damages therefor, since, in 1862, and prior to the passage of such ordinance, the principle of municipal liability in such cases was established by the supreme court of the United States in the case of Nebraska City v. Campbell, 2 Black, 590, which arose in the territory of Nebraska, and was therefore binding upon the courts of this territory at the time of the injury.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 298, providing that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after the verdict, * * * file with the clerk, and serve upon the adverse party, a notice of his intention, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made," where such notice has been filed within 10 days, an additional notice and affidavit specifying the further ground of newly-discovered evidence cannot be served and filed after the expiration of the 10 days.

Appeal from district court, Lewis and Clarke county; WILLIAM H. HUNT, Judge.

BLAKE, C. J. The respondent recovered a judgment for damages for personal injuries which he sustained by reason of an excavation in a street within the city of Helena. The motion of the appellant for a new trial was overruled, and this action of the court below must be examined.

A question of practice will be considered before we inquire into the merits of the case. The appellant filed, May 21, 1890, a notice of its intention to move for a new trial, and the motion and statement therefor were filed June 30, 1890. Another notice was served June 25, 1890, upon the respondent stating "that, in addition to the causes specified in the notice of motion for a new trial heretofore given in this cause, said motion will also be based upon the affidavit of newly-discovered evidence in said cause, and which was and is material to the issue in said cause." Afterwards the court granted the motion of the respondent to strike from the statement the last notice and accompanying affidavits, and refused to consider them. It is shown by the record that the matter constituting this new ground was not known to the appellant at the time when the original motion was prepared. There is a radical difference between the provisions of the criminal practice act and the Code of Civil Procedure, which govern the subject. The application for a new trial in criminal causes, upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence, shall be made upon motion, and written notice thereof "must be filed within thirty days after the discovery of the facts upon which the party relies." Comp St. div. 1, p. 135. The Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the party intending to move for a new trial must, within ten days after the verdict of the jury, * * * file with the clerk, and serve upon the adverse party, a notice of his intention, designating the grounds upon which the motion will be made." Code Civil Proc. § 298. The application for a new trial in civil cases, for the cause of newly-discovered evidence, must be made upon affidavits, but there is no provision for the filing of the notice thereof after the discovery of the facts. The statutes of the states of California and New York, which are similar to the Code of Civil Procedure of this state, supra, have been construed, by their courts, to prohibit the extension of this period of time, or the allowance of amendments to the motion or notice after its expiration. Mining Co. v. Boles, 24 Cal. 354; Ellsasser v. Hunter, 26 Cal. 279; Cooney v. Furlong, 66 Cal. 520, 6 Pac. Rep. 388; Lavalle v. Skelly, 90 N. Y. 546. These authorities conform to the intention of the legislature, and require us to uphold the ruling of the court below in this respect.

The merits of the controversy depend upon one proposition. It is conceded that the place where the respondent received his injuries was within the boundaries of the city of Helena, which has been legally incorporated under the statutes of the territory of Montana. It is also admitted that there is no law which expressly makes municipal corporations of this character responsible in damages to persons who may be injured by defects in their streets. The legislative assembly has conferred upon the city council of Helena the authority "to make all ordinances which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution powers specified" in the charter. Page 33. The city council is empowered by the legislature "to lay out, open, change, widen, or extend streets, lanes, alleys, sewers, parks, squares, or other public grounds, and to grade, pave, improve, repair, or discontinue the same, or any part thereof; to establish and open drains, canals, or sewers, or alter, widen, or straighten water-courses; to make, alter, widen, or otherwise keep in repair, vacate, or discontinue, sidewalks or crosswalks; to prevent the incumbering of streets, sidewalks, cross-walks, and alleys, with carriages, carts, wagons, sleighs, sleds, lumber, fire-wood, or other obstacles or materials; to prevent horse-racing, or immoderate riding or driving, in the streets or public places of the city; to prevent the riding or driving of animals or the drawing of vehicles of any kind on the sidewalks, or the doing of any damage to such sidewalk; to require the owners or occupants of lots or buildings to remove snow, dirt, rubbish, or other obstruction or material from the sidewalks adjacent thereto; and, in default thereof, to authorize the removal thereof, at the expense of such owner or occupant." Amendment approved March 12, 1885, p. 189, § 9. The following ordinances were in force at the time when the respondent received the injuries which are described in the pleadings. "Section 1. That said city of Helena hereby assumes for itself the care and responsibility of streets, avenues, and alleys only of that portion within the corporate limits which was originally entered by the probate judge of Lewis and Clarke county, Montana, as trustee for the occupants, as the Helena town-site, and exclusive of all portions thereof deeded by said probate judge in block to private claimants, and by them platted as additions to Helena." Ordinance No. 21. "Sec. 5. No person or corporation shall dig or excavate within, through, or under, any street, alley, gutter, curb, sidewalk, or public place, in this city, for any purpose, without first obtaining a permit from the committee on building permits. The applicant for such permit shall state the exact location, dimensions, and purposes of such digging or excavation. The committee shall thereupon inspect the locality, and, if they deem proper, issue a permit authorizing such digging or excavation to be done in such successive portions, within such limits of time, and with such safeguards, as they may designate, with a due regard to the public convenience and the public safety." Ordinance No. 46. The tenth and eleventh sections of said ordinance No. 46 are as follows: "Sec. 10. Permits, provided for in this ordinance, shall only be issued upon the application of the owner or authorized agents of the owners of the property, to be built upon, or on account of which the digging or excavation is to be made. Every application shall contain an agreement to save the city harmless from all costs and damages which may accrue by reason of such use, occupation, digging, or excavation, as the case may be. Sec. 11. No person shall by his own hand, or by another under his direction, dig up, remove, or loosen, take or carry away, any stone, plank, brick, lumber, block, earth, sand, gravel, or any other material composing any street, avenue, alley, sidewalk, crossing, or public ground, whether the same be free and loosened, or not, without obtaining a permit from the committee on building permits." It appears that the ordinances of the city of Helena have been complied with, and that the party who caused the excavation complained of to be made, obtained from the committee on building permits the authority to do the work. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that there is no law which allows the respondent to maintain this action. The authorities relating to the matter are numerous and conflicting, and cannot be critically examined and compared in this opinion. This question has not been passed upon by the supreme court of the territory or state, and we are called upon to lay down the rule which shall control similar controversies in the absence of legislative enactment. We will state, in a general way, the views of the courts in order that the points of difference may be understood. In Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, Mr. Justice HUNT, for the court, refers to certain cases, which hold that a municipal corporation is not liable to an individual for an injury resulting from negligence in the construction of a work which it had authorized, and says: "The authorities establishing the contrary doctrine, that a city is responsible for its mere negligence, are so numerous and so well considered that the law must be deemed to be settled in accordance with them." This declaration is followed by a citation of the English and American cases, which includes the decisions of the highest courts of the states of Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Wisconsin. Since the publication of the opinion in Barnes v. District of Columbia, supra, the appellate courts of other states have announced the same doctrine. There is, however, authority of eminent respectability in support of the opposite view. Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84; Arkadelphia v. Windham, 49 Ark. 139, 4 S. W. Rep. 450; Pray v. Jersey City, 32 N. J. Law. 394; Arnold v. City of San José, 81 Cal. 618, 22 Pac. Rep. 877; Young v. Charleston, 20 S. C. 116. These cases contain reviews of great ability, and research of authorities, and maintain that the appellant is not liable in the case at bar.

We have already intimated that we do not intend to enter upon the difficult task of pursuing an independent investigation, and ascertaining the true principle of law, and determining the effect of statutes upon decisions. Our opinion is controlled by an important consideration of another nature. At the December term, 1862, and prior to the organization of the territory of Montana, the supreme court of the United States, in Nebraska City v. Campbell, 2 Black, 590, heard a case which arose in the territory of Nebraska. Mr. Justice NELSON in the opinion said: "The law is well settled in respect to public municipal corporations, upon which the duty is imposed to construct and repair, or to keep in repair, streets or bridges, and upon which is also conferred the means of accomplishing such duty, that they are liable for any special damage arising out of neglect in keeping the same in proper condition. The principle was fully considered, at the last term, in the case of Weightman v. Corporation of Washington, where all the authorities will be found collected and examined. 1 Black, 39, 51-53." It is also stated in the opinion that "the suit was brought in the court below by Campbell against the city, to recover damages for injuries received by reason of a defective bridge in one of the streets in the city."

The case of Nebraska City v. Campbell, supra, was approved in Barnes v. District of Columbia, supra, at the October term, 1875. This was an action for damages to the person "in consequence of the defective condition of one of the streets of the city of Washington." In District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990, the plaintiff sustained personal injuries by falling into a hole while he was passing on the sidewalk of a street, in the city of Washington. In the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice HARLAN says: "Without further discussion, we adjudge, upon the authority of Barnes v. District of Columbia, that the District is liable for such negligence upon the part of its officers, as is charged in the plaintiff's declaration. That case was determined in 1875, and has never been questioned by any subsequent decision in this court. On the contrary, its authority was recognized in Railroad Co. v. District of Columbia, 132 U. S. 7, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 19, and in Brown v. District of Columbia, 127 U. S. 579, 586, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1314, and the principles announced in it were applied in District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 884. If the rule announced in the Barnes Case is not satisfactory to congress, it can be abrogated by statute." The city of Helena was incorporated by an act of the legislative assembly of the territory of Montana, which was approved February 22, 1881. The respondent was injured August 29, 1888, and filed, December 22, 1888, his complaint in this action. During these times, the decisions of Nebraska City v. Campbell, supra, and Barnes v. District of Columbia, supra, were binding upon the courts of the territory. With full knowledge of the legal consequences of the proceedings, it was duly ordained that "said city of Helena hereby assumes for itself the care and responsibility of streets, avenues, and alleys." The liability, which had been accurately defined, has not been restricted by the legislative department, and we can presume that the rule stated by the supreme court of the United States was satisfactory. We think it is our duty, under these conditions, to adhere to the doctrine which has been recognized upwards of 25 years within the confines of Montana, and seems to be upheld by the weight of modern authority. Judge Dillon, in the last edition of his valuable treatise on Municipal Corporations, states these deductions: "In reference to this subject, it may be remarked that there is undoubtedly some difficulty in defining the logical ground on which to base the doctrine of the implied liability of municipal corporations proper for defective streets, when such liability is denied as respects counties, and towns, without special charters. There is also some apparent, if not real, difficulty in holding that such a liability exists on the part of municipal corporations in reference to streets, without extending it to other duties which are everywhere couched not to give a private action for their neglect. The courts which hold the doctrine in question also differ as to the reasons on which it rests. Notwithstanding this, it will be found, we think, upon a Careful examination of the cases referred to in the preceding sections, that they do establish the rule therein laid down as respects municipal corporations proper, and that Mr. Justice HUNT is quite right in saying that, whatever may be the true reason for the rule, 'the law in this country must be deemed to be settled in accordance with them.' It will also be found, we are quite sure, that the doctrine of such a liability on the part of municipal corporations, organized under special charters, or under general incorporation acts, exists in the states very generally, and is not confined to the states of New York and Illinois. The doctrine works well, and is just, since no stimulus to the performance of duty is more effectual than the wholesome fear of the verdict of a jury for damages." Volume 2, (4th Ed.) § 1023. See, also, Cooley, Torts, 625; Bish. Non-Cont. Law, §§ 750, 757; Shear. & R. Neg. (4th Ed.) § 289. The judgment is affirmed, with costs.

HABEAS CORPUS — HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

Comp. St. Mont. div. 5, § 1182, provides, relative to procedure on habeas corpus, that "it shall be the duty of such judge, if the time during which such party may be legally detained in custody has not expired, to remand such party, if it shall appear that he is detained in custody by virtue of the final judgment or decree of any competent court of criminal jurisdiction, or upon any process issued upon such judgment or decree, or in cases of contempt of court." Held that, where it appears by the return to the writ that the petitioner is in custody by virtue of a final judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the charge and the person, the proceedings at the trial whereby such final judgment was reached cannot be reviewed.

H. G. McIntire, for petitioner. H. J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for resistant.

HARWOOD, J. The petitioner, in his application for a writ of habeas corpus, declares that he is unlawfully confined and restrained of his liberty by Joseph Hamilton, sheriff of the county of Cascade. The illegality of the confinement is alleged to consist in the facts "that the warrant of commitment upon which the petitioner is restrained is based upon a pretended judgment, which is void upon its face, the same having been rendered by one W. H. Race, he having at the time no jurisdiction to render the same, as appears from a transcript of the proceedings had in that behalf, a copy of which is hereto attached, marked Exhibit A, and made a part of this petition." An order for a writ of habeas corpus was accordingly granted. The return, as made by Joseph Hamilton, sheriff of said county, contains a large amount of matter which is not properly placed in such return, and which we must treat as surplusage. The return contains what purports to be a narrative of all the incidents of the institution of a criminal prosecution on the charge of "malicious mischief to property," under section 217, Crim. Laws, from the making of the complaint before a justice of the peace to the final determination thereof by the justice assessing a fine of $20 and costs against the accused, and the issuance of execution to carry the judgment into effect. The return even goes so far as to state what the justice said to the prisoner on his arraignment, and the reply of the prisoner thereto. To this irrelevant matter, the petitioner has made an answer. This practice is clearly improper in a case like this. Our statute provides, (section 1173, Comp. St.): "The party upon whom such writ shall be duly served shall state in his return plainly and unequivocally—First. Whether or not he has the party in his custody, or under his power or restraint. Second. If he has the party in his custody or power, or under his restraint, he shall also state the authority and cause of such imprisonment or restraint, setting forth the same at large. Third. If the party be detained by virtue of any writ, warrant, or any other written authority, a copy thereof shall be annexed to the return, and the original shall be produced and exhibited to the judge on the hearing of such return. Fourth. It is provided what the return shall show in case the party alleged to be unlawfully detained was in the custody of the party served with the writ at or before the date thereof, but such custody or restraint has since been transferred to another. Fifth. It is provided that the return shall be signed, and in some cases verified by oath or affirmation. Among the other matters set forth by the sheriff as "the authority and cause of such imprisonment or restraint" is contained, very properly, a copy of the writ of commitment, in the following terms: "State of Montana, County of Cascade—ss.. In the Justice Court, before W. H. RACE, Justice of the Peace. The State of Montana, Plaintiff, vs. I. D. McCutcheon, Defendant. The state of Montana to the sheriff or any constable of said county: Whereas, I. D. McCutcheon has this day been duly convicted in said court of the crime of tearing down and destroying a building, committed in our said county on or about the 26th day of August, 1890; and whereas, upon such conviction it was considered and adjudged that for said offense the said I. D. McCutcheon be fined in the sum of twenty dollars: These are therefore to command you, the said sheriff, to take and receive the said I. D. McCutcheon into your custody, and imprison him in the jail of our said county until such fine be fully paid. Witness my hand, the 15th day of September, 1890. W. H. RACE, Justice of the Peace." The return further says "that he (the said sheriff) now detains the said petitioner in his custody under and by virtue of the authority conferred upon him by said mittimus."

We will now pass directly to the consideration of the ground upon which the petitioner claims that he should be discharged from custody. That ground is, in brief, the fact that the docket entries of the justice of the peace, in respect to said trial, do not show that the prisoner waived the right of trial by jury before the justice proceeded to the trial of the charge against the prisoner; that the justice's docket is silent on that point, and therefore the petitioner demands his release under this writ. At the threshold of this consideration we are confronted by the provisions of section 1182, div. 5, Comp. St., as follows: "It shall be the duty of such judge, if the time during which such party may be legally detained in custody has not expired, to remand such party, if it shall appear that he is detained in custody by virtue of the final judgment or decree of any competent court of criminal jurisdiction, or upon any process issued upon such judgment or decree, or in cases of contempt of court." What then are we directed by statute to consider in this case? We are to consider whether it appears by the proper return that the prisoner is detained in custody by virtue of the final judgment of a court of competent criminal jurisdiction, or upon any process issued upon such judgment. If we find such to be the case, we are commanded by statute to remand the prisoner. The justice court, without doubt, has jurisdiction of the misdemeanor of which the petitioner was convicted, as appears by the return, (section 6, Crim. Prac. Act, and section 217, Crim. Laws, Comp. St.,) namely, the malicious destruction or injury of a building, the property of another. The justice court is clothed with power or jurisdiction to try and determine a criminal charge of that character; and in this case the return shows that the justice of the peace had jurisdiction of the person and the place. In this case we have, then, before us, by the return of the officer upon whom the writ of habeas corpus was served, a showing of a final process issued by virtue of the final judgment of a competent court of criminal jurisdiction; on the other hand, the petitioner alleges that his imprisonment is illegal, because the justice had no jurisdiction to render the judgment under which the commitment was issued, as appears from the transcript of the proceedings had in the case, a copy of which transcript petitioner alleges he has attached to his petition. Upon this showing, we are asked by the petitioner to review the proceedings of the justice of the peace in this matter to find whether or not his docket shows that all the rights and privileges which the law guarantees to the prisoner were vouchsafed to him on the trial. The petitioner insists that the docket entries of the justice, in the case wherein he was convicted, do not show, as they should by the requirement of the statute, (section 488, Crim. Prac. Act,) that the prisoner waived the right to a jury trial before the justice proceeded to try the case, and for this cause he contends that he should be discharged. Are we to review and determine the legality of the proceedings had before the justice upon a return under the writ of habeas corpus? If so, then that writ in this case would also perform the office of the writ of certiorari, and bring up the proceedings had before the justice for review; moreover, in the face of the statute quoted supra, which commands us to remand the prisoner if we find by the return that he is held under a process issued upon a final judgment of a competent court of criminal jurisdiction, we would be going back of that process, and reviewing the record of the incidents of the trial, which is not properly before us. This position is clearly against the provisions of the statutes and the authorities. We have carefully read all the authorities cited by petitioner's counsel, as well as others, and we find that in all the cases cited which treat of the waiver of a jury, or the failure to waive a jury, or of the right of the court to try a criminal charge without a jury, the question came up regularly by appeal or writ of error, and not on habeas corpus. The writ of certiorari is often invoked in aid of habeas corpus. Ex parte Yerger, 8 Wall 85; State v. Glenn, 54 Md. 572; State v. Neel, 48 Ark. 283. In such a case, and by that means, the record is looked into to find whether the court has jurisdiction to hold the prisoner in custody. He may be held by virtue of a bench warrant issued on an indictment charging an offense unknown to the law. In such a case, on a view of the indictment, it is developed at once that the court has no jurisdiction to issue the warrant for the detention of the prisoner. In a case like the one at bar, wherein the court had plenary jurisdiction to try the charge and render judgment, after final judgment, we cannot, on habeas corpus, review and pass upon the legality or illegality of the proceedings at the trial, because the statute limits and confines our inquiry to the question as to whether the final judgment is rendered, and the writ by virtue thereof is issued, by a court of competent criminal jurisdiction. If that question is determined in the affirmative, we have no legal authority to review, on habeas corpus, the proceedings at the trial, whereby the final judgment was reached. Section 1182, div. 5, Comp. St. After final judgment, the proceedings at such trial cannot be brought up by certiorari for review in aid of the writ of habeas corpus. Under our statute, certiorari will not issue to bring up the record of an inferior tribunal for review in cases where there is an appeal, and in the case at bar the petitioner has the right to appeal from the final judgment. Section 510, Crim. Prac. Act. It is not so in cases where certiorari is resorted to for the purpose of bringing up the proceedings for review to aid habeas corpus, where the petitioner is held by warrant on an indictment, or on a preliminary hearing. In such case, there is no final judgment, nor does the petitioner have an appeal; therefore certiorari will issue to review the record. Ex parte Yerger, and other cases cited supra. In a case like the one at bar, where final judgment has been passed on a charge within the jurisdiction of a justice, if we should review the record on habeas corpus, and, for the reason that some essential provision of the law pertaining to the trial has been ignored, annul the proceedings, then we would be in fact exercising an appellate jurisdiction directly over the justice of the peace courts, where we have no such jurisdiction, except when the cases come to us by appeal, first to the district court, and then to this court. The writ of habeas corpus cannot perform the office of a writ of error. Ex parte Lehnkuhl, 72 Cal. 53, 13 Pac. Rep. 148; Sennott's Case, 146 Mass. 489, 16 N. E. Rep. 418. The petition must therefore be dismissed, and the prisoner remanded. It is so ordered.

DISBARMENT OF ATTORNEY—PLEADING—RES ADJUDICATA.

1. In proceedings to disbar an attorney, it appeared that he was admitted to practice law in Montana upon his petition stating that he was a regularly licensed and practicing attorney of New York, and had been such for 23 years, and upon his original certificate of admission thereto, together with a certificate of Justice Hardin of the fourth judicial department of the New York supreme court that he had practiced in the highest courts of the state, and was then in good standing in his profession in that department. The complaint charged that respondent had been disbarred in New York, and exhibited certified copies of charges preferred against him in the second department of the supreme court, the testimony taken, and the referee's report thereon, and it further appeared that it was decided by a divided court to disbar him, and that before judgment proceedings were stayed pending an appeal, but no appeal was ever perfected or other steps taken. Held, that respondent had not been disbarred in New York.

2. The court will not examine the evidence taken in the New York proceeding to determine whether respondent should be disbarred upon the case there presented.

3. It was further specified that, after the disbarment alleged, respondent had gone to a distant part of the state, and procured the certificate from Justice Hardin by fraud, and had fraudulently presented it to this court. The answer specifically denied these allegations, gave a history of respondent's practice in New York, and stated that Justice Hardin was well acquainted with him from boyhood, and was thoroughly conversant with his whole career at the bar in New York. There was no evidence on this issue. Held, that fraud could not be presumed, and that the denial met all the charges.

Application is made to revoke the license granted to Peter M. Baum at the July term, 1890, of this court. On July 18, 1890, Mr. Baum filed his petition for admission to practice in the courts of this state, and in that petition, among other matters required by the rules of this court, stated that he was until the 1st of April, 1890, a regularly licensed and practicing attorney and counselor at law of the state of New York, and was such for 22 years next preceding that date. He gives the places and times where and when he had practiced in New York. He states in his petition that he presents, and he did present, his original certificate of admission in New York, and the certificate of Hon. George A. Hardin, presiding justice of the fourth judicial department of the supreme court of the state of New York, in which Justice Hardin certifies "that Peter M. Baum, late of the city of Syracuse, in said state, and now of the city of Great Falls in the state of Montana, has practiced law in the highest courts of said state [New York] for the past 22 years, and last at said city of Syracuse, in said fourth judicial department, and that he was in good standing in his profession in the said fourth judicial department at the time he practiced there as aforesaid. Dated July 9, 1890." Upon this petition and certificate, and upon the other papers required by the rules of the court, Mr. Baum was admitted to practice in all the courts of this state, at the July term, 1890. The charge in the complaint for disbarment rests upon two specifications: (1) That, when the applicant made his petition to this court, he had been disbarred in the state of New York, and not reinstated. (2) That, being so disbarred, he went to a part of the state of New York remote from the place where he had been disbarred, and by fraud obtained the certificate of Justice Hardin, above referred to, and presented the same to this court with intent to defraud and deceive this court. With the complaint are filed certified copies of the charges preferred against Mr. Baum in the second judicial department of the supreme court of New York, the testimony in the proceeding, the finding of the referee, and all proceedings, except the final order of disbarment, which, it is alleged in the complaint, is in the possession of one Monchausen in the state of New York, who has not entered the same of record in the New York supreme court, and will not allow the complainant to have a copy of the same. The complaint further alleges that said order is held by Monchausen upon an agreement between him and Baum that it should not be entered, if Baum would leave the state of New York and not return. Defendant files a verified answer. As to the first specification, he denies that he was disbarred in New York, and sets forth the following as the facts: That proceedings were commenced against him in the second department in the city of Poughkeepsie, a referee appointed, and proof taken, report and supplemental report made and submitted to the general term of the supreme court at Brooklyn; that in February, 1890, that court, by a divided bench, confirmed the report; that defendant's counsel, in that proceeding obtained a stay of proceedings pending an appeal to the court of appeals of New York; that this appeal is not perfected, and said stay is still in force; that it was understood with the prosecution that no further proceedings should be had, and the prosecution was abandoned before defendant applied for admission to practice in this court. Defendant denies that there was any agreement to forbear prosecution of the New York case, if defendant would leave that state. It is proper to suggest here that the allegation of the answer that the report of the New York referee was confirmed is ambiguous, for an inspection of that report shows that the referee reported only evidence and facts found by him, and no conclusions drawn from the facts, so there was nothing for the general term in Brooklyn to confirm. But the true situation appears from a letter of Hon. J. F. Barnard, presiding justice of the general term referred to, which letter counsel in this proceeding seem to each concede may be considered as evidence in the case. Justice Barnard says: "An application was made to remove P. M. Baum as an attorney; proof was taken; it was decided to grant the motion. On application of Mr. Baum's counsel, stayed proceedings pending an appeal to the court of appeals. I understand that no order has been entered on the decision to remove the attorney Baum." To the specification that defendant obtained the certificate from Justice Hardin by fraud, and presented the same to this court fraudulently, he makes answer, and denies that he practiced any fraud upon Justice Hardin; denies that he went to a remote part of the state to obtain that certificate. He gives the history of his practice in New York, and states that Justice Hardin was well acquainted with him from boyhood, and was thoroughly conversant with his whole career as a practicing attorney in the courts of New York. Defendant also denies that any order disbarring him in New York was withheld from record upon the condition of his leaving that state. No replication was filed by counsel for the bar association. No reference was asked by either party, but the cause was submitted on the pleadings, counsel for the association remarking that he submitted it as he would a motion for judgment on the pleadings in a civil case; in other words, that the confessions of the answer were sufficient to entitle the complainant to an order disbarring the defendant.

McCutcheon & McIntire, for the bar association. N. W. McConnell, for respondent.

DE WITT, J.; (after stating the facts as above.) This case is not an appeal. It is one which this court meets originally. It must be determined upon the pleadings and the evidence. The evidence is the record of the New York proceeding and Justice Barnard's letter, which counsel agree to treat as competent evidence. We are of opinion that the second specification demands but little attention. Fraud in obtaining Justice Hardin's certificate is directly charged. It is as directly denied. And the answer further states that Justice Hardin was fully acquainted with defendant's whole professional career in New York, and therefore necessarily with the Poughkeepsie disbarment proceedings. Fraud against this court in presenting that certificate is alleged, and also denied. Fraud must be proved, and cannot be presumed. The denial is broader than the allegation. There is no evidence. This specification, taken by itself simply as a fraud upon Justice Hardin, of New York, and upon this court, must fail. We will advert to it, however, in considering the other specification; that is, that when defendant made his application to practice, he was disbarred in the state of New York. Here, again, the case must be determined upon the pleadings and evidence. At the outset, we are prepared to say that if it appeared to this court that an applicant for admission to the most honorable of all the professions had been excluded from that high office by the judgment of another competent court, the protection of the purity of our own bar, and the comity due to the court of a sister state, would demand extraordinary circumstances to impel us to reinstate such person to the honorable fellowship from which he had been expelled. It appears that the supreme court of New York, by a divided bench, decided to disbar the defendant; that thereupon proceedings were stayed, and no order of disbarment made, pending an appeal to the court of appeals; that thereafter the prosecution was abandoned. It certainly appears that the defendant was not disbarred in New York. But counsel for the bar association urge that the referee's report in the New York proceedings shows a sufficient cause for disbarment, (whether it does we do not say,) and that this court should act upon such report, regardless of what the New York court has, or has not, done. To make this original inquiry into acts alleged to have been committed in another and remote jurisdiction, in the face of the certificate of a presiding justice of the supreme court of New York, that defendant was in good standing, we believe is beyond our duty. In consideration of the circumstance that the New York court has properly taken jurisdiction of those matters; and one of two things must be true,—either the case is undetermined by final judgment in New York, or the prosecution in that state has been abandoned. If the latter be the fact, we must conclude, under these pleadings, that the abandonment was for sufficient grounds, and favorable to the defendant. If the former be the situation, it will be time enough for us to consider the New York case when the order of the supreme court of that state has been made against defendant, and an appeal from that order either abandoned, or such order affirmed by the appellate court of that state. Courtesy to the New York courts suggest that we examine their final conclusions, when made, and not ordinarily the grounds therefor, and especially not the grounds before the conclusion is reached. We do not lay down the rule that unprofessional conduct of lawyers of this court, committed without the limits of this state, may not be inquired into, but only hold that the circumstances of this case do not seem to warrant such inquiry. The charges against the defendant are dismissed.

QUO WARRANTO—TITLE TO OFFICE—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

1. A complaint for usurpation of office which avers that relator was duly elected county surveyor by the qualified electors of the county, took the oath of office, gave his official bond, which was approved, accepted, and filed; and that on a day stated, defendant, without right, did usurp and intrude into said office, and has wrongfully and unlawfully since that time been exercising the functions thereof; and praying that he be excluded therefrom, and that relator be adjudged entitled thereto, and installed therein,—is good on demurrer, and states a good cause of action, under Code Civil Proc. Mont. 1881, § 399, allowing dual prayers.

2. A demurrer that the suit was not brought "under the proper caption or style, nor in the proper name, to-wit, in the name of the people of the state of Montana, instead of being brought in the name of the state of Montana," was insufficient. It should have been on the ground "that plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue," as required by Code Civil Proc. Mont. 1881, § 85.

This is an action for the usurpation of office, brought under the provisions of sections 410-417, Code Civil Proc. The complaint substantially alleges the holding of an election, under the provisions of the laws, October 1, 1889; that at said election, the relator, W. E. Kern, was regularly and duly elected by the qualified voters of Cascade county to the office of county surveyor of said county, for the term of three years from January 1, 1890; that relator made and subscribed his oath of office, and executed his official bond, which was approved, accepted, and filed, as required by law, in the office of the county recorder; that, on the 28th day of January, 1890, the defendant, H. L. McIntyre, without right, did usurp and intrude into said office of county surveyor, and has wrongfully and unlawfully since that time been holding and exercising the functions of that office; that relator made complaint to the county attorney, and requested that he institute this action, which he refused to do. The prayer of the complaint is that defendant be excluded from holding and exercising the duties of the office, and that relator be adjudged to be entitled to hold the same, and be installed therein. Defendant filed a demurrer on the following grounds: "First, this court has no jurisdiction of the case; second, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant; third, that said action is not brought under the proper caption or style, nor in the proper name, to-wit, in the name of the people of the state of Montana, instead of being brought in the name of the state of Montana." The demurrer was overruled. Defendant elected to stand upon the demurrer, and declined to answer. Judgment was thereupon entered for relator, as prayed for, from which the defendant appeals to this court.

DE WITT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The contention of the parties herein is upon the action of the court in overruling the demurrer.

The first point in the demurrer is abandoned upon the argument, and we shall not discuss it.

As to the second point. The prayer of the complaint is dual, as allowed by the statute, (section 399, c. 5, tit. 10, Code Civil Proc.) that is, (1) that defendant be excluded from the office; and (2) that relator be adjudged to be entitled thereto. The prayer is based upon the statement of two facts in the complaint: (1) Relator's right to the office; and (2) defendant's usurpation of the office. The demurrer is a unit, and therefore, if any cause of action is set forth in the complaint, that pleading is good. If the usurpation by the defendant is sufficiently stated, the complaint must stand, whether the rights of the relator are well pleaded or not. That this complaint is good upon demurrer is abundantly sustained in People v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 43; Flynn v. Abbott, 16 Cal. 359; People v. Holden, 28 Cal. 124; State v. Messmore, 14 Wis. 125; State v. Price, 50 Ala. 563; People v. Ryder, 12 N. Y. 433, 16 Barb. 370; Territory v. Rodgers, 1 Mont. 252; 2 Estee, Pl. & Pr. (3d Ed.) §§ 2902-2918, cases cited; 8 Deer. Ann. Codes Cal. § 802 et seq., cases cited. Appellant has not cited us to any authorities, nor do we find any, holding a contrary view.

What may or may not be the valid objections to the style or title of the case we cannot inquire, under the third point of the demurrer as set forth. There is no demurrer "that plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue." Section 85, Code Civil Proc. 1881. The ground of demurrer, as stated by defendant, is not known to the statute. The judgment is affirmed.

ATTORNEYS—PROCEEDINGS TO DISBAR.

When, in a proceeding to disbar an attorney, the court is satisfied, after a thorough examination of the evidence, as taken before a referee, that the charges against him are groundless, the proceeding will be dismissed.

Chas. O. Donnell, for petitioner. McCutcheon & McIntire and B. Platt Carpenter, for respondents. Mr. Haldorn, pro se.

BLAKE, C. J. This is a proceeding, under the laws of the state, to cause the names of George Haldorn and F. T. McBride to be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors at law. After the complaint and separate answers of the parties had been filed in this court, a referee was appointed to take the testimony and report the same. This work has been done, and a voluminous record with many exhibits is before us. We have examined the evidence, and listened to the exhaustive arguments of the counsel, and declare, with out any hesitation, that the charges which have been exhibited against the respondents are groundless. No good purpose can be subserved by a review of the testimony to establish this conclusion, and we will not make a statement of the grievances which have been alleged. The conduct of some of the witnesses before the referee in the use of profanity cannot be passed over in silence, and can be punished by us as a contempt of this court. The persons of whom these remarks are uttered do not appear to have comprehended this matter, but their ignorance is no excuse, and a repetition of the offense will be followed by a speedy prosecution in this tribunal. We are also compelled to censure the counsel upon both sides for many acts of discourtesy towards each other in the hearing before the referee. They should have known and remembered at all times that they were in the eyes of the law in the presence of this court, and conducted themselves accordingly. It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the charges against the said George Haldorn and Francis T. McBride be dismissed.

UNRECORDED MORTGAGES — PRIORITY OVER JUDGMENT — DESCRIPTION.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 807, declaring that a judgment shall become a lien on the real property owned by the judgment debtor from the time it is docketed, and section 260, Comp. St. div. 5, providing that every conveyance of real estate not recorded shall be deemed void as against subsequent purchasers in good faith and for valuable consideration, an unrecorded mortgage declared by chapter 20, § 258, Id., to be valid as between the parties without recording, has priority of an after-docketed judgment.

2. The description of mortgaged premises as "sixteen feet of the north end of lots (1) one and (2) two in block forty-four (44)" in a given town, county, and state, is not so uncertain as to render the mortgage void.

M. J. Liddell and W. A. Burleigh, for appellants. Strevell & Porter, for respondents.

HARWOOD, J. In this appeal two questions of law are to be determined: First. A question of priority and relative legal effect of a judgment lien on real estate, and title acquired at execution sale thereunder, as against a mortgage executed and delivered prior to docketing of the judgment, but not recorded until after the judgment was docketed and levy made under execution. Second. A question as to the sufficiency of description of a portion of the real estate mentioned in the mortgage. These questions will be considered in the order stated.

This appeal is from the judgment of the trial court, and we find in the judgment roll an exception to the conclusions of law found by the court, on the ground that the same are not supported by the facts, as found by the court. The facts bearing upon the first point of controversy, as found by the court, are as follows: March 1, 1886, plaintiff loaned to J. F. Schmalsle $700, payable 12 months after date, with interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum, for which said J. F. Schmalsle made and delivered to plaintiff a promissory note and a mortgage, to secure the same, principal and interest, and $25 attorney's fees, on certain described lots of land situate in Miles City, county of Custer, which mortgage was filed for record in the office of the county clerk and recorder of said county, April 5, 1886. On the 11th day of March, 1886, judgment was rendered and docketed against said mortgagor, in the district court in and for said county, for the recovery of the sum of $1,500 in favor of William F. Schmalsle, one of the defendants in this action; that execution was duly issued on said judgment on March 19, 1886, under which execution the sheriff levied on the same real estate mentioned in said mortgage, and thereafter, on the 9th day of April, 1886, sold said real estate under said levy to William F. Schmalsle, for $1,100; that when such purchase was made the purchaser, William F. Schmalsle, had actual notice of the existence of the plaintiff's mortgage as well as constructive notice by the record thereof; that on the 9th day of October, 1886, the sheriff executed to William F. Schmalsle a deed conveying to him said property as sold under said execution, which deed was filed for record October 20, 1886. Upon this state of facts the court found as a conclusion of law that the judgment lien was paramount to the mortgage, and that the mortgage could not be "enforced against said property so levied upon to the exclusion of the said judgment or in priority thereto." So holding, the court denied the plaintiff a decree of foreclosure of her mortgage on said premises, and rendered judgment against her in favor of defendants William F. Schmalsle and Nelson A. Miles, from which judgment plaintiff appealed.

The question involved herein as to the relative force of a judgment lien, and a mortgage made and delivered prior to docketing of the judgment, but not recorded until after such docketing and levy of execution, must be solved by a consideration of the statute relating to the judgment lien and execution, and the statute providing for the conveyance of real estate or interest therein, and the effect of recording such conveyances or withholding the same from record. The statute fixing the judgment lien is found in section 307, Code Civil Proc., which provides: "Immediately after filing a judgment roll the clerk shall make proper entries of the judgment, under appropriate heads, or in the docket kept by him; and from the time the judgment is docketed it shall become a lien upon the real property of the judgment debtor, not exempt from execution, in the county, owned by him at the time, or which he may afterwards acquire, until said lien expires. The lien shall continue for six years unless the judgment be previously satisfied." The judgment lien here established by statute takes effect upon "the real property of the judgment debtor, not exempt from execution, in the county, owned by him at the time," or thereafter acquired. So, in section 313, Code Civil Proc., where the execution is provided for, the sheriff is required first to satisfy the judgment out of the personal property of the debtor, or, "if sufficient personal property cannot be found, then out of his real property; or, if the judgment be a lien upon real property, then out of the real property belonging to him, on the day when judgment was docketed or at any time thereafter." In Rodgers v. Bonner, 45 N. Y. 379, the court says: "A judgment is not a specific lien on any particular real estate of the judgment debtor, but a general lien upon all his real estate, subject to all prior liens, either legal or equitable, irrespective of any knowledge of the judgment creditor as to the existence of such liens." See, also, School-District v.

Werner, 43 Iowa, 643. In the case of Conard v. Insurance Co., 1 Pet. 442, Mr. Justice STORY, announcing the decision of the court, says: "Now it is not understood that a general lien by judgment on land constitutes, per se, a property or right in the land itself. It only confers a right to levy on the same, to the exclusion of other adverse interest, subsequent to the judgment; and when the levy is actually made on the same, the title of the creditor, for this purpose, relates back to the time of his judgment, so as to cut out intermediate incumbrances." In Brown v. Pierce, 7 Wall. 205, Mr. Justice CLIFFORD, speaking for the court, declares the extent and effect of a judgment lien as follows: "Judgments were not liens at common law. * * * Different regulations, however, prevailed in different states, and in some neither a judgment nor a decree for the payment of money, except in cases of attachment or mesne process, created any preference in favor of the creditor, until the execution was issued and had been levied on the land. Where the lien is recognized, it confers a right to levy on the land to the exclusion of other adverse interests acquired subsequently to the judgment; but the lien constitutes no property or right in the land itself. * * * Express decision of this court is that the lien of a judgment constitutes no property in the land; that it is merely a general lien securing a preference over subsequently acquired interests in the property; but the settled rule in chancery is that a general rule is controlled in such courts so as to protect the rights of those who were previously entitled to an equitable interest in the lands, or in the proceeds thereof. Specific liens stand on a different footing, but it is well settled that a judgment creates only a general lien, and that the judgment creditor acquires thereby no higher or better right to the property or assets of the debtor, than the debtor himself had when the judgment was rendered, unless he can show some fraud or collusion to impair his rights. Correct statement of the rule is that the lien of a judgment creates a preference over subsequently acquired rights, but in equity it does not attach to the mere legal title to the land, as existing in the defendant at its rendition, to the exclusion of a prior equitable title in a third person. Guided by these considerations, the court of chancery will protect the equitable right of third persons against the legal lien, and will limit that lien to the actual interest which the judgment debtor had in the estate at the time the judgment was rendered." In re Howe, 1 Paige, 125; Ells v. Tousley, 1d. 280; Keirsted v. Avery, 4 Paige, 15; Lounsbury v. Purdy, 11 Barb. 490; Averill v. Loucks, 6 Barb. 20. These eminent authorities are cited and quoted from as forcibly expressing the legal effect of a judgment lien generally. The correctness of the views expressed is not questioned, so far as we are aware, throughout the whole range of authorities on this subject.

Notwithstanding these doctrines, if there is any provision in our statutes which changes the relative force of the judgment lien in the case at bar, as against the prior acquired mortgage, then the latter must be postponed to the former, as held by the trial court. It is insisted by counsel for respondent that a mortgage executed upon land in this state should not be regarded as a conveyance in the sense that applied to a mortgage at common law; that a mortgage on land, as known to our statute, is a mere lien to secure the payment of money, and not a conveyance, as known to the common law. In support of this position, section 371 of the Code of Civil Procedure is cited, which provides as follows: "A mortgage of real property shall not be deemed a conveyance, whatever its terms, so as to enable the owner of the mortgage to recover possession of the real property without foreclosure and sale." It is urged that this provision radically changes the character of a mortgage in this state from that incidental to a mortgage at common law, making the mortgage here simply a lien on land to secure the payment of money or the fulfillment of an obligation, which lien attaches at the time of the filing of the mortgage for record, and not before. It is true that this provision of statute modifies the conditions of a mortgage in this jurisdiction to the extent of withholding from the mortgagee the right of possession of the mortgaged premises, upon the breach of the conditions of the mortgage, without first a foreclosure and sale. Nevertheless, a mortgage by our statute is declared to be a conveyance. Chapter 20, div. 5, of our statutes, provides the manner by which "conveyances of land or any estate or interest therein, may be made by deed signed by the persons from whom the estate or interest is intended to pass;" and section 270 of that chapter provides: "The term 'conveyance,' as used in this chapter, shall be construed to embrace every instrument in writing by which any real estate, or interest in real estate, is created, alienated, mortgaged, or assigned, except wills, leases for a term not exceeding one year, and executory contracts for the sale or purchase of lands." The mortgage in the case at bar is shown to have been executed in the manner provided in said chapter, for the execution of "conveyances of land, or any interest therein," and this mortgage is to be deemed a conveyance in the meaning of that term, as used in that chapter. By section 258 of said chapter, this conveyance is declared to be valid and binding, as between the parties thereto, without recording. Now, if that was a valid and binding conveyance of an equitable interest in said land, as between the plaintiff and her mortgagor, the mortgage interest had been effectually conveyed away prior to the attaching of the judgment lien on said land. In view of the doctrine held by the authorities cited, supra, the lien of the judgment, docketed subsequent to the conveyance of the mortgage interest, must have been subject to it. This would be so, not only in consequence of general principles of law, but strictly by the provisions of statute. The statute establishing the judgment lien, as before noticed, fixes the lien on the real estate owned by the judgment debtor in the county at the time of docketing the judgment or afterwards acquired. Hence, if a valid and binding conveyance of an interest has been made by the debtor prior to the docketing of the judgment, then he did not own the interest so conveyed at the time of docketing the judgment, and the lien thereof could not attach to that which the judgment debtor did not own. It cannot be maintained that the failure to record a mortgage defeats it, or postpones it to the lien of a judgment creditor, unless such failure continues until after sale under execution and purchase by one in good faith without notice. By section 259 of the chapter cited, supra, it is provided that the filing of the instrument of conveyance "shall impart notice to all persons of the contents thereof, and subsequent purchasers and mortgagees shall be deemed to purchase and take with notice." And, again, in section 260 of the same chapter, it is provided that "every conveyance of real estate within this state, which shall not be recorded, as provided for in this chapter, shall be deemed void as against any subsequent purchasers in good faith, and for a valuable consideration of the same real estate or any portion thereof, where his own conveyance shall be first duly recorded." Neither these provisions nor any others found in the statute include judgment creditors so as to make the unrecorded mortgage void as against a judgment lien. This proposition is supported by numerous authorities where the statutory provisions are similar to those existing in this state. Wilcoxson v. Miller, 49 Cal. 193; Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 363; Packard v. Johnson, 51 Cal. 545; Galland v. Jackman, 26 Cal. 80; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 128; Thomas v. Vanlieu, 28 Cal. 617; Davis v. Owenby, 14 Mo. 170; Valentine v. Havener, 20 Mo. 133; Holden v. Garrett, 23 Kan. 98; Knell v. Association, 34 Md. 67; Ells v. Tousley, supra; Hackett v. Callender, 32 Vt. 97; Hart v. Bank, 33 Vt. 252; Norton v. Williams, 9 Iowa, 528. Contrary to the authorities cited supra, our attention is called to an observation of Mr. Freeman in his work on Judgments (3d Ed., § 366) to the following effect: "In some states the registry laws so modify the effect of conveyances, and other instruments concerning real estate, as to give a judgment lien precedence over an unrecorded instrument of which the judgment creditor had no knowledge at the date of the attaching of the lien of his judgment." Also, note 1 to this observation, in which the author says: "The tendency of recent statutes, and the decisions interpreting them, is to give a judgment lien precedence over a prior unregistered conveyance or incumbrance, especially if the plaintiff had no notice of it when his judgment was docketed or registered or the levy of the writ made." In this connection respondent cites cases decided in the courts of last resort, in the states of Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, and Georgia. To these citations might have been added cases decided in Massachusetts, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and, perhaps, other states. But, on examination of these decisions, and the statutes under which the same were made, we find provisions differing radically from those of our own state. In the states mentioned, the courts were confronted by statutory provisions which gave precedence to a judgment lien, as remarked by Mr. Freeman, either expressly or by fair implication, and the courts where these decisions are found were interpreting such statutes. The weight of these citations rather tends to confirm us in the opinion that, under our statute, we could not fairly construe a judgment creditor's lien to be paramount to a bona fide mortgage, although not recorded at the time the judgment was docketed. It requires the force of statute to make a valid and binding unrecorded mortgage void as to the judgment creditor's lien in like manner as it requires statutory provisions to make an unrecorded deed or mortgage void as to subsequent purchasers or mortgagees. It has been held in Chumasere v. Vial, 3 Mont. 376, that the purchaser at execution sale is governed by the rule caveat emptor, and that if the judgment debtor was holding the legal title to real estate in trust for another, and such property was sold under execution against the trustee, in that case the purchaser acquired no title. In McAdow v. Black, 4 Mont. 475, it is held that "an execution creditor takes the property subject to any lien or equity that might be enforced against the judgment debtor." Is it not an irresistible logical conclusion from these principles that a judgment lien attaches to the real estate of the judgment debtor subject to any equities which might be enforced against the judgment debtor, and also against the purchaser under the execution sale with notice of such equities? We are of opinion that the court erred in concluding that the mortgage of appellant in the case at bar was inferior and subject to the judgment lien of respondent, or the title of respondent to said real estate, acquired by purchase at execution sale under said judgment, after having actual as well as constructive notice of respondent's mortgage on said premises.

We now come to the consideration of the second question involved in this appeal,—namely, whether or not the trial court erred in the conclusion of law that the fractional portion of lots 1 and 2 of block 44 mentioned in the mortgage was not sufficiently described; and, for that further reason, the mortgage should have no effect upon said portion of said lots as against the judgment lien of respondent. The complaint pleads the mortgage by setting it forth in its own terms. The descriptive portion in question is set forth in the mortgage as follows: "And sixteen feet of the north end of lots (1) one and (2) two in block forty-four (44) in said town of Miles City, according to the plat thereof filed for record," etc. The town, county, and state wherein the said lots are situate are fully set forth. The answer does not deny that the plaintiff's mortgage included some portion of lots 1 and 2 of block 44. The answer alleges that the sheriff sold the property described in the mortgage at public sale, and that "said premises and the whole thereof was sold to defendant."

The answer further alleges that said Jacob F. Schmalse was, at the time of docketing said judgment, the owner of the property in said mortgage set out and described, and the whole thereof. Among other findings of fact, the record shows that the court found "that at the time of the mortgage, and since, the defendant Jacob F. Schmalse never owned any other property in said block 44 than the fractional parts of lots one and two in said block, and as described in the mortgage." It is contended by the appellant that, as to said lots 1 and 2 of block 44, the descriptive language of the mortgage means 16 feet in depth severed from the north end of said lots; or, in other words, that the partition line severing plaintiff's portion of said lots under said mortgage, would cross said lots 16 feet from the north end thereof. On the other hand, respondent's counsel contends that the terms of the mortgage "sixteen feet of the north end" may mean 16 square feet. The pleadings do not call upon the court to correct any mistake or imperfection of the conveyance or to make it conform to the intentions of the parties thereto. If such an issue was involved under the present state of the pleadings and facts found we should have no difficulty in drawing a conclusion as to the meaning of said descriptive terms, being guided by the provisions of sections 628-633, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff is apparently satisfied with the description as it stands in the mortgage. We think the court erred in concluding that the mortgage was void, in so far as it related to lots 1 and 2 of block 44, for uncertainty of description. The plaintiff is entitled in that respect to a foreclosure of her mortgage according to the description therein contained. It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the court be reversed, and that judgment and decree of foreclosure of plaintiff's mortgage be entered in favor of plaintiff, on the facts found, to the effect that her mortgage lien stand precedent to respondent's claims upon said premises set up in this action, and to all other intents in the manner provided by law, and the practice in such cases.

2. Nor is such applicant disqualified by reason of "improvidence" because, at the advanced age of 61, he is not possessed of property of any considerable value, and for five years has not supported his wife and minor children, when it appears that he has been separated from his wife during that time, and that, though he has not much property, yet he has carried on a large business for himself, and transacted important affairs for others involving the custody and expenditure of large sums of money, in none of which matters is it proved that he was lacking in diligence, care, and foresight.

3. Such applicant is not disqualified by reason of want of integrity, because that three years before he made application for letters of administration, he excused himself under oath from grand-jury duty on the ground that he was a citizen of another state, but that, upon the trial of his application for letters, he swore that he had resided in the state for five years, thus bringing himself within the statute forbidding the appointment of a non-resident, (Prob. Prac. Act Mont. § 55,) as these facts do not show that applicant has committed perjury, but simply that he made a distinction between "citizenship," which renders one eligible for grand jury service, and "residence" requisite as the qualification of an administrator.

4. In order to prove want of integrity on the part of applicant, the contestants attempted to show that he had entered into a conspiracy with his brother and son to defraud the rest of the heirs of their rightful shares. One of the heirs testified that, on learning that decedent could not live long, she remarked to applicant that the old aunts would be surprised to find how much they had, and that applicant said that they need know nothing of it unless their nieces and nephews told them, and that they would be satisfied with very little. Applicant denied saying this. It was also shown that, at a meeting of the heirs after the funeral of decedent, in Massachusetts, applicant's brother stated to those assembled that it would take from 5 to 10 years to settle the estate, if there was any, in Montana, and that applicant confirmed the truth of this statement. Applicant's brother then requested the heirs to give him power of attorney to represent their interests in Montana, but this they refused to do. It did not appear that applicant had conferred with his brother prior to the meeting, and it was shown that they had seen each other but once in 30 years. It was shown that applicant's son claimed a number of shares of stock, as a gift from decedent, and was inimical to the rest of the heirs. There was much correspondence between applicant's son and his brother, but it was not shown that applicant had any knowledge of it, nor that he knew of statements made by his brother which indicated that he (the brother) entertained sinister designs upon the estate. Many witnesses testified that applicant's reputation for integrity was good in the community in which he lived. Held, that no conspiracy was shown, nor was it proved that applicant lacked integrity. BLAKE, C. J., dissenting.

5. The existence of the alleged conspiracy on the part of applicant, his son, and his brother not having been shown, telegrams that passed between applicant's son and his brother relative to the estate, just prior to decedent's death, are inadmissible in evidence against applicant, who is not shown to have had any knowledge of them.

6. Evidence of conversations between applicant's brother and third persons, in which the brother intimated an intention to defraud the other heirs, is inadmissible in the absence of proof of a conspiracy between applicant and his brother, or of proof that the brother's remarks were made in applicant's presence.

Appeal from district court, Silver Bow county; JOHN J. MCHATTON, Judge.

lace, Frank E. Corbett, Stephen De Wolfe, and McConnell & Clayberg, for appellant. Forbis & Forbis, M. Kirkpatrick, and J. M. Woolworth, for respondent.

HARWOOD, J. This is an appeal on behalf of Henry A. Root, an applicant for letters of administration on the estate of Andrew J. Davis, deceased. On the 11th day of March, 1890, as appears by the record, Andrew J. Davis, then a resident of Butte City, Silver Bow county, this state, died at that place, leaving an estate of the estimated value of four and one-half or five millions dollars. Among others, John A. Davis, a brother, and one Henry A. Root, a nephew, of deceased, petitioned the district court, exercising its probate jurisdiction under the constitution, for letters of administration on said estate; and each of said applicants also filed objections to the appointment of the other. Section 64, Prob. Prac. Act. These petitions and contests were heard and determined by the court making an order overruling all objections to the appointment of John A. Davis, and granting to him letters of administration upon said estate. Appellant, Henry A. Root, thereupon made a motion for new trial in said matter upon the following grounds: First, Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment, decision, and order of the court, and that the same is against law. Second, Errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the party making this application. Sections 323-327, Prob. Prac. Act; sections 295-301, Code Civil Proc. Motion for new trial was made upon a statement of the case, and, being heard by the court, was overruled, and this appeal was taken, both from the order overruling motion for new trial, and from the judgment and order of court granting letters of administration to John A. Davis.

Our statute (section 55, Prob. Prac. Act) provides the order of precedence in which letters of administration must be granted as follows: "Letters of administration on the estate of a person dying intestate must be granted to some one or more of the persons hereinafter mentioned, who are respectively entitled thereto in the following order: First, the surviving husband or wife or some competent person whom he or she may request to have appointed; second, the children; third, the father and mother; fourth, the brothers; fifth, the sisters; sixth, the grandchildren; seventh, the next of kin entitled to share in distribution of the estate; eighth, the public administrator; ninth, the creditors; tenth, any person legally competent." The persons, however, entitled to letters of administration, as prescribed in the foregoing section, are subject to a provision of the same section, to the effect that "no person who is not a resident of this state shall be appointed administrator;" and also to the provisions of section 59, as follows: "No person is competent to serve as administrator or administratrix who, when appointed, is, —First, under age of majority; second, convicted of an infamous crime; third, adjudged by the court to be incompetent to execute the duties of the trust, by reason of drunkenness, improvidence, or want of understanding or integrity." In section 64, Prob. Prac. Act, it is provided that "any person interested may contest the petition by filing written opposition thereto on the grounds of incompetency of the applicant." Under the provisions of those statutes it is clear that letters of administration "must be granted" to applicants in the order prescribed by statute, to the exclusion of others, unless the applicant is disqualified by reason of being a non-resident of this state, or a minor, or having been convicted of an infamous crime, or adjudged by the court to be incompetent to execute the duties of the trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence, or want of understanding or integrity. Respondent, John A. Davis, occupies a place precedent to appellant, Henry A. Root, in right to letters of administration upon this estate, by the provisions of statute, and, unless respondent be disqualified by reason of some disability mentioned in the statute, his appointment was properly made by the court and must stand. McGregor v. McGregor, 33 How. Pr. 456. The objections set up by appellant against the appointment of John A. Davis are, —First, that he is a non-resident of this state; second, that he is incompetent to execute the duties of the trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence, want of understanding and integrity. Evidence was introduced in support of these allegations on the part of Henry A. Root, as well as evidence as to the qualification of John A. Davis, and in his defense against the objections to his appointment. The assignments of error contained in the record relate, — First, to the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of the court against the alleged causes of incompetency; and, secondly, to errors of law alleged to have occurred at the trial, and been excepted to by appellant. These matters will now be considered in the order set forth in the record.

The first ground of error assigned, is, in effect, that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court that respondent was not disqualified, and should not be adjudged incompetent, by reason of drunkenness. Upon a careful review of all the evidence introduced, we find no error in the conclusion reached by the court below upon this question. This question does not turn upon the fact that the applicant is shown to be in the habit of using intoxicating liquor to some extent. However reprehensible that habit may be as regarded from a moral point of view, it is not within the province of the court to deny letters of administration to an applicant on the ground of mere use of intoxicants. The drunkenness contemplated by this statute, undoubtedly, is that excessive, inveterate, and continued use of intoxicants, to such an extent as to render the subject of the habit an unsafe agent to intrust with the care of property or the transaction of business. It is a matter of common knowledge that the appetite for intoxicating liquor takes such strong hold upon some individuals as to become a controlling influence. The appetite strengthens by each successive indulgence. The will force becomes too feeble to resist the craving of the appetite, indulgence is unrestricted, constant, and excessive. A person so controlled by such an appetite may be said to be abandoned to the habit of drunkenness. The unfortunate effect of this habit is to render the subject of it, not only physically and mentally incompetent to transact business of importance, and preserve property with due care, but usually the subject of this habit becomes indifferent to the most sacred duties, and careless of the demands of the highest moment. Such a person may well be adjudged incompetent to execute the duties of the trust involved in the administration of an estate. It is undoubtedly easier to prove the fact, and the disqualifying effect, of drunkenness, than to define the degree of intemperance necessary to produce incompetency. The vital question in the investigation of this objection is whether, or not, the applicant for letters is incompetent by reason of the inveterate use of intoxicants, and not whether he may, or may not, have used the same to some extent. In the case at bar it is admitted by appellant's counsel that the evidence introduced to establish the incapacity of John A. Davis, by reason of drunkenness, is meager. Witnesses introduced in support of that charge testified that John A. Davis drank intoxicating liquor, and some testified that he used the same to considerable extent at times, yet none of these witnesses would undertake to say that John A. Davis was incompetent to transact important business; nor did they testify to other facts from which the court could reasonably draw that conclusion. In defense against this allegation, it was proved, by a number of witnesses on behalf of John A. Davis, that, during his residence in Butte City since the fall of 1885, up to the fall of 1888, he was engaged in the wholesale grocery business at that place, as the senior member of the firm of Davis & Co.; that he was attentive to that business, and conducted it with such care and foresight that he acquired the reputation of being a conservative, successful, and clear-headed business man; and that other business men of that city sought his counsel in reference to business transactions. The testimony introduced on behalf of John A. Davis shows that, since the fall of 1888, when he retired from said wholesale grocery business, he has been engaged in attending to important business matters for the First National Bank of Butte, and also for the deceased, Andrew J. Davis, such as looking after claims owing to said bank, rebuilding the said bank after its destruction in the fall of 1889, and attending to important litigation in Iowa for deceased. The testimony of these witnesses, as to the respondent's habit of using intoxicating liquor, is to the effect that his use of the same was temperate. We think the court properly found upon the proof that the applicant was not incompetent by reason of alleged drunkenness. See Kechele's Case, 1 Tuck. 52.

Improvvidence was set up as ground of disqualification of John A. Davis, and it is urged that the court erred in finding that the same was not established by the evidence. In support of this ground of disqualification, our attention is called to two facts shown by the evidence: First, that respondent, at the advanced age of 61 years, is not possessed of property of any considerable value; secondly, that since 1885 he has not supported his wife and minor children. As to the latter fact, the evidence shows that a separation took place between respondent and his wife in 1885, and that he has not supported his wife and two minor children since that time. These facts do not tend to prove, either the providence or improvidence of respondent. He may have attended all his transactions in reference to the management of property with the best of foresight, and "hoarded his gain with a miser's care," and yet not supported his wife and children. Nor does the fact that respondent has no estate, standing alone, sustain the charge of improvidence. Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 449. "Improvvidence" is defined to be a want of care and foresight in the management of property. Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. 45; Webst. Dict.; 10 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 321. The symptoms of an improvident temperament would, evidently, be carelessness, indifference, prodigality, wastefulness, or negligence in reference to the care, management, and preservation of property in charge. It is said in Coope v. Lowerre, supra: "The improvidence which the framers of the Revised Statutes had in contemplation, as a ground of exclusion, is that want of care and foresight in the management of property which would be likely to render the estate and effects of the intestate unsafe, and liable to be lost or diminished in value by improvidence, in case administration thereof should be committed to such improvident person." We do not find in the record any evidence to show that respondent possesses, or has exhibited, in reference to property, the characteristics which constitute improvidence. On the contrary, there is evidence showing that he has been engaged extensively in mercantile business; that he has been intrusted with the custody, care, and expenditure of large sums of money, and the superintendence of undertakings of importance, involving large expense; and in none of these matters is it shown that respondent was wanting in foresight, care, and diligence in the management and preservation of the property committed to his charge. The court appears to be fully sustained by evidence in its finding that respondent is not disqualified by reason of improvidence. Coope v. Lowerre, supra; Emerson v. Bowers, supra; McMahon v. Harrison, 6 N. Y. 443; Coggeshall v. Green, 9 Hun, 471.

Want of understanding was alleged as a ground of disqualification of respondent, and the finding of the court against the existence of that fact is assigned as error, on the ground that such finding is not supported by the evidence. This proposition is not supported by any evidence found in the record. The tenor of all the evidence is to the contrary, and, moreover, the charge is incompatible with another charge and theory wrought out of the evidence, to be further considered, namely, an alleged design on the part of respondent to defraud certain heirs of their rightful shares of said estate, and an alleged conspiracy entered into by respondent with others to carry out that fraudulent purpose. Not only the tenor of the evidence, as we view it, but the construction put upon the evidence, by appellant's counsel, contradicts the allegation that respondent is wanting in understanding.

The further and last ground of disqualification urged by appellant against the issuance of letters of administration to respondent is "want of integrity." The finding of the court against that alleged disqualification is assigned as error for the alleged reason that such finding was not supported by the evidence. In passing upon this question it will be necessary also, to consider and determine the alleged errors of law, assigned in reference to the exclusion of certain testimony offered at the trial, on behalf of appellant. In addition to the fact that "conviction of an infamous crime" absolutely disqualifies an applicant for letters of administration, the question of the integrity of the applicant may be raised and be made the subject of judicial investigation and judgment. If judgment be pronounced, to the effect that the applicant is incompetent to execute the duties of the trust by reason of want of integrity, letters shall not issue to him. Section 59, Prob. Prac. Act. Just what degree of moral delinquency would justify the court in proceeding to that judgment is not clear. Undoubtedly, the accusations upon which a court should base this judgment ought to be certain and grave in their nature, and be established by proof which would, at least, approach the certainty required for conviction in criminal prosecutions. An abandoned person may be guilty of many dishonest transactions not punishable by our Criminal Code as an "infamous crime," which, nevertheless, would indicate such moral turpitude, such baseness of character, such want of integrity and conscientious honesty of purpose, as to render him unworthy of the trust involved in the administration of an estate. Under this statute proof may be made of such depraved conduct as would impeach an applicant's integrity, and justify the court in adjudging him incompetent by reason of want of integrity. The testimony, which appellant insists indicates a want of integrity on the part of John A. Davis, will now be examined. It appears, by the testimony of respondent, that about three years ago, on an occasion when he was summoned as a grand juror for Silver Bow county, on his examination under oath as to his qualifications to act as such, he excused himself from such service by saying he was a citizen of Chicago. This fact, coupled with the further fact that respondent testified in the trial of this case that he had resided in Silver Bow county since the fall of 1895, is construed by appellant's counsel as showing that John A. Davis has falsely testified, either in one case or the other. We think it is a self-evident proposition that one who deliberately and knowingly violates the sanctity of his oath is wanting in integrity. One of appellant's counsel asserts in his brief that John A. Davis "being examined under oath, in order to escape jury duty as a citizen, falsely testified that he then resided in Chicago, and that he did not reside at Butte, and so escaped jury service." This is a grave charge, but the evidence does not support it. Respondent Davis, testifying in this respect, said he had resided in Butte ever since the fall of 1885. He was residing there when summoned to serve on the grand jury, and, as to that matter, he says in his testimony: "I excused myself on account of citizenship, about three years ago. I think, in that conversation, I told the judge, probably, that I was not a citizen here. I think that was as much as two years ago. I know the judge asked me at the time if I intended to become a citizen here. I told him I had not decided. I told him I was a citizen of Chicago." In viewing this evidence, it appears very plainly that the respondent made a distinction between residence and citizenship. There is no other evidence on this matter than the testimony of respondent. It is simply the evidence of respondent as to his intention respecting his citizenship, and the expression thereof before the court two or three years ago. It is not uncommon for a man to dwell or reside in one country, and at the same time claim his citizenship in another. We find nothing in this evidence to justify the inference drawn therefrom by appellant's counsel.

Appellant further undertakes to impeach the integrity of John A. Davis by attributing to him a design to defraud certain heirs of said estate of their rightful shares thereof, and, in furtherance of such design, a conspiracy entered into by respondent, John A., and his brother Erwin, to carry such purpose into effect. To establish this fraudulent design and conspiracy, appellant's counsel point, first, to the testimony of Mrs. Ellen Cornue, a sister of appellant, Henry A. Root. It appears by the record that, during the last illness of Andrew J. Davis, deceased, she was summoned from New York state by telegram to visit her uncle Andrew. In her testimony on behalf of Henry A. Root, the appellant, she relates that soon after her arrival in Butte City, she learned from the attending physician that her uncle could not survive many days. That, upon learning this, she said to her uncle John, the respondent, "What a surprise it would be to those aunts down there when they realize how much they will have." That he replied, saying: "If their nieces and nephews do not put anything into their heads, they will be satisfied with very little. Diana should have the place where she is living. We will give a deed to her and a few hundred dollars, and she will be all right." That she then remarked to her uncle John that he would not find those old aunts such fools as he thought they were, to which John A. replied: "Well, if they do too much talking, I will go in with Jeff and take every dollar. I can go into Iowa and prove anything, and it won't take very much money to do it either." It appears by the record that the person referred to as "Jeff" is an alleged illegitimate son of deceased. After Ellen Cornue related that conversation as aforesaid, John A. Davis testified as to the same conversation. His version of it contradicts Ellen Cornue's evidence in that respect, except that they both agree that she commenced said conversation. It does not appear that, on any occasion, John A. introduced such subject, nor any subject kindred to the one mentioned in said conversation, although he was in company with his niece, Ellen Cornue, frequently at Butte City, and they traveled together thereafter from Butte, Mont., to Springfield, Mass.; nor does it appear that John A. sought to persuade this niece, or any one who had knowledge of the vast estate left by deceased, to join him in suppressing that knowledge from other heirs, or in defrauding or misinforming them as to the estate. On one occasion alone this niece introduced a conversation as to the surprise that awaited the other heirs, and, according to her narrative, John A. intimated that he harbored improper intentions towards other heirs. This he emphatically denies, and gives a different version of said conversation. The most that can be said of this evidence is that it is conflicting, and the court, having the witnesses before it, decided between the conflicting statements. The well-established rule, often announced by this court, is that in such a case the decision will not be disturbed. We pass to another incident connected with this branch of the case, upon which counsel for the appellant lay great stress, as bearing upon the alleged evil designs of John A. Davis, against certain other heirs. It appears by the testimony that immediately after the death of Andrew J. Davis, the remains of the deceased were conveyed to the family burying-place, near Springfield, Mass., for interment. After the funeral, on the evening of the same day, a number of the relations and heirs of the deceased being present at the Massasoit house, in Springfield, they met together, to consider what action was proper on their part in reference to the estate of deceased. There was present at this meeting, respondent, John A. Davis, his brother Erwin, and several of his sisters, also appellant, Henry A. Root, and some other heirs of deceased. Erwin Davis first made some remarks there, in which he said, in effect, that deceased may have left a will; that there was a will made by deceased at one time. He also said that the estate was not as large as had been reported, and suggested the probability of large debts existing against the estate, and mentioned the fact that it was reported that deceased had an illegitimate son in Iowa, whose claims may be set up, and litigation involved thereby, and suggested something about the advisability of attempting to settle with said son to avoid scandal; that he thought the estate could be settled in 5 years if there was a will, but that it would take 10 years if there was no will. As to this last remark in reference to the time required to settle the estate, he turned to John A. and asked him if he thought the statement about the time was correct, and John A. assented to the correctness of that statement. Erwin further suggested that some one should be appointed by the heirs to represent their interests in Montana, and said he supposed they would think him a proper person to represent them and look after their interests. This he said he would do if they so desired and empowered him so to do, and he suggested that they sign a paper giving him such power. The remarks of Erwin Davis at said meeting are repeated with considerable variation in important features, by some seven witnesses who were present, and who testified on this hearing, on the part of the appellant, Root. For instance, it is observed that some of these witnesses report Erwin as making the remark, when he referred to said estate, "If there is any estate," while Henry A. Root, the appellant, a lawyer by profession, Mr. Herbert P. Cummings, a business man, and Mrs. Elizabeth Ladd, a niece of deceased, who were called as witnesses against John A. Davis and related the remarks of Erwin Davis at said meeting, do not report him as making such a remark. Mr. Cummings testifies that Erwin, in the course of his remarks at said meeting, said: "If there was any estate for us, it would be obtained after a great deal of litigation." In the same connection, according to this witness, Erwin spoke of the "supposed illegitimate child and said there would be either eleven heirs or one, and that in an emergency some person should be given authority to act in regard to him if anything came up." After Erwin Davis finished his remarks, appellant, Root, made some remarks to those assembled, in which he, in effect, contradicted or modified the statements made by Erwin, and advised the heirs not to sign any power of attorney or other paper as suggested by Erwin, at least until they had advised with counsel. This appears to have ended the meeting. It is shown that, after said meeting, Erwin and John A. still advised their sisters to sign the paper authorizing Erwin to represent them concerning their interests in Montana, but in what respect, and to what extent, this paper authorized him does not appear. It is intimated by appellant's counsel that said paper may have been a document of different purport from that represented by Erwin. That document, however, does not appear in evidence, nor does any witness state anything as to its contents, nor does it appear that Erwin sought to conceal its contents. No evidence is found in the record to show that there was anything in said paper contrary to what Erwin represented, nor that Mr. Root, a lawyer present and disputing the propriety of the heirs signing it, could not have freely examined its contents if he desired.

After the conversation between Mrs. Cornue and respondent had been related by her, and the incidents of said meeting at the Massasoit House had been narrated by many witnesses on the part of appellant, John A. Davis was recalled for further cross-examination by appellants' counsel, and testified to the following effect: That, prior to the said meeting at the Massasoit House, he had not seen his brother Erwin but once during a period of more than 30 years, and that the one occasion was 10 years ago, when they met and were together about two hours; that before reaching the Massasoit House on the occasion mentioned, he had no communication whatever with his brother Erwin; that he did not know what correspondence passed between his son Andrew and his brother Erwin. He related the incidents of meeting his brother Erwin and his aged sisters, when he arrived at Springfield, Mass., in charge of his deceased brother's body, and narrated what little conversation he had with Erwin prior to the funeral, and on his return therefrom, up to the time of said meeting of the heirs, which meeting occurred after dinner, on the day of the funeral. He positively denies any secret meeting or conversation with Erwin, and denies that he entered into, or thought of entering into, any combination with Erwin. After the aforementioned testimony was introduced on the part of appellant, his counsel offered to prove by him the following facts in opposition to John A. Davis for letters of administration on said estate, to-wit: "That shortly prior to the visit of Mr. Root to Montana, in the early part of March, this year, his uncle Erwin stated to him that there was no doubt his brother Andrew would shortly die; that Andrew could not live much longer; that his estate would have to be taken charge of and administered upon; that the proper persons to control the administration were himself, [Erwin,] Mr. Root, and Mrs. Cornue; that they could select some one to take charge of it; that there were very few of the heirs who needed anything; that there was no reason why many of them should receive anything; that the interests of most of them could be acquired, if he [Erwin] controlled the administration, for very little; that the possession of money would be an injury to most of them; that if he could get control of the administration he could do pretty much what he pleased towards acquiring the interests of the others; that something, of course, would have to be done for Andy in Butte, [meaning Andrew J. Davis, Jr., a nephew of deceased;] that he [Henry A. Root] should have all he was entitled to; that brother John would have to have his share; that the only one of the others that could give him [Erwin] any trouble would be Smith of California, and that, if he resisted, he would law with him until he got sick of it; that, if there was a will that they wanted to have stand, they could have it stand, if they were on the inside; that, if there was a will that they did not want to have stand, they could overthrow it, if they were on the outside; that it would be necessary to go to Montana to carry out the arrangement, get charge of the estate, and put it into the hands of some one representing them; that, as for Diana, he could get her, if he had control of the administration, to accept a deed to the house she occupied and a few hundred dollars a year; and that the house was not worth over $1,000." This proffered evidence was rejected by the court upon objection on the part of respondent, as being incompetent and immaterial, to which ruling appellant excepted, and the same is assigned as error. At the same time appellant further offered to prove "that, on the conclusion of the meeting at the Massasoit House, Erwin Davis said to Mr. Cornue, 'What is the matter with Henry? [meaning Henry A. Root.] I thought he understood the arrangement between us; he was to be in; that speech of his has cost me some millions.'" In making this offer appellant by counsel said: "I offer to prove that he made these remarks last mentioned to Mr. Cornue, and separately to Mrs. Cornue, but I have no right to say, and do not say, that it was within the hearing of John A. Davis." Upon objection, by respondent's counsel, to the introduction of that testimony, on the ground that it was incompetent and immaterial, the court refused to allow the same to be proved, to which action appellant excepted, and assigns the same as error. Mr. Cornue testified to this same matter, on his examination as a witness on the part of appellant, in which testimony he said "the conversation in the hall between Erwin and me, just referred to by me, was somewhat of a whispered conversation between Erwin and me." On motion that part of Mr. Cornue's testimony, wherein he related said conversation, was stricken out by the court, which action of the court is excepted to and is assigned as error. The manager of the Western Union telegraph office at Butte, in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum, brought into court a number of telegrams, which, he said, had passed since the 14th of February, 1890. These telegrams were offered to be read in evidence, on the part of the appellant. The court examined said telegrams, and, on finding that the same had passed between Erwin Davis and his nephew, Andrew J. Davis, Jr., said the court would exclude them on the objection made by counsel for respondent, on the ground that John A. Davis was not shown to have any knowledge of said telegrams, and accordingly said telegrams were excluded. This action of the court was excepted to, and is assigned as error. The only theory upon which said evidence, which was stricken out or excluded, could be admissible against John A. Davis, is that the existence of a conspiracy, between him and his brother Erwin to defraud other heirs had already been established by competent proof. Had that conspiracy been established? By proof of what transaction, incident, or act, are we to find that John A. Davis had conspired with his brother Erwin to defraud other heirs of their rightful shares of said estate? These brothers had not met for more than 30 years, except for the brief space of two hours some 10 years ago, until they met on that solemn occasion, at the Massasoit House, on the morning of their brother Andrew's funeral. It was in evidence that no communications had recently passed between them. Indeed, it does not appear that they had communicated with one another for a period of 10 years.

Up to this time the evidence shows no fact which gives the slightest color of credence to the allegation of such conspiracy.

Even if we take Mrs. Cornue's version of her conversation with her uncle John as absolutely true, there was no reference in it to the fact that John and Erwin proposed to co-operate together. On the arrival of John at the Massasoit House, in charge of his deceased brother's body, he found awaiting him several aged sisters, his brother Erwin, and a number of other relatives of deceased. John tells in his testimony, on cross-examination, what occurred, both prior to the funeral and after that event, up to the time of said meeting of the heirs. It amounts to nothing more than a narrative of a hasty greeting between these brothers and sisters, who had scarcely met between youth and old age; the preparation for the funeral; the journey of 10 miles to the burial place; the obsequies; the return to the Massasoit House; the partaking of a late dinner together with all these heirs present,—after which the meeting occurred. No delay was made to give convenient time and opportunity for these alleged conspirators to meet in consultation. John is questioned on cross-examination as to whether he had a private or secret interview with his brother Erwin on the day of the funeral, prior to said meeting of heirs, and positively negatives all such questions. None of the seven witnesses who were there, and testified to the circumstances, intimate that such an interview occurred. So that up to the time of the meeting we have no evidence to show that any such an alleged conspiracy had been formed. Neither is there any evidence to show that John had any knowledge of Erwin's fraudulent designs if they existed. At the meeting John coincided with one remark of Erwin, as to the time it would take to settle the estate in Montana. This may have been an honest belief. If he was mistaken, we cannot say that it was not an honest mistake. He advised his sisters to sign the paper authorizing Erwin to represent their interests in Montana. There could no vice in this, as far as shown, because it does appear that it might not under certain circumstances be expedient, provided the person delegated was a trustworthy agent. There is nothing to show that John did not honestly and firmly believe in his brother Erwin's integrity when he advised signing such a paper. Mr. Root also expressed the idea that it would be proper for these heirs to be represented in Montana, for he said to them at said meeting that he was going to represent himself and sister, and if any of them wanted him to look after their interests, he would do so with pleasure. If John A. Davis was conspiring with his brother Erwin to carry out the alleged fraudulent purpose, it is a strange circumstance that John sat in said meeting, and heard Mr. Root contradict Erwin, both as to facts and as to the propriety of his advice to the heirs, and yet John offered no remarks calculated to put Mr. Root in a false light, or discredit his statements. Is it not unnatural for a man desperate to conspire for the consummation of such a nefarious scheme, inspired by the same hope, bent on achieving the same result, to calmly and quietly sit by, and hear a co-conspirator contradicted as to his statements, and challenged as to the expediency of his advice? Especially at the critical moment when the silent conspirator might exert a strong influence in turning the current of action in favor of the common purpose. It is said that John should have risen up and contradicted Erwin at said meeting. The record shows two good reasons why he did not do this: First. John says in his testimony that he said nothing to the heirs assembled there; that he had no chance to do so. Secondly. If there was any necessity for contradicting Erwin's remarks at said meeting, Mr. Root did so immediately after Erwin spoke. When it is considered, in this connection, that the record discloses that Erwin's remark at said meeting, as to the existence of a will, was founded on information received directly from deceased, according to Mr. Root's testimony; that his statement as to newspaper reports greatly overestimating the value of the estate was true; that his statement as to the report that there was a person in Iowa who claimed to be a son of deceased was well founded; that his remarks about the probability that litigation would arise, and that it might be found that deceased owed debts, and as to the time required to settle the estate, were mere suggestions, there was little to call for a contradiction from any one. In our view the court committed no error in striking out and excluding the evidence mentioned, on the ground that no conspiracy had been established. Even if that evidence had been admitted, we fail to see how it could have strengthened appellant's theory in respect to the alleged conspiracy, or how it would have involved John A. Davis therein. In the whispered conversation between Mr. Cornue and Erwin Davis, in the hall of the Massasoit House, offered in evidence, Erwin is reported as saying "What is the matter with Henry?" [meaning Henry A. Root.] I thought he understood the arrangement between us. He was to be in, and you were to be in." No reference is made to John A., and it is admitted that this remark was not within his hearing. Had this evidence been admitted, there was nothing in it for John A. to defend against, or explain, unless it was to deny that he had any knowledge of the arrangement which Erwin mentioned as being understood between himself and Mr. Root. In the evidence offered to be proved by Mr. Root on his own behalf, Erwin is reported as having sought out Mr. Root, and not only made a confidant of him, but named him a party to Erwin's alleged fraudulent scheme. Erwin is reported as having laid before Mr. Root the details of his alleged fraudulent scheme. He is reported by Mr. Root as having introduced this subject by saying, "Andrew would shortly die. He could not live much longer; that the estate would have to be taken charge of and administered upon; that the proper persons to control the administration were himself, Erwin, Mr. Root, and Mrs. Cornue." Then he is alleged to have gone on and unbosomed his fraudulent plans and purposes to Mr. Root. This occurred in New York. John A. was several thousand miles away at the time. In the course of this interview Erwin said "that it would be necessary to go to Montana and carry out the arrangement, get charge of the estate, and put it in the hands of some one representing them." John A. was living in Montana, the trusted brother and companion of Andrew, whose estate was the subject of this alleged plot. Why the necessity of going to Montana "and carry out the arrangement, get charge of the estate," etc., if John A. had joined, or was relied upon to join, the others in consummating this alleged fraud?

It is in evidence that Mr. Root had been educated by his uncle Erwin, until he arrived at the age of about 18 years. It also appears by the evidence that, at the time of said interview, and for some time prior thereto, Mr. Root was the attorney for his uncle Erwin, attending to most of his law business, which was considerable. According to Mr. Root's own testimony, shortly after said alleged interview, he came to Montana, arriving the 2d or 3d of March. He found his Uncle Andrew sick and unconscious, and was informed by the attending physicians that his Uncle Andrew could not recover. He then interviewed two attorneys and counselors of his uncle Andrew, in respect to Andrew's affairs, and as to whether he had made a will. Having learned what he could from them, he sought and obtained an interview with his uncle John, the respondent, in which Mr. Root proposed himself as a proper party to take part in the administration of his uncle Andrew's estate. Mr. Root stayed in Butte about one day, then returned to Helena, consulted lawyers and found it was necessary to be a resident of this state to be qualified for appointment as administrator. Thereupon he declared to some parties his intention to become a resident of this state, hired desk room in his lawyer's office, left direction to have his name proposed for membership of a club, and on the 6th day of March left here on his return to New York. Five days later his uncle Andrew died. Mr. Root says he had quite a long talk with his uncle John while in Butte, on the occasion mentioned, but there nowhere appears an utterance throughout the whole range of evidence to show that Mr. Root mentioned to his uncle John the alleged fraudulent intentions and propositions of Erwin Davis, which had been made to Mr. Root, according to his proffered proof, shortly before he left New York to come to Montana. So far as the evidence discloses he kept the alleged fraudulent plans and arrangement of Erwin a profound secret, until he offered to swear to the same at the trial. It does not even appear that he warned his aunts, or even his aunt Diana, whom he says was named by Erwin as an intended victim of the alleged fraud. So that, as far as can be gathered from the evidence, John went to the meeting at the Massasoit House without the slightest warning to arouse his suspicions against his brother Erwin. Even there, when Mr. Root made remarks, he failed to inform the heirs of Erwin's alleged designs. It is further asserted by appellant that John

A. Davis harbored a design to join with Jefferson Davis, the alleged illegitimate son of deceased, and attempt to take the whole estate by virtue of the alleged son's heirship. This accusation is based upon certain remarks which John is alleged to have made. Mary E. Cummings testified that, on the forenoon of the next day after said meeting of the heirs at the Massasoit House, she had a conversation with her uncles John and Erwin, in the parlor of said house, in the presence of her mother, her sister, Mrs. Cummings, and her aunt Diana. The witness testifies that at first they were engaged in social talk, and afterwards the conversation turned on the question of the heirs signing said paper for Erwin; that her mother then stated that she had decided not to sign said paper, for the reason that her children were not willing that she should do so; that Erwin then said he should not ask her again to sign the paper, nor allow her to do so; that he would go to Montana and represent himself. Then John remarked, as this witness testifies, "in a threatening manner," that he would go out and represent himself, and added, by way of a threat, "I can go in with the boy and take the whole." The witness says she then turned to her uncle Erwin and said, "If he can do that, a smart lawyer certainly can," and that Erwin replied saying, "No, no, he does not mean that." We have carefully considered this testimony, not only as to the substance, but also in relation to the circumstances which surrounded the parties speaking, and the other testimony recorded in the case. In itself this testimony shows that what is quoted by the witness must have been a mere fragment of some conversation, of which the context is not given. This is apparent from the sentence quoted,—"I can go in with the boy and take the whole." The witness does not relate that anything had been said about any boy during that conversation. We are left to infer that "the boy" referred to was some person who had been spoken of in the conversation. It is no doubt a fair inference that the person who had been mentioned was the alleged illegitimate son of deceased, and that, when John said "the boy," he referred to that person. If the conversation, of which the remark quoted is evidently a fragment, was laid before the court, it would probably show whether an evil or an innocent intention was the motive of that remark. One of the persons whom this witness named as present at said conversation was a witness before the court, and testified on behalf of appellant, but she gave no testimony as to the substance of the conversation just referred to. If John A. Davis made such remarks, and "in a threatening manner," or "by way of a threat," it is strange that the sister, Mrs. Ada Cummings, who was present and who testified in court on behalf of Mr. Root, says nothing about an occurrence of such importance, and so calculated to harrow the feelings of these expectant heirs. We only have such a fragmentary and disconnected report of it as to require inference or supposition to connect it with the party referred to, but we have evidence of the same witness to the effect that, when she spoke to her uncle Erwin about said remark made by John, placing a certain meaning upon it, Erwin corrected her, saying John did not mean that. It should also be observed in this connection that, if John A. Davis entertained thoughts of joining with said alleged son to attempt to claim the whole estate through his relationship to deceased, as appellant insists, this brings to light another conspiracy at least contemplated or threatened by John, while at the Massasoit House. According to this theory, John is placed in the attitude of conspiring at one moment with Erwin, to get charge of the estate and defraud certain heirs of their inheritance, and at the next moment, in the presence of Erwin and other heirs, seriously threatening to go in with a person whose claims, if established, would defeat Erwin and all the heirs who met at the Massasoit House, including John himself, of all hope of succeeding as heirs to this vast estate. The record shows that at the Massasoit House much was said, by some of the heirs assembled there about said illegitimate son in Iowa. Erwin suggested that some one be authorized to settle with that individual, to avoid litigation and scandal; and it appears that John favored that plan. It is apparent that a person, in discussing this matter with the fairest motives, may have said, "I can go in with the boy and take the whole," if, in using that expression, it was only meant to urge the importance of arranging a settlement or authorizing some person to attempt it. The context would be the best guide to show what the motive of the speaker was. John testifies that, when he mentioned the said alleged son, in conversation with Mrs. Cornue, he used expressions somewhat similar in import. He testifies that he said: "The big danger is this boy in Iowa that is making the claim. There is danger and trouble, I said. Anybody can take that boy, and can prove anything down in Iowa. I said I could take the boy and prove anything." It appears by the testimony of John that, after the meeting at the Massasoit House, the other heirs having failed to concur in any arrangement to settle with said Iowa claimant, Erwin, on his own responsibility, authorized John to pay said claimant $25,000 to quiet his claims and avoid scandal, and that Erwin said he would furnish that sum, and take his chances on the other heirs bearing their proportion of such outlay. John testifies that such settlement, if made, was to inure to the benefit of all other heirs; that, upon the suggestion, John went to Iowa on his way west, but was unable to see said claimant. John further said in his testimony: "Erwin and several of us have combined in a common defense against the Iowa boy. There is no agreement with me that is inimical to the interests of the other heirs of this estate. If Erwin has any such design, I know nothing of it."

The record shows that, on the day following Andrew's death, John A. Davis caused to be made, and he verified, a petition for his appointment as administrator of the estate, in which he estimated the value thereof at four and one-half millions, and named all the living brothers and sisters of deceased, and the issue of deceased brothers or sisters, as the heirs of said Andrew J. Davis, deceased. In this petition, John made no mention of said alleged Iowa claimant. This petition John caused to be filed in court on the 28th day of March, before he returned from the east. There is no proof that John A. Davis has done any act in favor of said alleged son of deceased, or in violation of the rights of others who claim to be heirs to said estate. The attack upon the integrity of John A. Davis is not made by way of allegation and proof of any dishonest act or default committed by him during a long life; but the attack on his integrity is made by construing certain expressions or suggestions, by way of advice, to mean that since the death of Andrew, he has developed into a monster of depravity, and is disqualified to take the office of administrator, by reason of want of integrity. In drawing the proper conclusion from testimony of the character under consideration, it may be necessary for the court to weigh the testimony of divers witnesses, by considering their appearance and manner of conduct on the witness stand, and all the elements which add to, or detract from, the weight which should be given to testimony. From such legitimate reasons, the court before whom the witnesses testified, may have disregarded or given very little credence to certain testimony which is made the basis of appellants' charges against John A. Davis. It is not the province of this court to pass upon the credibility of witnesses, or to decide delicate questions as to the weight of the utterances of divers witnesses, whose testimony is brought here in the record. That province must be left to the judges and jurors before whom the witnesses appear and speak. At the trial, Andrew J. Davis, Jr., was called as a witness, on the part of his father, John A. Davis. This witness testified that he was the confidential agent and business manager of his uncle Andrew, for a long time prior to Andrew's death, and knew about the effects of deceased. The witness testified generally as to the character and value of the assets belonging to the estate. On cross-examination it was developed that this witness claimed to own certain shares of stock in the First National Bank of Butte, formerly belonging to deceased, by virtue of a gift, and actual delivery thereof to him by his uncle Andrew, at the time the latter was preparing to go to Tacoma, a few months prior to his death. The details of this alleged gift were inquired into, and the witness related them. Another witness was called and testified to the same effect. Respondent, John A. Davis, was questioned regarding the same matter on cross-examination, and said he did not know that he had heard it said that his brother Andrew, shortly before the latter's death, had given said bank-stock to Andrew J. Davis, Jr. The witness further said he did not recollect of ever having asked his son Andrew whether or not that rumor was true. It is urged that this fact that respondent's son has a claim adverse to the interests of the heirs of said estate ought to disqualify respondent to take the office of administrator, on the theory that the respondent would be likely to favor his son's claim. This fact has no bearing upon the question of John A. Davis' integrity, nor upon any other ground of disqualification alleged against respondent. A man of the most upright character, and of the strictest integrity, and free from all disqualifying conditions prescribed in the statute, may have a son who claims interests adverse to other claimants of an estate. It would be clearly unlawful to set aside the father's right to letters of administration on such a pretense as that. If a dispute arise between Andrew J. Davis, Jr., and other claimants of said bank-stock, the law has ample facilities and methods to bring such dispute to trial and determination, independent of the desires of the administrator. The said claim of Andrew J. Davis, Jr., is against the interests of his father John A. Davis. The legal presumption is that a man acts in favor of his own interests. Higman v. Stewart, 38 Mich. 518. If we are to understand that appellant contends that John A. Davis would presumably act fraudulently in aid of his son's claim, it must be answered that no such presumption arises from the mere relationship of father and son. The legal presumption is that a man acts honestly and without fraud. Fraud is never presumed. Hatch v. Bayley, 12 Cush. 27; Oaks v. Harrison, 24 Iowa, 179. The legal maxim is, odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege præsumenda. So it is said by Lord Coke: "In an act which partaketh both of good and bad, the presumption is in favor of what is good, because odious and dishonest things are not to be presumed." Co. Litt. 78b; Jackson v. Miller, 6 Wend. 228; Habersham v. Hopkins, 53 Amer. Dec. 676; Stewart v. Preston, 1 Fla. 10. In this connection, the testimony of John A. Davis, to the effect that he had no knowledge of the claim of his son to said bank-stock, is criticised, as evidently untrue. There is no evidence, in the record to show that this is untrue, but the argument is made from inferences of relationship. The presumption is that a witness speaks the truth. Section 619, Code Civil Proc. Moreover, if John A. Davis is a man who would testify falsely, and desired to aid his son Andrew in support of the claim to said bank-stock, how easily and plausibly could John have given evidence in support of his son's claim, considering that John was the constant companion of his brother Andrew for a long time prior to the death of Andrew. In defense against the attack made upon his integrity by appellant, respondent, John A. Davis, called a number of witnesses, who testified to the effect that they had known respondent a long time, and knew his reputation, as to integrity, in the community in which he lived, and that his reputation was good. The reception of this evidence is assigned as error. We have no hesitation in pronouncing the action of the court correct, in receiving said testimony as to respondent's general reputation for integrity, where one of the questions at issue was his want of integrity. Appellant specifies that the court erred in considering the request of sundry heirs for the appointment of John A. Davis. We find nothing in the record showing that the court considered such a document, nor that the consideration thereof was objected to, or an exception saved upon such question. This court will not consider an assignment of error under such conditions.

Upon the views hereinbefore expressed, we are of the opinion that the order of the court below, in overruling the objections to the appointment of John A. Davis, (also the motion for a new trial,) and granting to him letters of administration on said estate, ought to be affirmed, and it is so ordered, with costs.

DE WITT, J., concurs.

BLAKE, C. J., (dissenting.) I regret to announce that, for the first time since the organization of the government of this state, a judgment will be pronounced herein by a divided court. I think that the principles which control the issues of drunkenness, improbvidence, or want of understanding in these proceedings have been laid down with legal precision. I concur in the opinion of the majority in upholding the implied findings of the court below that John A. Davis should not be adjudged incompetent to be appointed the administrator of the estate of Andrew J. Davis, deceased, by reason of these objections which have been alleged, heard, and tried. There is a substantial conflict in the evidence upon the cause of drunkenness, and upon this ground alone the ruling under review can be sustained. The testimony of the respondent with reference to his excuse, which he submitted under oath to the district court, and by which he secured exemption from service upon the jury in the case of Territory v. Clayton, 8 Mont. 8, 19 Pac. Rep. 293, is contradictory and unsatisfactory. He uses the words "citizen" and "resident" regardless of their exact meaning. In one answer he testifies: "I have excused myself * * * by saying that I was a resident of Chicago. I excused myself on account of citizenship about three years ago." His statements are consistent with both theories of guilt and innocence, and I am willing to give him the benefit of the doubt and dismiss the charge of perjury. I have not been able to find in the authorities a satisfactory definition of the term "integrity," which is found in the statutes relating to the competency of an administrator. Its meaning should not be restricted to what is generally understood by the word "honesty," although the last is properly deemed by lexicographers a synonym. The administrator holds a trust of the highest character, and should act with strict impartiality in the collection of the property of the estate of the deceased, and the payment of the assets to the heirs. When the duties of the position are considered, it is evident that the want of integrity which renders a person incompetent to receive this appointment should be defined. The following definition by Webster is apposite: "Freedom from every biasing or corrupt influence or motive." The court below was called upon to determine judicially, from all the evidence, not merely whether John A. Davis was an honest or a dishonest man in the ordinary signification of words, but whether he was free from all bias, influence, or motive, which would interfere with the exercise of his functions as an administrator of the estate of his deceased brother. In arriving at a correct decision of this issue, it will be necessary to observe the conflicting interests of the heirs, and the relationship of the parties who are asserting demands which are hostile to the estate, and the conduct of John A. Davis concerning these matters. Andrew J. Davis died March 11, 1890, and was buried on the 18th day of the month in the town of Somers, state of Connecticut. John A. Davis subscribed and verified, two days after the death of his brother, a petition for letters of administration upon the estate, and afterwards accompanied the remains of the deceased to the family burying-ground. The petition, which alleges that the value of the real and personal property of the decedent is about four and a half millions of dollars, was not filed until March 28, 1890.

We will notice other facts about which there is no controversy. The capital stock of the First National bank of Butte, in this state, is $100,000, and the undivided profits amount to the sum of $600,000; 950 of the 1,000 shares of this bank stand upon the books thereof in the name of the deceased, A. J. Davis. A. J. Davis, Jr., is a son of John A. Davis, and was called twice to the witness stand in his behalf, and testified, upon cross-examination, that the certificates representing these shares were given to him in December, 1889, by his uncle; that they were not indorsed; that his brother, John E. Davis, voted the stock in the following January at a meeting of the stockholders, under a proxy given by the said A. J. Davis; and that he claimed them as a gift. James A. Talbot, who testified for John A. Davis, corroborated A. J. Davis, Jr., respecting the conversation between the parties in December, 1889, about the disposition of the stock certificates. The members of this bar, who appear for John A. Davis in these proceedings, stated in this court that they are the attorneys for A. J. Davis, Jr., in maintaining his right of ownership in these shares of bank-stock. I do not wish to express an opinion which will convey an intimation of my views of this contention, but I do insist that it is the duty of the administrator of the estate of the deceased to resist in every court this claim of A. J. Davis, Jr., and obtain by a resort to legal remedies, if necessary, the possession of this property. Upon this subject, which involves the sum of $665,000, John A. Davis testified: "I don't know that I ever heard it said that my brother Andrew, shortly before his death, gave his stock in the First National Bank of Butte to my son Andrew. I do not recollect of ever having asked my son whether or not that rumor was true." A. J. Davis, Jr., testified that his father, during the past two or three years, "has been representing my uncle Andrew, the deceased, in different capacities. My uncle told me, after father left the grocery business, that he did not want him to pin himself down to any active business; that between his Iowa affairs and the bank he could keep him occupied. He told me there were some old papers in the bank that needed looking after, and that my father was a very good hand at that and could take charge of those matters, and he told me to pay him liberally for his services." When this testimony is weighed, showing the knowledge of John A. Davis of the affairs of the bank and the deceased, his ignorance and neglect to inform himself upon business of such vital importance to the estate, as well as to his son, are inexplicable. This, however, is a digression. It is a presumption upon which we can act, when the contrary is not shown by the record, that John A. Davis will be governed by bias and the influence of parental love in favor of his son in this matter, and that he will not therein protect vigilantly the interests of the estate. It is the policy of the law to exclude men from such a trial, and the authorities bearing upon this proposition will be examined hereafter. But assuming that this state of facts is insufficient to justify the probate court in refusing to appoint John A. Davis the administrator of the estate, it should compel a rigid scrutiny of the evidence with reference to his qualifications. I am unable to reconcile his conduct with honesty or integrity in the treatment of the heirs of the deceased. After the funeral, a meeting of some of the relatives was held at the Massasoit House in Springfield, state of Massachusetts. Among those present were two sisters, Miss Diana Davis, aged 76 years, and Mrs. Sarah M. Cummings, aged 69 years, two brothers, John A. Davis and Erwin Davis, and a number of nephews and nieces. Erwin Davis made some remarks upon this occasion, and the transcript contains the testimony thereof by Miss Cummings, Mr. Cummings, Mrs. Cummings, Mr. Ladd, Mrs. Ladd, Mr. Cornue, Mrs. Cornue, and Mr. Root. In ordinary cases, the general effect of the proof may be stated, but when the court is divided and vast interests are involved, prolixity is unavoidable, and I will quote the language of each witness.

Mrs. Cornue testified: "If there is a will, an estate can be settled within five years. Yet at the end of five years there might not be a dollar for any of us. If there is no will, it will take ten years, and at the end of ten years there probably might not be a dollar for us, as there will necessarily be great litigation. He spoke of there being debts very likely, and he said it was reported that there was an illegitimate child, and that if there was, that there would not be a dollar left for any of us. * * * And then he turned to Uncle John and said, 'You have lived in Montana, and know the laws of Montana. Am I not right about the time it takes to settle an estate?' And Uncle John said, 'Yes, it takes from five to ten years to settle an estate in Montana. * * * He [Uncle Erwin] mentioned five years as the shortest time in which the heirs could receive anything, and then only if there was a will. * * * And if there was not a will, ten years was the shortest time in which they could get anything." Miss Cummings testified: "He [Erwin Davis] also stated that if there was a will it was possible that the estate could be settled in five years, and if there was no will it would take ten years or more before a distribution of the estate could take place. * * * He spoke several times in this way: 'If there be an estate.' * * * I think those were his words. Near the close of his remarks he turned to his brother John and asked him if he was correct about the laws of Montana, as he [John] had lived there, and John replied that he was; that it took about ten years to settle an estate in Montana. Uncle Erwin said that, if there was no will, everything might be used up in litigation. He said he knew there would be large debts. I am sure he used the word 'large' in speaking of the debts." Mr. Cummings testified: "He [Erwin Davis] went on to state that if there was a will it would take five years to settle the estate in Montana; if not a will, from five to ten years; and, if there was any estate for us, it would be obtained after a great deal of litigation. He spoke of the difficulty of settling an estate in a new territory, and, after speaking of that, he turned to Uncle John and asked him if he was not right. And Uncle John said he was, that it would take from five to ten years to settle the estate." Mrs. Cummings testified: "Erwin Davis said at that meeting that, if there was no will, that would be the worst possible complication of the affair, and that in that case it would take from five to ten years to settle up the estate, if there was any estate, which remarks he made several times, 'if there was any estate.' He said there would probably be large debts. * * * At the close of the statement he asked Uncle John if he was right about its taking so long to settle up an estate in Montana, and Uncle John said he was, and that it would take from five to ten years." Mrs. Ladd testified: "He [Erwin Davis] said it was to be hoped there was a will, because in that case if there was anything coming to us we might get it in five years, and if there was no will it would be ten years, and perhaps we would never get anything. * * * If the public administrator got it, it would be used up in litigation, and there would probably be very little, if anything, left. He said there was one that claimed to be an illegitimate child, and that if there proved to be such a child, he would claim all, and there would be nothing left for us. At the close of the remarks he turned to Uncle John and asked him if he was right about settling an estate, as he had lived in Montana and knew the laws of Montana, and Uncle John said, 'Yes, it would probably take from five to ten years to settle an estate.'" Mr. Ladd testified: "He [Erwin Davis] further said that it was to be hoped that there was a will, in which case the property might be settled so that the heirs would receive what they were entitled to within five years; that, if there was no will, considerable litigation would necessarily follow, which would probably take so much time that it would be ten years before any division of the estate could be made, even if there was any of it to be divided. * * * There was a son who claimed to be an illegitimate son, and if he came forward to claim the estate, he could claim it and there would be nothing left for anybody else. * * * He said there were probably large debts against the estate. Those were his words, as near as I can remember them. * * * He thought the estate would be settled in five years if there was a will, but that it would take ten years if there was no will. He then turned to his brother John and asked him, 'Is that not so, John? You have lived in Montana, and know the laws out there.' And John Davis replied, 'Yes, you are right; it would take from five to ten years to settle an estate in Montana.'" Mr. Cornue testified: "He [Erwin Davis] said if there was a will it would take five years to settle the estate, and if there was no will it would take ten years. He said there were debts against the estate. * * * At the close of his remarks Erwin turned to his brother John and said to him, 'You have lived in Montana and know the laws there, what do you say?' And Uncle John said 'Yes, that is right; it takes from five to ten years to settle an estate there.'" Mr. Root testified: "He [Erwin Davis] said that a will had been made a considerable period before that, and with codicils, and that it was to be hoped that there was still such a will; and that in case there was a will, whoever was entitled under it would receive what was given to him in five years; and if it should turn out that there was no will, the estate could not be settled for ten years, and perhaps not then, as necessarily there would be a great deal of litigation; and then he added that, will or no will, we must take care of the indigent members of the family. * * * That it was reported that there was an illegitimate son; that if it should turn out that there was such a son, that son would inherit everything and there would be nothing for us; that instead of the estate being divided into elevenths there would be but one portion, and that that son would get it. * * * He said something about there being debts, though I cannot remember just what, but the impression left upon my mind was that he said that it would be found that Uncle Andrew had large debts. * * * He turned to his brother John and said: 'Brother John, am I right about the length of time it takes to settle an estate in Montana? You live there and you know.' And Uncle John said, 'Oh, yes, about five or ten years to settle an estate in Montana.'"

The effect of these statements of Erwin Davis, and of the apparent concurrence of John A. Davis in their accuracy, upon the heirs who composed his audience can be readily seen. They were addressed to persons who lived thousands of miles from Montana and had no knowledge of the financial condition of the deceased, or the laws of this state which regulate the distribution of estates. The youngest of the brothers and sisters of the decedent was then 63 years old, and confidence would be naturally reposed in John A. Davis.

He had been, according to the evidence, the trusted agent of his deceased brother, and possessed the information which the relatives at that time needed. He then knew that the deceased owed small sums, if anything, that the value of this estate exceeded $7,000,000, and that the settlement of estates in Montana did not require five or ten years, or any similar period of time. It was the duty of John A. Davis, under these peculiar circumstances, to have told the whole truth, but he deliberately refused to afford his kinsmen any light, and said nothing about his petition for letters of administration, which had been prepared before his departure from this state in the same month. The respondent is silent in his testimony concerning these remarks of Erwin Davis and all that he says upon the point is embraced in the following brief sentences: "There was a meeting of the heirs at Springfield, Mass., after the funeral. I said nothing to the heirs assembled there. I had no chance to do so. I might have talked to the individual members of the family, but not to them when assembled." The absurdity of this excuse is evident when the record is looked into. All the foregoing witnesses, Mr. and Mrs. Cornue, Mr. and Mrs. Ladd, Mr. and Mrs. Cummings and Miss Cummings, testify that there was a pause at the conclusion of the speech of Erwin Davis, and Mr. Root, in substance, observed: "If no one else had anything to say, he had." At this gathering of an informal nature, there was nothing which could prevent John A. Davis from having a "chance" to talk. Another part of the evidence should be commented on in this connection wherein John A. Davis says: "Erwin is here in the city and has been for ten days. I have seen him every day of that time." If any of these witnesses had erred in stating the remarks of Erwin Davis, it was within his power to correct them, but he did not vindicate this privilege by going upon the stand. The court below in my opinion did not give to this evidence, which is not controverted, its proper weight. In another particular, I think that John A. Davis is proved to be wanting in integrity. Erwin Davis requested the heirs at this meeting to sign an instrument of some character, which conferred upon him some authority to represent them in the settlement of the estate. Root, the appellant, opposed this action and advised every one of them to consult an attorney before he signed any paper so that he could realize fully the consequences. Mr. Cummings testified: "After Mr. Root had finished and had gone out, and the rest of the company, Uncle Erwin said to Uncle John, 'What was the matter with Root?' He asked Uncle John if he supposed Root had been drinking and Uncle John said he thought so. Uncle John also then said not to have anything to do with a lawyer; that he had had a good deal of law business, and found it was very expensive, and that there were but few honest men among lawyers." Mrs. Cummings testified: "He [John A. Davis] also said that it was necessary to be united in the affair, and he turned to me and said: 'We don't want any lawyers to be mixed up in it at all; that there were very few honest men among lawyers;' that if they got mixed up in it, the estate would go in litigation." The listeners would infer from these statements that John A. Davis did not intend to protect his interests in the estate with the aid of attorneys, but the following portions of his testimony show his duplicity. "Between the time my brother Andrew died, and the time I left here with the body, I saw counsel here. My son Andy was with me at the time. I told Andy to see Judge Dixon and have him draw a petition for letters of administration for me. I had not seen Mr. Forbis or his firm prior to signing the petition. It was my son Andy who saw them. I instructed Andy to employ Forbis & Forbis." The same spirit of unfairness or deception upon the part of John A. Davis is shown in his efforts to assist Erwin Davis in procuring the signatures of the heirs to the written instrument which has been referred to. Miss Cummings testified: "The meeting adjourned until one o'clock the next day. On that next day I had a conversation with my uncle John and Uncle Erwin. My mother was present, also my sister, Mrs. Cummings, and Aunt Diana. The conversation was in the forenoon, in the parlor of the Massasolet House. We were engaged in social talk at the first, when Uncle Erwin asked my mother and Aunt Diana if they were ready to sign that little paper. And my Aunt Diana said: 'Oh, oh, no; wait until the rest come. You said I might be the last to sign it.' Uncle John spoke and said: 'If no one makes a beginning, if no one signs first, it will never be done,' and he related a little story to illustrate his meaning. He said his wife was sick at one time, and he went to engage a nurse, and she would not go without a hired girl; and he went to get a hired girl, and the hired girl would not go without a nurse. After Uncle John had told that story my mother told Uncle Erwin that she had decided not to sign any paper. Erwin told her, 'Very well. Then I shall do nothing for you. I shan't ask you to sign again. Indeed I shan't allow you to sign if you wish to. I shall go out to Montana and do for myself.' And my Uncle John spoke up and said: 'So shall I go out and do for myself.' Both Erwin and Uncle John spoke in a threatening manner; both of them. And Uncle John added, by way of threat, 'I can go in with the boy and take the whole.' That was in Uncle Erwin's presence, and in my mother's presence, and in Diana's presence. I then turned to Uncle Erwin and said, 'If he can do that, a smart lawyer certainly can.' And Erwin said, 'No, no, he does not mean that.' Uncle John said to my Uncle Erwin that it was ignorance on our part that made my mother refuse to sign the paper. He said that impatiently. I said in answer to that, 'I don't blame you for calling us ignorant, for we are ignorant, and we wish to know what we are doing.'" Mrs. Cummings testified about the same interview: "Mr. Erwin Davis asked Diana Davis if she was ready to sign the paper, and she did not want to sign. She wished to wait until the other sisters came, and not to sign first. Mr. John Davis said that it was necessary for some one to sign first; that if they all put it off they would never make a beginning." John A. Davis testified: "I do not remember of a power of attorney being procured by brother Erwin to be signed by some of the elderly sisters. I do not remember of any endeavor by brother Erwin to get such signatures to a power of attorney in his favor. I myself did not make any endeavor to get any of the parties to sign for Erwin." I have already observed that Erwin Davis was not called as a witness, although he was in the city of Butte during the hearing. The topics upon which John A. Davis swears that he talked are mentioned in his own words: "As to the character of the conversation during that time, I had not seen my old sisters for about thirty years, nor my nephews or nieces. It was a sort of pleasant sad meeting. * * * He [Erwin Davis] asked about my health, and I asked about his, and I joked my old sisters a little; told them they looked younger than I expected to find. They told me I looked young. That was the general character of the conversation." This was a clear admission from the lips of John A. Davis that he never communicated to his relatives a single fact regarding the estate of the deceased. The occasion demanded of him candor, but everything within his knowledge was studiously concealed. It is proved by the testimony that Erwin Davis is indebted to this estate in the sum of $536,000, which is evidenced by five promissory notes that were kept in the vaults of the First National Bank of Butte. It is also shown that the deceased in his life-time conversed thereon with A. J. Davis, Jr., Mr. Coram, Mr. Root, and Mrs. Cornue. A portion of this indebtedness has been due since the 1st day of January last past, and there are good reasons for thinking that Erwin Davis does not intend to pay the same, and that the entire amount may not be recovered for the benefit of the estate. There seems to have been some mysterious purpose in the acts and declarations of Erwin and John A. Davis to mislead the heirs. Twenty-nine telegrams, which passed between Erwin Davis and A. J. Davis, Jr., were offered in evidence, and inspected by the court and excluded upon the sole "ground that the applicant, John A. Davis, was not shown to have any knowledge" of them. These persons seem to have had intimate relations respecting this estate, which could not be settled in the ordinary course of correspondence. The testimony of John A. Davis is another remarkable instance of want of knowledge, if not integrity, by one who was paid liberally for his fidelity to the business of the deceased. "I have never heard that my brother Erwin owed him anything." A question of veracity arises between John A. Davis and Mrs. Cornue, which I will not notice for the view of the court upon this conflict cannot be disturbed. John A. Davis visited the so-called illegitimate son in the state of Iowa before his return to Butte, and prior to the filing of his petition for letters of administration, and testifies: "Erwin and I and several of us have combined in a common defense against the Iowa boy." When all the evidence is compared, I am forced to draw the following conclusions: A. J. Davis, Jr., asserts a claim to personal property which, prima facie, belongs to this estate, and is of the value of $665,000, and he and the attorneys who have been retained to litigate his rights in the first place are also employed by John A. Davis in these proceedings. Erwin Davis is indebted to the estate in the sum of $536,000, and is striving to evade the payment thereof, and, by his attorney, advocates the appointment of John A. Davis as the administrator. But these parties, whose attitude is that of open war against the heirs of this vast estate, are united in supporting John A. Davis for the administration, and in opposing the application of Henry A. Root for the trust. The objections to Mr. Root rest upon the ground of his non-residence, and do not affect in any degree his ability or integrity. The "Iowa boy" did not offer any testimony in the court below and is not represented in this hearing, and the combination of Erwin and John A. Davis against him appears to have been entered into without a just cause. The pretensions of this child, and the law applicable to him, have been misrepresented by Erwin and John A. Davis, to weaken the confidence of the heirs in their inheritance and induce them to sacrifice their rights. None of the facts affecting this estate which were within the breasts of Erwin and John A. Davis have been revealed to the relatives. A conspiracy has been formed by A. J. Davis, Jr., Erwin Davis, and John A. Davis, to defraud the heirs, and the court below erred in excluding the testimony showing all their acts and declarations in furtherance of its objects. The appointment of the respondent as the administrator will enable A. J. Davis, Jr., and Erwin Davis to gain their ends respectively by collusion in the waiver of the proof of material facts, or the confession of allegations having no other foundation than perjury. On the other hand, the selection of Mr. Root would be the most efficient mode of defeating the schemes of A. J. Davis, Jr., and Erwin Davis for the spoliation of this estate. The argument of counsel for the respondent that the administrator will give a good bond conditioned according to law, does not remove the danger which has been pointed out.

In Stearns v. Fiske, 18 Pick. 24, Mr. Justice WILDE, as the organ of the court, said: "It appears that the appellant was very much under the influence of Barker, a debtor to the estate to a large amount, and who is charged with combining with the intestate, in his life-time, to defraud his creditors. The appellant's application for administration was made at his request, and not to protect or subserve her own interest. This influence might, and probably would, be exerted to the prejudice of the creditors, had the appellant been appointed administratrix, and if they might have a remedy against her on her bond, it would increase the expense of litigation, for the recovery of which the creditors could have no legal, adequate remedy. And, besides, an administrator, if so disposed, may prejudice the interests of those for whose benefit the estate is administered, without being exposed to any action." In Drake v. Green, 10 Allen, 124, Mr. Justice HOAR, in the opinion, says: "Thus, for example, a person who applies for administration may have interests conflicting with those of the estate. The probability that these would prove an embarrassment in the proper performance of his duty might be a sufficient reason for a refusal of the judge of probate to intrust him with the administration." In Putney v. Fletcher, 148 Mass. 247, 19 N. E. Rep. 370, the court say: "An executor or administrator is deemed unsuitable when he has any conflicting personal interest which prevents him from doing his official duty." In State v. Bidlingmayer, 26 Mo. 483, the court, by Mr. Justice SCOTT, say: "So, in effect, Adolph Kehr, as administrator of one estate, is prosecuting a suit against Adolph Kehr, as administrator of another estate. How is the defendant's estate to be protected? It is not for Kehr, with the bias on his mind, to determine whether it is indebted or not. That estate should be defended by one who has not an interest that it should go undefended." In Moody v. Moody, 29 Ga. 519, there was a "contest between two brothers for administration on the estate of their father," and the court, in speaking of one of them, said: "And so of the other fact, that he was claiming for himself a large part of the estate left by his father. If this were true, his interest was hostile to the interest of the estate, and estates, like everything else in life, are generally better off in the hands of their friends than in the hands of their enemies." In Pickering v. Pendexter, 46 N. H. 69, the court discussed the fitness of Pickering to serve as an administrator, and said: "It would seem that he asserts a claim to a considerable portion of the land in the occupation of the deceased at his death, and that this claim is contested by the heirs; and it may be the duty of the administrator to contest this claim, or at least to investigate it thoroughly, and determine fairly, whether it ought, or ought not, to be contested; and that for neither of the duties would he be a suitable person. It is argued by his counsel that he must give bond for the faithful discharge of all his duties; and that is true; and yet we think it would not be a sound exercise of discretion to appoint a person whose interest is clearly opposed to that of the persons for whom he acts." In Ellmaker's Estate, 4 Watts, 34, the court say: "But again, there is reason to believe that the appellant has attempted to overreach the heirs, by trumping up a false account against the estate. The least taint of fraud is a conclusive objection. It works a legal incompetency to perform the duties of the office; an office of such trust and confidence as should under no circumstances be committed to a person wanting in good faith, and in whom confidence cannot be reposed." In Bleber's Appeal, 11 Pa. St. 157, the court say: "The able opinion of Mr. Justice ROGERS, in Ellmaker's Estate, 4 Watts, 38, is directly in point. * * * It was further held, in that case, that the right of one Swartswelder was properly rejected on the ground of expediency. The objection is insurmountable when he stands as a litigant party in opposition to the other heirs. Courts have constantly declined putting in persons as administrators so situated. This is a strong case. Here Isaac was already in possession of more than half the estate. It is said he claimed it as a gift from his mother. This position rendered him an incompetent person to perform the duties of the office of administrator, which is one of trust and confidence, and ought to be committed to a person who has no interest in opposition to the other heirs of the estate." Mr. Gary, in his work on Probate Law, writes: "A person is not suitable merely because he is ready to give a bond with sufficient sureties, because parties damaged by official misconduct may be subjected to expense of litigation for which they can have no adequate remedy, and an administrator may prejudice the interests of parties interested, without being exposed to an action on his bond. When there is good reason to suspect that the purpose is to promote some interest adverse to that of the heirs or creditors of the estate, it would seem that the person would be unsuitable." Section 267. In Thayer v. Homer, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 104, the court say: "But unsuitableness implies no want of capacity or mental infirmity, but an unfitness arising out of the situation of the person in connection with the estate of which he is administrator, either by reason of his being indebted to it, or having claims upon it, or in the interest he has under a will, or his situation as an heir at law." While the application of some of these cases may be limited by the statutes under which they were made, the legal doctrines which are announced are undoubtedly correct, and would prevent the appointment of the respondent as the administrator of this estate. I maintain this proposition, when the testimony is weighed. But the relations of the parties have been radically changed by a fact which has been brought to the attention of this court by the attorneys for John A. Davis. They have caused to be filed with the record in the case, the photographic copy of a will of the said Andrew J. Davis, deceased, which, in effect, gives to John A. Davis the entire estate, subject to "a life-time maintenance" for three persons, who are not the lawful heirs. The executors who are nominated in this instrument have departed this life, and John A. Davis filed, July 25, 1890, in the court below, a petition duly verified, which concludes with the following prayer: "Wherefore, your petitioner prays, that the order, hereinbefore mentioned, made by this court, on the 28th of April, 1890, appointing him administrator of the said estate, be vacated and set aside; that the said will, a copy whereof is hereto annexed, be admitted to probate in this court, and established by the judgment thereof; that the usual order be made, fixing the day for the hearing of this petition, and due notice thereof be given to the heirs at law, and devisees under said will of said deceased, and that letters of administration, with the said will annexed thereto, be issued to your petitioner." This new matter should be treated like the suggestion to this court of the death or disability of a party, or the transfer of his interest in an action or its settlement pending an appeal. The respondent, who has voluntarily produced this supplemental record, must abide by the consequences of his conduct. It is conceded by counsel that the appellant has filed objections to the probate of this will on the ground of its invalidity, while Erwin Davis and A. J. Davis, Jr., support the petition of John A. Davis, and admit that the document is genuine and legal. The harmonious combination of these three members of the family continues unbroken, although the instrument will "cut off" Erwin Davis without any share of the estate. The unfavorable conclusions which have been already stated are strengthened, if possible, by these strange and seemingly inconsistent acts of the parties. They remove any doubt which may have been entertained concerning the state of hostility between John A. Davis and some of the heirs of this estate, and demonstrate that his appointment is in conflict with the authorities and one "not fit to be made."

BULLARD v. NORTHERN PAC. R. CO.

CARRIERS—INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT—EFFECT ON PRIOR CONTRACTS.

A contract entered into prior to the passage of the interstate commerce law (Act Cong. Feb. 4, 1887) for the carriage of freight by a railway company at rates contrary to the provisions of that law cannot be enforced after its passage, and the shipper cannot recover any rebates stipulated for in such contract.

Appeal from district court, Custer county; GEORGE R. MILBURN, Judge.

Chas. R. Middleton, for respondent.

BLAKE, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment which was entered on the pleadings. The amended complaint was filed January 25, 1890, and alleges that the "defendant, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, is a corporation duly organized, created, and acting under the laws of the United States;" that the following contract in writing was entered into November 15, 1885: "This indenture, made and entered into this 15th day of November, A. D. 1885, by and between the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, party of the first part, and W. H. Bullard and Thomas H. Irvine, copartners, under the firm name of Bullard & Irvine, of Miles City, Montana territory, parties of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the covenants hereinafter mentioned, made, and to be performed by the said parties of the second part, hereby promises and agrees to and with the said parties of the second part to carry and transport over its line of railroad from

St. Paul, Minnesota, to Miles City, Montana territory, all the casks, cases, kegs, and barrels of beer, which the said parties of the second part may deliver in car-load lots to the said parties of the first part, at said St. Paul, between the dates hereof and the first day of November, A. D. 1887, for the sum of seventy-five cents for each and every one hundred (100) pounds of said casks, cases, kegs, and barrels of beer delivered, as aforesaid, in car-load lots. And the party of the first part further agrees to carry and transport over its said line of railroad from said Miles City, Montana territory, to said St. Paul, Minnesota, all empty beer casks, cases, and kegs, and barrels, which the said parties of the second part may deliver in car-load lots to the said party of the first part at said Miles City, between the date hereof and the first day of November, A. D. 1887, for the sum of fifty cents for each and every one hundred (100) pounds of said empty beer casks, cases, kegs, and barrels, delivered, as aforesaid, in car-load lots. And the said party of the first part further agrees that if between the date hereof and said first day of November, A. D. 1887, its regular schedule of freight rates on casks, cases, kegs, and barrels of beer, in car-load lots, from said St. Paul to said Miles City, and on empty beer casks, cases, and kegs, and barrels, in car-load lots, from said Miles City to said St. Paul, should be reduced to a sum less than the rates herein provided, the said party of the first part will thereupon permit the said parties of the second part to ship under, and have the benefit of, such lower regular schedule rates. In consideration of the premises, the said parties of the second part do hereby covenant and agree, jointly and severally, that they will well and truly pay, or cause to be paid, to the said party of the first part, all sums which may become due under this contract for transportation, as aforesaid. And said parties of the second part further covenant and agree that they will not brew or manufacture any beer or other malt liquors at or within the corporate limits of said Miles City, Montana territory, between the date hereof and said first day of November, A. D. 1887. It is further agreed by and between the parties hereto that in case any casks, cases, kegs, or barrels of beer, or any empty beer casks, cases, kegs, or barrels, belonging to, or shipped by, said parties of the second part, are injured or damaged in any manner whatsoever while in transit over or on the railroad of the said party of the first part, the said party of the first part shall not be liable therefor, unless such injury or damages shall be caused by the negligence of the servants or employees of the said party of the first part. In testimony whereof, the said party of the first part has caused these presents to be signed by its general freight agent this 15th day of November, A. D. 1885, and the said parties of the second part have hereunto set their hands and seals this 15th day of November, A. D. 1885. J. H. HANNAFORD, General Freight Agent. W. H. BULLARD. [Seal.] THOS. H. IRVINE. [Seal.]" It is further alleged "that, subsequent to the making of the contract aforesaid, it was agreed and understood by and between the said parties that the freight on all the casks, cases, kegs, and barrels of beer, which the said defendant might deliver, pursuant to the terms of the said contract, should be paid for by the said Bullard & Irvine at the regular schedule of freight rates on car-load lots charged by said defendant, and, in case such schedule freight rates should be in excess of seventy-five cents per hundred pounds, that the overcharges should be rebated, settled, and paid by said defendant to the said Bullard & Irvine, by vouchers upon any and all such freight bills being forwarded by the said Bullard & Irvine to the said defendant; * * * that thereafter, and before the 1st day of January, 1887, and while said contract was still operative and in force, the said defendant, delivered to the said Bullard & Irvine, at Miles City, Montana territory, eleven (11) car-loads of beer in barrels, the weight of which, in the aggregate, amounted to 235,710 pounds; * * * upon the said eleven car-loads of beer, the way-bills were made out by the said defendant's company, and the said Bullard & Irvine were required by said company and did pay freight thereon, amounting, in the aggregate, to the sum of $2,358.77; * * * that subsequent to the delivery of each of said car-loads of beer, and pursuant to the agreement aforesaid, the said Bullard & Irvine forwarded the way-bills therefor to the general freight office of the said defendant's company at St. Paul, Minnesota, accompanied by vouchers for the overcharges thereon, over and above the price specified in said contract, and demanded payment of the rebate thereon; * * * that the said defendant has failed, refused, and neglected to pay to said Bullard & Irvine, or to this plaintiff, the said overcharges on the said eleven car-loads of beer, or any part thereof, although often duly demanded; * * * that the said overcharges on said eleven car-loads of beer so paid by the said Bullard & Irvine, over and above the contract price therefor, and which said defendant agreed to pay to said Bullard & Irvine, amounts to the sum of $590.95." It is also alleged that the said contract, and all rights, claims, and demands under it, were transferred and sold, December 12, 1888, to Bullard. The prayer is for judgment against the defendant for the sum of $590.95. The answer was filed May 9, 1890, and is as follows. "The defendant for answer to the amended complaint of plaintiff in this cause alleges that, on 4th day of February, 1887, there was passed by the congress of the United States, and approved by the president, an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce;' that, up to, and including, the 4th day of April, 1887, this defendant had duly performed all the conditions on its part of the contract in the said amended complaint set out and alleged, and has, up to, and including, the 4th day of April, 1887, paid to the said Bullard & Irvine, and the said Bullard individually, all rebates and overcharges of every kind and nature whatsoever, due them by the terms of said contract, for all property shipped by the said Bullard & Irvine over the defendant's road, up to and including that date, and that all the claims made in plaintiff's complaint have arisen, if at all, since the 4th day of April, 1887; that defendant did, in the month of March, 1887, by its duly-authorized agent for that purpose, J. M. Hannaford, duly notify the said Bullard & Irvine, and the said Bullard, individually, that by reason of the law hereinbefore named, and in obedience to the command and requirements thereof, all special and contract rates quoted to, and entered into by, this defendant company with the said Bullard & Irvine would be canceled, and declared null and void on the 31st day of March, 1887; that the said Bullard & Irvine, and the said plaintiff Bullard, individually, received the said notice from this defendant; that on and after the 5th day of April, 1887, by reason of the said law, and in compliance with the provisions thereof, this defendant charged the said Bullard & Irvine, for property shipped by its road, whether in car-load lots, or otherwise, regular schedule rates for freight, and the same rates charged by it to any and all other persons for like contemporaneous service, and no more nor less; that by reason of the said law, and the provisions thereof, and not otherwise, this defendant has refused, and does now refuse, to pay the said plaintiff any rebate or drawback for goods shipped by defendant's road since the 5th day of April, 1887. Defendant denies that there is due the said plaintiff from this defendant, by reason of the said contract, or by reason of any consideration whatever, * * * any sum." Thereafter, on motion, the court rendered judgment in favor of Bullard for the amount prayed for in said complaint.

We assume for the purposes of this inquiry that the contract between the parties, which is set forth in the pleadings, was legal at the time of its execution. The act of congress, "to regulate commerce," which is mentioned in the answer, was approved February 4, 1887, but the provisions which we must examine took effect sixty days thereafter. Contracts similar to that before us are not excepted from the operation of this law, and became invalid under the second section, which is as follows: "That if any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like or contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited, and declared to be unlawful." What then is the liability of the appellant to the respondent under the contract? We confess that we are surprised to be unable to find any case in which this important question has been considered and determined by the courts of last resort. In Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 84 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 630, Mr. COOLEY, the learned chairman of the interstate commerce commission, delivered the opinion, and said: "But the act to regulate commerce is a general law, and contracts are always liable to be more or less affected by general laws, even when in no way referred to. This is the case with state laws, as well as with federal. There probably was never an act passed in restraint of the sale of intoxicating drinks that did not affect some contracts, and render their literal enforcement impossible. The same may be said of the federal revenue laws. Nothing is more likely than that a considerable change in customs regulations and customs duties, or in the provisions made for enforcement of excise laws, will deprive some party of a right he supposed he had secured by contract. But the incidental effect of the general law is not understood to make it a law impairing the obligation of contracts. It is a necessary effect of any considerable change in the public laws. If the legislature had no power to alter its police laws when contracts would be affected, then the most important and valuable reforms might be precluded by the simple device of entering into contracts for the purpose. No doctrine to that effect would be even plausible, much less sound and tenable." The order of the interstate commerce commission in this case was reversed by the United States circuit court for the district of Kentucky, upon grounds which, however, do not conflict with these views. 37 Fed. Rep. 567. Mr. Justice JACKSON, in discussing the power of congress over the subject, says: "No court has attempted to define the extent, limit, or scope of the power conferred by the constitution upon congress to regulate commerce among the states. The power is undoubtedly sovereign and exclusive. Prior to the passage of the interstate commerce act, this power and exclusive authority over the subject was only exercised—with the exception of regulations for the protection of passengers upon navigable waters, and the transportation of live-stock by railroads—through the judicial department of the general government in the way of restraining or annulling state legislation or action which undertook to interfere with, obstruct, or impose burdens or restrictions upon, interstate commerce." After citing the leading case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, he concludes: "Possessing such sovereign and exclusive power over the subject of commerce among the states, it is difficult to understand why congress may not legislate in respect thereto to the same extent, both as to rates and all other matters of regulation, as the states may in respect to purely local or internal commerce." Chief Justice MARSHALL in Gibbons v. Ogden, supra, says: "We are now arrived at the inquiry, what is this power? It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in congress, is complete in itself; may be exercised to its utmost extent; and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the constitution. * * * If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of congress, though limited to specific objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, is vested in congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government, having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the constitution of the United States." The doctrine of Gibbons v. Ogden, supra, has been reiterated in many cases, and we have no hesitation in asserting that the act of congress relating to the matter under consideration is in accord with the authorities and the constitution. Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091; New Orleans Gas-Light Co. v. Louisiana, etc., Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580; Walling v. People, 116 U. S. 448, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454; Morgan's, etc., Co. v. Board, etc., 118 U. S. 455, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; Railway Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4; Robbins v. District, 120 U. S. 489, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681.

It is not necessary to determine whether congress can pass a law which impairs the obligation of a contract, but it is a sound proposition that its power to legislate on this matter is at the least equal to that possessed by the legislatures of the states. The rules which have been applied to local legislation of this nature should be safe guides for us to follow in the adjustment of this contention. The supreme court of the United States has uniformly upheld statutes which have been enacted in many states to regulate the compensation of railroad companies within their jurisdiction for the carriage of goods. In the construction of the general corporation law of the state of Iowa, Chief Justice WATTS in Railroad Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, says: "Railroad companies are carriers for hire. They are incorporated as such, and given extraordinary powers, in order that they may the better serve the public in that capacity. They are therefore engaged in a public employment affecting the public interest; and, under the decision in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, subject to legislative control as to their rates of fare and freight, unless protected by their charters. * * * But when the legislature steps in, and prescribes a maximum of charge, it operates upon this corporation the same as it does upon individuals engaged in a similar business. * * * Neither does it affect the case that before the power was exercised the company had pledged its income as security for the payment of debts incurred, and had leased its road to a tenant that relied upon the earnings for the means of paying the agreed rent." The condition of the parties in Railroad Co. v. Ackley, 94 U. S. 179, when compared with that of the litigants in the case at bar, is reversed. The railroad company brought an action to recover a reasonable compensation for its services in the transportation of goods, which exceeded the maximum prescribed by the legislature of the state of Wisconsin, and Chief Justice WAITE said, in the opinion: "As between the company and a freighter, there is a statutory limitation of the charge for transportation actually performed; * * * but for goods actually carried, the limit of the recovery is that prescribed by the statute." It should be remembered in the treatment of these questions that the appellant has been incorporated by an act of congress. In referring to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, Chief Justice WAITE says, in Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700: "This corporation is a creature of the United States. It is a private corporation created for public purposes, and its property is to a large extent devoted to public uses. It is therefore subject to legislative control so far as its business affects the public interests." In Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 348, 349, 388, 391, 1191, Chief Justice WAITE, reaffirms this principle, and observes: "It is now settled in this court that a state has power to limit the amount of charges by railroad companies for the transportation of persons and property within its own jurisdiction, unless restrained by some contract in the charter, or unless what is done amounts to a regulation of foreign or interstate commerce." See, also, Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113; Peik v. Railroad Co., Id. 164; Railroad Co. v. Blake, Id. 180; Stone v. Wisconsin, Id. 181; Ruggles v. State, 108 U. S. 526, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 832; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028. Inasmuch as dissenting opinions may be found in some of the cases which have been cited, it may not be deemed improper to quote from a recent decision of that eminent tribunal, which reconciles the differences referred to, and maintains the same doctrine. In Banking Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47, Mr. Justice FIELD delivered the opinion, and said: "The incorporation of the company, by which numerous parties are permitted to act as a single body for the purpose of its creation, or, as Chief Justice MARSHALL expresses it, by which 'the character and properties of individuality' are bestowed 'on a collective and changing body of men,' (Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 562;) the grant to it of special privileges to carry out the object of its incorporation, particularly the authority to exercise the state's right of eminent domain that it may appropriate needed property,—a right which can be exercised only for public purposes; and the obligation assumed by the acceptance of its charter, to transport all persons and merchandise, upon like conditions and upon reasonable rates,—affect the property and employment with a public use; and where property is thus affected, the business in which it is used is subject to legislative control. So long as the use continues, the power of regulation remains; and the regulation may extend not merely to provisions for the security of passengers and freight against accidents, and for the convenience of the public, but also to prevent extortion by unreasonable charges, and favoritism by unjust discriminations. This is not a new doctrine, but old doctrine, always asserted whenever property or business is, by reason of special privileges received from the government, the better to secure the purposes to which the property is dedicated or devoted, affected with a public use. There have been differences of opinion among the judges of this court in some cases as to the circumstances or conditions under which some kinds of property or business may be properly held to be thus affected, as in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 126, 139, 146; but none as to the doctrine that, when such use exists, the business becomes subject to legislative control in all respects necessary to protect the public against damage, injustice, and oppression. In almost every case which has been before this court, where the power of the state to regulate the rates of charges of railroad companies for the transportation of persons and freight within its jurisdiction has been under consideration, the question discussed has not been the original power of the state over the subject, but whether that power had not been, by stipulations of the charter, or other legislation, amounting to a contract, surrendered to the company, or been in some manner qualified. It is only upon the latter point that there have been differences of opinion."

The liberal quotations from these opinions show clearly the grounds upon which legislation similar to the provisions of the act of congress under examination are based, and also the limitations which have been sometimes placed upon the law-making power in this regard. Counsel in their briefs have not pointed out, and we have been unable to find, any case in which a contract like that in the complaint has been protected from the operation of a statute which fixed penalties for an unfair discrimination by railroad companies in their tariffs for carrying freight. We think that the significance of this fact can be easily understood, when we inquire into the authority for this species of legislation by the states. The act of congress derives its force from the grant of power by the constitution "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states." Const. art. 1, § 8. The local statutes, which have been reviewed by the foregoing authorities, are founded upon the police power of the states. No court has attempted to define this power with precision, although the general principles applicable thereto have been established firmly in jurisprudence. Says the great Chief Justice SHAW, in Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53: "We think it is a settled principle, growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it may be so regulated that it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. * * * Rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment as shall prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law as the legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the constitution, may think necessary and expedient. * * * The power we allude to is rather the police power, the power vested in the legislature by the constitution to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and of the subjects of the same." In Thorpe v. Railroad Co., 27 Vt. 140, Chief Justice REDFIELD said, in the opinion: "We think the power of the legislature to control existing railways in this respect may be found in the general control over the police of the country, which resides in the law-making power in all free states. * * * The police power of the state extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the state. According to the maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, which being of universal application, it must of course be within the range of legislative action to define the mode and manner in which every one may so use his own as not to injure others. So far as railroads are concerned, this police power, which resides primarily and ultimately in the legislature, is twofold." See, also, Pierce, R. R. 460; 2 Redf. R. R. (4th Ed.) p. 232; State v. Railroad Co., 19 Minn. 434, (Gil. 377,) affirmed 94 U. S. 180, supra; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315; Com. v. Liquors, 115 Mass. 153, affirmed 97 U. S. 25; Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, Id. 659; New Orleans Gas-Light Co. v. Louisiana, etc., Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Rodemacher v. Railroad Co., 41 Iowa, 297. In discussing this legislation, Pierce on Railroads, supra, says: "Such laws may incidentally impair the value of franchises, or of rights held under contracts, but they are enacted diverso intuitu, and are not within the constitutional inhibition." In Com. v. Liquors, supra, Mr. Justice ENNICOTT, as the organ of the court, said: "Every such law limits, restrains, impairs, and, in some cases, destroys the uses, which were previously enjoyed of, the property so made the subject of legislation, but the extent to which it may do so does not affect the validity of such laws, or their equal application to all owners of such property. They are presumed to be passed for the common good, and to be necessary for the protection of the public, and cannot be said to impair any right, or the obligation of any contract, or to do any injury, in the proper and legal sense of these terms." In New Orleans Gas-Light Co. v. Louisiana, etc., Co., supra, the court says: "The constitutional prohibition upon state laws, impairing the obligation of contracts, does not restrict the power of the state to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, as the one or the other may be involved in the execution of such contracts." Another view of the controversy conducts us to the same conclusion. If the contract mentioned in the complaint had been fulfilled, it is plain that, after the act of congress became effective, and, during the period specified in the pleadings, there would have been a discrimination in favor of the respondent by the appellant in the sum of $590.95, on account of the transportation of his goods. In other words, the patrons of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, who had no special agreement, would pay this amount for the same service in excess of what would be demanded of the respondent. It has been adjudged in many cases that, when these circumstances arise, the contract, which was entered into by the parties in this action, is contrary to public policy, and cannot be enforced. Messenger v. Railroad Co., 36 N. J. Law, 407, affirmed 37 N. J. Law, 531; Scofield v. Railway Co., 43 Ohio St. 571, 3 N. E. Rep. 907; Christie v. Railway Co., 84 Mo. 453, 7 S. W. Rep. 567; Railroad Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11; Railroad Co. v. Ervin, 118 Ill. 250, 8 N. E. Rep. 862.

There is an old rule of law which can be invoked and applied to the case at bar. In Atkinson v. Ritchie, 10 East, 530, Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., said, in the opinion: "That no contract can properly be carried into effect which was originally made contrary to the provisions of law, or which, being made consistently with the rules of law at the time, has become illegal in virtue of some subsequent law, are propositions which admit of no doubt." Professor Pomeroy writes: "An illegal contract is, as a rule, void, not merely voidable, and can be the basis of no judicial proceeding. No action can be maintained upon it, either at law or in equity. This impossibility of enforcement exists whether the agreement is illegal in its inception, or whether, being valid when made, the illegality has been created by a subsequent statute." Cont. § 280; Brown v. London, 9 C. B. (N. S.) 726, affirmed 13 C. B. (N. S.) 828; 2 Pars. Cont. (5th Ed.) 674; Mouncey v. Drake, 10 Johns. 27; Jones v. Judd, 4 N. Y. 411. The principles which have been stated are applicable to the act of congress "to regulate commerce," and the contract which has been described. The respondent is not entitled to recover a judgment for any amount. The contract cannot serve as the foundation of any action by the parties thereto. It is therefore ordered that the judgment be reversed, with costs, and that the cause be remanded, with directions to dismiss the action.

HARMON v. SAN FRANCISCO & S. R. CO.
(No. 12,017.)

APPEAL—CONSOLIDATION OF ACTIONS—MECHANICS' LIENS—STATEMENTS OF CLAIM—EVIDENCE.

1. Where two cases are consolidated in the trial court, and the plaintiffs, being both defeated, move separately, upon different grounds, for new trials, take separate appeals, and file separate bills of exceptions, the reviewing court must decide each case on its own record, and cannot consider the evidence in the record of the other.

2. The mere fact that the lienor claims for more lumber than was actually used, or places too high a value on it, does not, in the absence of fraud, defeat his right to recover the value of what was used.

3. Under Code Civil Proc. § 1187, requiring a lienor's claim to state "the name of the person * * * to whom he furnished the materials," one who furnishes materials to a railroad contractor, and afterwards to his assignee, need not state what portion he furnished to each, since there is but one contract, and the company has to settle only with the assignee.

PATERSON, J. This cause was heard in bank, and the judgment and order were reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in May last. We are satisfied with the conclusion then reached herein. The evidence shows that "the work on the contract was completed on June 2, 1884." We are asked to consider the evidence in the record on appeal in the case of Gordon Hardware Co. v. San Francisco & S. R. Co., infra, (No. 12,030.) because that case and the one at bar were consolidated by order of the court below upon consent of counsel for the respective parties; but this we cannot do. The plaintiff in each case was defeated in the court below, and each one moved separately for a new trial, the grounds of which were peculiar to the respective cases; separate bills of exceptions were prepared and filed, separate appeals were taken, and each case was presented in this court on its own record. Respondent claims that the claim filed by plaintiff, and upon which this action is based, must have included material for which no lien could be maintained, because the plaintiff testified that of the lumber he furnished "there was used $1,159.13 worth in the building of temporary houses," and $577 paid on the lumber for freight and cartage. It does not clearly appear whether there was extra material included in the claim of lien, or an erroneous statement as to the value; and, as the claim filed contained no articles except such as are the subject of lien, we cannot see that a lien for so much lumber, etc., as was actually used in the construction of the road should be defeated by reason of this testimony. The bare fact that the plaintiff had filed for too much lumber, or set too high a price on it, would not, in the absence of fraud, defeat his right to recover. Whatever may be the rule in ordinary cases, where the material-man furnishes materials to several independent contractors, we do not think it was necessary for the plaintiff to segregate the amounts in the claim which he filed. Hawley was the only person with whom the company had to settle. The latter was liable only for the balance of the contract price held by it. It was in no way interested in the question how much had been furnished McDonald before the assignment. Hawley had simply stepped into McDonald's shoes, with the knowledge and consent of the company, and had assumed all liabilities. There was but one contract on the part of the defendant. On final settlement McDonald was entitled to nothing, and we are unable to see how the company could be prejudiced by the failure to designate the amount furnished to each. No question of priority is involved herein. Where a statute required a claimant to state from whom the debt was due, it was held that a mistake in the name of the contractor would not defeat the lien, if it appeared that the owner was not harmed by the error. Putnam v. Ross, 46 Mo. 337. In the case at bar, the proof segregates the amount furnished to Hawley from that which was furnished to McDonald, so that no injury could possibly result. We think that the court erred in rejecting the notice of lien. Other points made by the respondent need not be specially noticed. If the facts shown by the evidence of the plaintiff are true, he is entitled to have his lien declared good to an amount not exceeding the amount of the contract price in the hands of the company at the time the notice of lien was filed. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

MECHANICS' LIENS—TIME OF FILING—LIENABLE ARTICLES—DIFFERENT CONTRACTORS.

1. In determining whether a mechanic's lien against railroad property was filed within 30 days from the completion of the work, it is proper to count as part of the work two weeks spent by direction of the chief engineer in removing materials wrongfully placed upon the lands of another by the contractor, when the latter's obligations to the company did not terminate until such removal was completed.

2. Where the lien filed by a material-man against a railroad is in part for picks, shovels, and similar articles, for which no lien can be asserted, he may segregate the non-liable articles by proof, and is entitled to have a lien declared for the remainder.

Hepburn Wilkins and H. A. Powell, for appellant. Lloyd & Wood, E. S. Lippitt, and Chas. F. Hanlon, (O. P. Evans, of counsel,) for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Upon further consideration of this case we are satisfied that the conclusion we reached on the former hearing—viz., that the claim of lien was not filed within 30 days after the completion of the work—was based upon a misapprehension as to the evidence. The claim was filed June 18, 1884. While it is true the work done after May 17th was work not contemplated by the contract, it nevertheless appears that it was done under the direction of the chief engineer, and that the obligations of the contractor to the company were not extinguished until the débris which he had placed upon Mr. Porter's lot was removed therefrom. The testimony of Mr. Walsh on this subject consists largely of conclusions, but it went in without objection on that ground, and, as against a motion for nonsuit, must be considered as sufficient to establish appellant's contention that the work was not completed until June 2d. He testified as follows: "The work on the railroad under the contract was completed June 2, 1884. The last two weeks of the work was occupied in moving rock which had been dumped at the end of the tunnel in section No. 1, on Mr. Porter's ground, contrary to the terms of the contract. The rock was moved back to the right of way to make it comply with the contract. I was instructed by Mr. Zook, chief engineer, to do this work, May 17, 1884. The last day we were at work was June 2, 1884." We have carefully examined the record in the case of Malone v. Mining Co., 76 Cal. 578, 18 Pac. Rep. 772, and think it sustains appellant's contention that, although the claim of lien was in part for articles (picks and shovels) not the subject of lien, the court should permit the plaintiff, by proof, to make the necessary segregation, throw out the value of such articles, and declare a lien for the balance. In the case referred to, the claim of lien included an item of deer and bear meat, but the lien was held to be good to the amount of the lienable articles; and the rule seems to be that, unless there is something to show a willful attempt to claim a lien for the non-lienable articles, the lien is not lost. Whitford v. Newell, 2 Allen, 427; Phil. Mech. Liens, § 355. Upon the same principle it was held in Barber v. Reynolds that, notwithstanding the fact that the claim filed was for too much, it would still be valid unless it should appear it was a "willfully false claim," within the meaning and intent of the statute. 44 Cal. 533. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to designate what portion of the materials was furnished to each of the contractors, as Hawley was the only person with whom the company had to settle, and the latter was liable only for the balance of the contract price held by it at the time the notice of lien was filed. Harmon v. Railroad Co., ante, 124, (this day filed.) Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

TRENOUTH v. GILBERT et al. (No. 12,507.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

The repudiation of the claim of the purchaser of an undivided one-fifth interest in a Mexican grant by the persons in possession of the land under a patent from the United States, claiming the whole title, and their continuous, exclusive, and adverse possession of the land for more than five years thereafter, is a bar to the title of the purchaser of such one-fifth interest.

Commissioners' decision. In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

This action by Trenouth against Gilbert and others was in the supreme court once before, and the following statement of facts is taken from the opinion in that case, (63 Cal. 405:) "By the deeds of Maria Louisa and Juan B. Buelna, plaintiff acquired whatever right or interest they had in the rancho San Gregorio, at the date of said deeds. They never had more than an undivided fifth interest in said rancho, and previously to their conveyance to the plaintiff they had conveyed all their interest in 4,000 acres of said rancho to one Hamilton, so that the interest conveyed to the plaintiff is not more than an undivided one-fifth of the residue of said rancho. In 1839, said rancho was granted by the Mexican government to Antonio Buelna, who, in 1842, made a will by which he devised the entire rancho to his wife, Maria Concepcion Valencia, Juan Bautista Buelna, and three others, share and share alike,—that is, to each an undivided one-fifth. In 1842, said Antonio died, leaving said will and all of said devisees surviving him. In 1846, said Juan Bautista died intestate, leaving him surviving, as his only heirs at law, the said Maria Louisa and Juan B. Buelna. After the death of her husband, said Maria Concepcion made a conveyance of one league of said rancho to one Castro; and, in 1852, said Castro and said Maria Concepcion presented a petition to the board of land commissioners to have the claim of said Castro to one league, and the claim of said Maria Concepcion to the other three leagues, confirmed, and their said respective claims were accordingly confirmed and patented to them in 1861. That they held the legal title to an undivided interest in said rancho in trust for the said Maria Louisa and Juan B. Buelna is too clear to admit of any doubt. The court found that 'the defendants, and those from and under whom they hold and claim the possession, have been in the open, notorious, and exclusive possession of the premises described in the complaint, holding separately, as stated in their several answers, claiming to own the same, and to have the whole title thereto for more than five years next before the commencement of this action. The defendants, and those from and under whom they respectively hold and claim, more than five years before the commencement of this action,—to-wit, in the year 1857,—being in possession respectively as aforesaid, acquired by purchase all the right, title, and interest of the patentees, and all of the legatees, under the said will of Antonio Buelna, except said Juan B. Buelna, to their respective portions of said land, and still hold and own the same. The plaintiff's cause of action arose and accrued to him more than four years before the commencement of this action; and the defendants and each of them had held all the land described in said complaint, claiming to own the title to the same, and in open and notorious hostility to the plaintiff's claim, and to any trust or equitable interest claimed by him for more than five years before the commencement of this action.' The evidence sustains the finding that the defendants and those under whom they claim were in possession of the premises in 1857, and that while so in possession 'they acquired by purchase all the right, title, and interest of the patentees, and of all the legatees, under the will of Antonio Buelna, except said Juan B. Buelna, to their respective portions of said land, and still hold and own the same." On the first appeal, a judgment in defendants' favor was reversed. On a retrial of the case, defendants again had judgment, and plaintiff appeals.

York & Whitworth and E. J. & J. H. Moore, for appellant. John Reynolds, M. G. Cobb, Cope & Boyd, Arthur Rodgers, and Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. This case has been here before. 63 Cal. 405. It is an action to establish a trust by one claiming to be co-tenant with others of a tract of land in San Mateo county, and for other relief in connection therewith. The question determined on the former appeal seems to have been that the findings of fact to the effect that the defendants held an adverse possession of the lands in dispute for a time sufficient to bar the plaintiff's right of action were not sustained by the evidence. That finding was, in substance, that the plaintiff's cause of action accrued more than four years before the commencement of the action, and that there had been a continuous adverse possession by the defendants for more than five years prior thereto. It was then said that the only evidence to sustain the finding was that of one witness,—Mr. Teague. Upon the trial of the case now on appeal, which seems to have been tried with a view to obviate the objection sustained on the former appeal, there was other evidence which tended at least to show that all of the contesting defendants held adverse possession for more than five years after plaintiff's right of action accrued before suit brought. First there was a deposition of Mr. Teague read, taken since the former trial. He testified "that the defendants answering in the suit were all in the occupancy, cultivation, inclosure, and pasturage of the entire four leagues; some claiming to own 1,000 acres, and others a less quantity, and claiming to own separately. They claimed all the legal title to the land in their possession, dating back as far as 1858, through themselves and their grantors." They claimed the whole legal title." As to the equitable title, he says that he knew of their having notice of the equitable title (bought by the plaintiff on 20th day of April, 1866,) as early as 1867, and previous, running back to 1864; conversed with them individually and separately about this equitable title, purporting to arise under the will of one Buelna. They all refused to recognize it, except Mr. Bell, who is not a party to this action, he having bought the plaintiffs title to his (Bell's) tract of land. He also said that in 1867, or 1866, Trenouth requested him to speak to these defendants in possession, and propose to them a compromise. He did so, and reported progress, but the defendants all repudiated Trenouth's claim. He states that he is confident that it was in 1866 that he first told Trenouth that the chances for a compromise with the defendants seemed bad; that the defendants said they had all the legal title; that they had improved the land; that they had bought up one bogus claim purporting to have arisen under this will, (that of Buelna, the Mexican grantee of the land,) and did not propose to buy off any more. Moses Davis, who testified that he was interested with the plaintiff in his purchase of this equitable interest from Juan B. Buelna and Maria Louisa Buelna, made on the 20th of April, 1866, states that he had been employed by all the settlers on this rancho to work up the evidence in another case pending against them,—that of Wilson et al. vs. Castro,—and that in order to do that they had to show that the Mexican grantee (Buelna) had made a will, and that in working up the evidence he discovered this fifth interest that Trenouth bought, and on which this suit is predicated, had never been conveyed. He endeavored to get "our people" to purchase, but they would not, and he then arranged for the plaintiff to purchase it. Mr. Raynor testified that he, and other parties holding under the same title that he claimed, by genuine patent title from the United States government, through Wilkins & Hepburn, had possession of the whole ranch from 1858 to 1872; that he had a conversation with the plaintiff just after he bought his claim, (April 20, 1866,) and told the plaintiff he was sorry that plaintiff had got himself into such a speculation; that the title he (plaintiff) was trying to get was of no value whatever, and Moses Davis had just led him into it for the purpose of making money out of him. He always told Trenouth there was nothing in it for him; he could get nothing out of it; that Trenouth wanted him to talk to the other settlers and see what compromise could be made. Mr. Gordon testified that he and most of the defendants had been in possession since 1863. While he was acting for the settlers to resist Trenouth's claim, as well as that in Wilson et al. vs. Castro, some time in the summer of 1866, not more than three or four months after Trenouth's purchase, he had a conversation with Trenouth, in which the latter was trying to induce him to help have a settlement made with the other settlers, and held out certain inducements to him. He replied that "he did not consider there was anything in it." That the settlers and himself did not consider his (Trenouth's) title worth anything. That he told Teague and Trenouth that he had already advised the settlers to resist Trenouth's claim. That he had been employed in this matter by all the settlers but Bell and Seale. That this was in 1866, not more than three or four months after Trenouth's deed went on record. Mr. Seale testified that he purchased his ranch from Lloyd Tevis on the 4th of August, 1863. He had used the land for his own purposes. It had been under fence all the time he had used it. Had a dairy for several years, and for the last 13 or 14 years had rented it. It had been under fence all this time. He claimed under the title obtained from Lloyd Tevis, which was the title of the original heirs of the Buelna title under the patent. He had talked with Tevis about Trenouth's title, and to Bell and Gordon, when he bought, but to none others. He had resisted Trenouth's claim when suit was brought by him against Dall and others in 1868. That all this time he claimed under his deed from Tevis, and received all his rents and profits, without accounting to any one.

Taking the whole testimony in this case, it presents this aspect: Trenouth bought the equity he claims on a speculation, after the settlers had refused to have anything to do with it, in April, 1866. He was not certain, according to his own evidence on his cross-examination, whether he had title or not. He waited to see the result of the Wilson vs. Castro suit. The settlers, defendants here, who had bought the patent title, which was the legal title, when informed of Trenouth's purchase, would not acknowledge, but repudiated, his title, according to the evidence of witnesses called for them, and whose evidence we have quoted. Then, after his efforts to induce them to compromise with him and pay him for his alleged title had failed, and he had hesitated a long time, to await the result of other litigation, uncertain as to his title, he brings suit on March 13, 1872, a little less than six years from the date of his purchase, and about five years and a half from the time when these defendants, in possession by themselves or their agents, when approached by him to settle with him, repudiated his claim and refused to settle, having always claimed, since their purchase, to hold under that patent the whole legal title. As it seems to us, the findings as to adverse possession for the statutory period sufficient to bar the plaintiff's right of entry are, at the most, based upon conflicting evidence, and should not be disturbed. We therefore advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

McDOWELL v. BELL, Judges. (No. 13,855.)

PROCEEDINGS SUPPLEMENTARY TO EXECUTION—JURISDICTION—PROHIBITION.

A judgment was recovered and proceedings supplementary to execution were instituted against debtor's wife, alleging that she held lands which belonged to him. On the same day she conveyed to another. The court adjudged that the land belonged to her husband, ordered execution to issue in the original case, and appointed a receiver to take possession and subject the land to the satisfaction of the debt. Held, that these proceedings were beyond the court's jurisdiction, and will be restrained by prohibition, since Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 720, simply provides that in supplementary proceedings the court may make an order authorizing the judgment creditor to institute an action against any person who holds property of the debtor and claims an adverse interest therein.

In bank.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 720, provides that "if it appears that a person or corporation alleged to have property of the judgment debtor, or to be indebted to him, claims an interest in the property adverse to him, or denies the debt, the court or judge may authorize, by an order made to that effect, the judgment creditor to institute an action against such person or corporation for the recovery of such interest or debt, and the court or judge may, by order, forbid a transfer or other disposition of such interest or debt, until an action can be commenced and prosecuted to judgment. Such order may be modified or vacated by the judge granting the same, or the court in which the action is brought, at any time, upon such terms as may be just."

H. S. Brown, for petitioner. T. B. Dozier, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Application for writ of prohibition. In September, 1889, one Primm commenced an action in the superior court of Shasta county against one Edson. In the action such proceedings were had as that judgment was duly given and made in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant, October 4, 1889. Execution was issued to the sheriff of Shasta county, and returned unsatisfied. Upon proceedings supplemental to execution, Bertha Edson was examined touching certain property held by her, to-wit, a house and lot in the town of Sisson, Siskiyou county, claimed by the judgment creditor to be the property of the judgment debtor. On the same day that the affidavit was filed for the institution of these proceedings supplementary to execution, Bertha Edson conveyed the property to one Wright, who subsequently conveyed the same to this petitioner. Upon the hearing upon such supplementary proceedings, it was found and adjudged by the respondent that the lot in question was the property of the judgment debtor, and that neither Bertha Edson nor Wright ever had any interest therein, and ordered that execution issue in the case of Primm vs. Edson, (in which case all the proceedings were conducted,) and the property be subjected to the satisfaction of said judgment; and further ordered that a receiver be appointed to take possession of the property, and subject the same to the satisfaction of said judgment. In this the respondent exceeded his jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction of his court. His only power in the premises was to make an order authorizing the judgment creditor to institute an action in the proper court, against the parties claiming the property, for the recovery of the property, and the subjection of the same to the satisfaction of the debt, and forbidding a transfer of the property until such action could be commenced and prosecuted to judgment. Code Civil Proc. § 720; Hartman v. Olvera, 51 Cal. 501. Let the writ issue and be made perpetual commanding the said respondent, Aaron Bell, judge of the superior court of the county of Shasta, in the state of California, to forever desist and refrain from proceeding further under, or in enforcing, the judgment and order made and given by him in the case of E. P. Primm, plaintiff, against H. J. Edson, defendant, dated January 11, 1890; and let the petitioner herein have judgment for his costs of this proceeding.

GOING v. DINWIDDIE. (No. 13,694.)

FALSE IMPRISONMENT—PLEADING.

A complaint which alleges that defendant, a justice of the peace, imprisoned plaintiff, "unlawfully and with force and without probable cause," on a pretended charge of contempt of court for the disobedience of a writ of restitution "wrongfully and unlawfully" issued by him, is insufficient, because it does not state facts showing that the acts complained of were without, or in excess of, defendant's jurisdiction as justice; and the use of the words "unlawfully" and "wrongfully" does not supply the omitted facts.

James L. Copeland and Hunsaker, Britt & Goodrich, for appellant. W. H. Fuller and H. L. Titus, for appellee.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action for alleged false imprisonment. Defendant demurred to the complaint. His demurrer was overruled, and, upon his refusal to answer, judgment was rendered against him. He appeals from the judgment, and relies for reversal upon the insufficiency of the complaint. In the complaint it is first averred that, on a certain day, defendant "imprisoned plaintiff, and caused her to be imprisoned and deprived of her liberty for a period of five days, unlawfully and with force and without probable cause, on a pretended charge of contempt of court." The "circumstances attending and immediately surrounding and preceding the said false imprisonment" are then averred, and are substantially these: That a short time prior to said alleged imprisonment, the defendant, "acting as a justice of the peace for Bear Valley township, in said county," did "wrongfully and unlawfully" issue a writ of restitution requiring plaintiff to quit and surrender a certain house and premises; that the writ was given to a certain constable, who, with a posse, attempted to serve the same; that an "altercation and affray ensued," in which, among other immaterial things mentioned, "the plaintiff was then and there roughly used and handled by said constable and his posse;" "that said writ was never served on plaintiff;" that defendant "wrongfully caused her to be arrested as for a contempt for the disobedience of said writ of restitution, and imprisoned the plaintiff for a period of five days, as above set forth;" and that, "by reason of the said false and wrongful imprisonment," the plaintiff was damaged, etc. The above are all the material averments. We think that the complaint is fatally defective, and that the demurrer should have been sustained. It is clear that the acts complained of were done by the defendant in his official capacity as a judicial officer, and there is no averment, in terms, that said acts were without, or in excess of, his jurisdiction, nor are any facts averred from which such want of jurisdiction appears. And that a judicial officer is not liable for acts done in his official capacity, and within his jurisdiction, is as thoroughly established as any other principle of law. One of the best expositions of that principle is found in the opinion of SHAW, C. J., in Pratt v. Gardner, 2 Cush. 68. This court has also had frequent occasions to state the principle. Downer v. Lent, 6 Cal. 94; Turpen v. Booth, 56 Cal. 68. The question here is not one of evidence or burden of proof; it is a question of pleading. A complaint, to be sufficient, must contain a statement of facts which, without the aid of other conjectured facts not stated, shows a complete cause of action. As said by this court in Gates v. Lane, 44 Cal. 397: "The pleadings but poorly subserve the purpose intended, if the court, before declaring the law upon the points presented by the parties, is compelled, as in this case, to surmise many of the essential facts on which the points turn." In the case at bar, we are left to assume, to imagine, to "surmise," that the defendant, as justice of the peace, for some unrevealed and unknown reason, had no jurisdiction to do the acts complained of. A plaintiff, attempting to state a cause of action in his complaint, has no right to presume that a justice of the peace acted outside of his jurisdiction. Where the burden of proof is when a party relies on the validity of a justice's judgment is an entirely different question. The only plausible answer to the above stated objection to the complaint rests upon the averment that defendant "wrongfully" caused plaintiff to be arrested, and "unlawfully" did certain other things. There may be some relations where "wrongfully" and "unlawfully" and similar adverbs have some significance, but the ordinary rule is that for purposes of pleading they are utterly valueless. In Miles v. McDermott, 31 Cal. 274, the court say: "Such words as 'duly,' 'wrongfully,' and 'unlawfully,' so frequently used in pleadings, might better be omitted. They tender no issue." In Triscony v. Orr, 49 Cal. 617, which was an action in the nature of trover for the conversion of certain sheep, the complaint merely alleged that the defendants took the property "unlawfully, fraudulently, willfully, and maliciously." A demurrer to the complaint had been sustained in the trial court, and, on appeal to this court, the judgment was affirmed. This court, among other things, say: "Whether the defendants took the sheep is a question of law, and not the statement of an issuable fact. If they took them 'fraudulently,' the facts constituting the fraud should have been averred; otherwise, no issuable fact is stated." In Reardon v. City and County of San Francisco, 66 Cal. 496, 6 Pac. Rep. 317, the court say: "If the defendant was empowered by law to do the work counted on in Army street, the averment in the complaint that such work was unlawful and wrongful would amount to nothing. Such epithets in a pleading are, in general, meaningless. They may be and are generally inserted with no valuable purpose, but only to round off or swell out a sentence. Unless the matters averred show the acts complained of to be unlawful or wrongful, such words are mere superfluous verbiage." And in Pratt v. Gardner, supra, which was an action against a justice of the peace, and very similar to the case at bar, the complaint was, as Judge SHAW says, "thickly sprinkled" with such epithets as "unlawful," "wrongful," "illegally," "groundless," "false," "willfully," "maliciously," etc.; but judgment for the defendant on the demurrer was sustained, and the court said that such epithets "cannot change or qualify the material facts." Our conclusion is that the complaint is insufficient, because it does not show that the acts of defendant complained of were without, or in excess of, his jurisdiction as justice of the peace; and that the use of the words "wrongfully" and "unlawfully" does not supply the omitted facts; and that therefore the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. The judgment is reversed, with directions to the superior court to sustain defendant's demurrer to the complaint.

EMBEZZLEMENT—VENUE.

The superintendent of a ranch in Yolo county kept books there of his receipts and expenditures, making monthly reports to his principal in San Francisco. He shipped horses to Sacramento, and there received the proceeds of their sale, but made no book-entry or report thereof. Held, sufficient evidence that the embezzlement was committed in Sacramento county to justify the magistrate in holding him for trial there.

In bank. Habeas corpus.

A. L. Hart, for petitioner.

BEATTY, C. J. The petitioner was held to answer by a justice of the peace of Sacramento on a charge of embezzlement alleged to have been committed in that county. He asks to be discharged from custody upon the ground that he was committed without reasonable or probable cause, (Pen. Code, § 1487,) claiming that there was no evidence that he was guilty of the crime charged, or of any crime, and especially that there was a total failure of evidence that he had committed any offense in Sacramento county. We think, however, that the evidence is sufficient to make out a prima facie case, and to justify the holding of the petitioner to answer before the superior court of Sacramento. It appears that he was superintendent of a ranch in Yolo county; that the owner of the ranch resided in San Francisco; that monthly reports of receipts and disbursements on the ranch were made by the petitioner to the owner, and books were kept on the ranch by a book-keeper, under the direction of the petitioner, in which it was his duty to preserve an accurate account of all receipts and disbursements. This being the case, petitioner, about a year before his arrest, sent some horses from the ranch (the property of his principal) to a dealer in Sacramento, who sold them, and paid over the net proceeds ($385) to the petitioner in Sacramento. No account was ever rendered of this sum, and no entry of it was made in the books. This, in the absence of any satisfactory explanation of his failure to account, was sufficient to justify the committing magistrate in holding petitioner to answer in Sacramento county. He received the money in Sacramento county, and there is no evidence that he ever took it out of Sacramento county. If he did appropriate it to his own use, as the evidence seems to indicate, it is reasonable to assume that he did so in the county where he is last shown to have had it in his possession. Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS—REAL-ESTATE BROKER—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

1. Under the statute of frauds, (Civil Code Cal. § 1624,) which includes "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or commission," a writing, which states that plaintiff "can arrange for the sale of my ranch in Nevada as per within memorandum," is sufficient without stating that he is to have a commission therefor.

2. Since section 1614 declares that "a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration," the agent is entitled to show, by parol evidence, the reasonable value of his services in effecting a sale under the authority of the memorandum.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

C. V. Gray and J. E. McElrath, (George W. Chamberlain, of counsel,) for appellant. H. I. Thornton and Lloyd & Lloyd, for respondent.

GIBSON, C. Plaintiff brought this action to recover of the defendant $18,750, as the reasonable value of his services rendered in procuring a purchaser for defendant's ranch in the state of Nevada, with the livestock and farming implements thereon, at the fixed price of $750,000, payable in three several installments under a writing signed by the defendant, the material part of which is as follows: "Henry Toomey can arrange for the sale of my ranch in Nevada as per within memorandum."

* * * On the trial the plaintiff, to sustain the issues upon his part, after proving that he was a real-estate broker and agent, and the execution and delivery of the memorandum, above referred to, offered it in evidence, and upon the objection of the defendant that it was incompetent, etc., because it neither specified that the employment of plaintiff was for compensation or a commission, nor the amount of any compensation or commission for his services, it was excluded. The plaintiff next offered to prove that he found a purchaser, able, ready, and willing to purchase, who was acceptable to the defendant, and that his (plaintiff's) services were reasonably worth the amount demanded. The evidence so offered was excluded on defendant's objection, on the ground that there was no evidence tending to show that the plaintiff had been employed by a contract, in writing, as broker or agent to sell the property for compensation or a commission. Then, after other evidence of the same character as the last was offered and excluded, the plaintiff rested his case. The defendant, without offering any evidence, did likewise; and thereupon the judgment, from which plaintiff appeals, was rendered against him. The exclusion of the memorandum presents the gist of the controversy. The appellant contends that all that a writing employing a broker or agent to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission need show is the fact of employment; and that it is not required to express that such employment is for compensation or a commission; while, on the other hand, the respondent contends that, to be valid, it must disclose that the employment is for compensation or a commission.

By section 1624 of the Civil Code, it is provided: "The following contracts are invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent. . . . (6) An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission." This section was applied in the following cases: McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 299; Myres v. Surryhne, 67 Cal. 657, 8 Pac. Rep. 523; Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 Pac. Rep. 642. In each of those cases it was held that no recovery by a broker or agent for effecting a sale of real estate could be had, unless he was employed by an agreement in writing for that purpose. But none of them involved the precise point in question here. The sixth clause was added to the above section of the Code in 1878. Prior to which time, it seems that the absence of an express contract might have been supplied by proof of usage regulating transactions like the one here. McCarthy v. Loupe, supra. The change thus made was to prevent the assertion of false claims for compensation by brokers and agents against owners of real estate, which could be done with facility under the former rule. Thus we perceive that the clause is remedial in its object, and if its meaning is doubtful as suggested by this controversy, its words will have to be construed so as to suppress the mischief adverted to, and advance the remedy. The agreement referred to in the clause, it is true, is one defining the right of the agent to effect a purchase or sale of realty, and the liability of the principal to recompense him for his services. But it is to be observed that the chief element in it is the employment. This must necessarily be so, because as appears by the cases above cited, without proof in writing of the employment, no recovery can be had. If, then, no recovery can be had without such proof of the employment, it seems to us that the object of the clause will be fully subserved by holding that, in an agreement like the one in question, the expressing of the fact of employment, without stating that it is for compensation, will suffice. If there were any doubt of this it would be resolved by reading in connection with the above clause section 1614 of the same Code, which bears upon the same subject-matter, and which is as follows: "A written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration." This provision is general, and applies to all contracts where a different rule is not expressly prescribed. And we think that had the legislature intended that contracts, like the one in question, should state a consideration for the services to be rendered by the broker or agent, it would have expressly said so. From this it follows that the memorandum of agreement offered in evidence by the appellant was erroneously excluded; also the evidence tending to prove that he had rendered services under the contract of employment. Waterman v. Bollinghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 Pac. Rep. 195; Zeimer v. Antisell, supra. And as the written contract of employment raised a presumption that the defendant, as principal, had agreed to pay the plaintiff, as his agent, a consideration for services rendered under that contract, and as no certain amount appeared to have been stipulated for, the evidence tending to show the reasonable value of such services should have been admitted. We therefore advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

AGENCY—REVOCATION.

A person authorized by the owner of land to sell it gave a contract to a third person for the price named, but "subject to perfect record title. Thirty days allowed for examination of title." The owner of the land let such third person take the abstract to examine, but told him he could not have 30 days. Held that, as the agent had not produced a purchaser ready and willing to take the property on the terms embraced in the authority, the owner might, before such unconditional acceptance, revoke the authority of the agent. WORKS and THORNTON, JJ., dissenting.

Fox, J. Action for the recovery of commissions claimed to have been earned by a real estate agent, in the sale of certain lands belonging to defendant. Judgment for defendant; motion for new trial denied, and appeal from both judgment and order. The record contains no bill of exceptions, or statement of the case. Consequently, there is nothing upon which we can review the order of the court refusing to grant a new trial. The only examination we can make is of the judgment roll, and the only inquiry is whether the findings support the judgment. The court found that the defendant, being the owner of the land in question, on the 13th day of July, 1887, gave to L. Oestreicher, a real estate agent, an authorization in writing, of which the following is a copy: "I hereby authorize Mr. L. Oestreicher to sell blocks 899, 900, 901, 903, outside lands, for the sum of fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500) each; will allow him one hundred dollars ($100) as commissions for his services on each block. This contract to be in force for ten days from date hereof." Which paper was duly dated and signed by defendant. The court further finds that on the same day Oestreicher agreed with one Fulda, orally, for the sale of the blocks at the price named, but, Fulda failing to put his agreement in writing, Oestreicher afterwards, and on the same day, executed with O. F. Von Rhein & Co. the following agreement in writing: "Received of O. F. Von Rhein & Co. the sum of three hundred dollars ($300) on account of purchase of outside land, blocks 899, 900, 901, and 903; price agreed upon, six thousand dollars, ($6,000;) subject to perfect record title. Thirty days allowed for examination of title. If title does not prove perfect, deposit to be returned." On the same day Oestreicher notified the defendant in writing of what he had done with Von Rhein; that on the 14th, Von Rhein applied to defendant, told him of his agreement to purchase, and asked for the abstract of title. Defendant told him that he would not allow 30 days to examine title. Von Rhein replied that he would make the examination earlier if possible, and received and receipted for the abstract, the same to be returned to the defendant, but no time for its return specified. Later in the same day defendant received from Fulda a letter, notifying him that he (Fulda) had agreed with Oestreicher for the purchase of the blocks, and that he was prepared to examine the title, and complete the purchase if the title proved satisfactory, demanding of defendant to complete the sale, and offering to deposit $500 on account thereof; that on the next day defendant served written notice upon both Oestreicher and Von Rhein & Co., reciting that Oestreicher had procured the authorization given to him, upon his representation that he had an eastern party who was about to depart, to whom he could sell those blocks, if he had authority to act at once, but he had not time to hunt up other blocks for him before his departure; that, instead of selling them as he said he could, he had negotiated a sale of them to two different resident purchasers, and, in view of these complications and misstatements, he revoked the authority of Oestreicher, and declined to proceed further in the consummation of the sale of the property through him; that on the 19th day of July, Von Rhein completed his examination of the title, and offered to complete the purchase, but the defendant refused to accept the money, or make the deed; that demand of the commission had been made and refused, and the claim therefor had been duly assigned to plaintiff. It was also found that the authorization from defendant had not been secured through any fraud or misrepresentation on the part of Oestreicher. On these facts the court found, as conclusion of law, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief demanded, and judgment was entered for defendant.

Although the rule may in some cases be a harsh one, the conclusion of the court was correct. Goodall had the right to revoke the authority given to Oestreicher, at any time before complete performance on his part. Civil Code, § 2356; Masten v. Griffing, 33 Cal. 114; Brown v. Pfiorr, 38 Cal. 553; Jenin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 47; Flanagan v. Brown, 70 Cal. 254, 11 Pac. Rep. 706. Up to the time of the revocation in this case, there had been no performance on the part of Oestreicher. Performance on his part, to entitle him to his commissions, would have been the production of a purchaser, then ready and willing to make the purchase upon the terms embraced in the authority. No such purchaser had been found and produced when the authority was revoked. Neither of those who are claimed to have been such had up to that time signified their willingness to take the property unconditionally, upon the terms proposed. Judgment and order affirmed.

BUCKLEY v. HOWE. (No. 12,711.)

PUBLIC LANDS—PATENT HELD IN TRUST—AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS.

1. In a suit to procure a decree that defendant held the title to certain lands, for which he obtained patent as a pre-emptor, in trust for plaintiff, on the ground that plaintiff had a better right thereto, and that defendant procured the patent by fraud and through mistake and misconception of the law, by officers of the land department, plaintiff as the basis of her right to attack defendant's patent averred that certain persons, each being entitled to an additional homestead entry, made applications at the land-office to locate portions of said lands, that said applications were rejected, that the applications were made for plaintiff's benefit, and that plaintiff had become owner of all the title and interest of said applicants. There was no appeal from the order rejecting their applications, and they did not contest defendant's right to pre-empt said land. Held that, the proceedings of the land-office having been acquiesced in, plaintiff had no ground for attacking defendant's patent.

2. The privilege of amending after the sustaining of a demurrer is, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 472, one not of right, but rests in the discretion of the trial court, and it is too late to raise the point for the first time on appeal that it was error to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Marin county; E. B. MAHON, Judge.

Fox, J. This is a bill in equity to procure a decree that the defendant holds the title to certain lands in Marin county, for which he procured patent as a pre-emptor, in trust for plaintiff, on the ground that plaintiff had a better right thereto, and that defendant procured the patent by fraud, and through mistake and misconception of the law on the part of the officers of the land department of the government. That a patent may be attacked in this way, and such relief be had in a proper case, has been held in very many cases. Bludworth v. Lake, 33 Cal. 256; Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 163, 3 Pac. Rep. 641; Hosmer v. Wallace, 47 Cal. 461; Rutledge v. Murphy, 51 Cal. 388; Plummer v. Brown, 70 Cal. 544, 12 Pac. Rep. 464; Sanford v. Sanford, 13 Pac. Rep. 602; Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530; Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636. And such a ruling is in accord with section 2224 of the Civil Code. But in such a case it is not enough to show that the defendant was not entitled to have received the patent. Plaintiff must also show that she herself occupies such a status towards the property as entitles her to control the legal title. Plummer v. Brown, supra. If she claims priority of right to become the purchaser, and to receive the patent, it is not enough to allege that she had or has such right, for that is a mere conclusion of law; but she must show the state of facts which gave her the right, and also the facts showing that she took the legal steps to avail herself of such right. Aurrecoechea v. Sinclair, 60 Cal. 532. The allegations of the complaint tending to show that the defendant was not entitled to pre-empt the land; that the same was not at the time subject to pre-emption; and that he was not entitled to have or receive the patent,—are, in our judgment, sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that behalf, and to put the defendant to his defense, so far as that branch of the case is concerned, but they show the legal title to be vested in the defendant, and before he can be called upon to defend that title against the plaintiff's allegations of fraud, or be adjudged to hold it in trust for plaintiff, she must show a better right to have received the patent. She cannot recover on the weakness of defendant's right alone, but must do so on the strength of her own. On this branch of the case, the complaint sets out a series of facts tending to show that, at the time of the filing of the township plat, the plaintiff had a priority of right to purchase the lands in question, under the act of July 23, 1866, to settle land-titles in California, on the ground that she was a bona fide purchaser, and in possession under a Mexican grant from which her lands had been excluded under the final survey; but the complaint failed to show the subsequent acts on her part necessary to preserve her right, and on the hearing she abandons all claim of right on that ground.

But as the basis of her right to attack the defendant's patent, upon which she now relies, plaintiff avers that on the 8th of October, 1878, one Laney and one Parks were each entitled to an additional homestead entry, under the laws of the United States, and each made application to the register of the proper land-office to locate portions of the land in question, accompanying their said applications with proofs that the lands were non-mineral, and paying to the register the fees and charges required by law for the entry, which applications were refused by the commissioner of the general land-office; that afterwards, and on the 5th of April, 1879, they respectively renewed their applications, and were again refused; that afterwards, and on the 27th of August, 1880, Laney again renewed his application as to a part of the lands, and again was refused; that on the 8th of September, 1880, one Holly was entitled to an additional homestead entry, and applied to the register of the land-office to locate a portion of the lands, accompanying his application with proof that the land was non-mineral, and paying the fees of office for such entry, but his application was refused. The complaint avers that at the time of each of said applications there was no valid adverse claim to the land. The complaint fails to state upon what ground the original applications of Laney and Parks were rejected, but there is no difficulty in determining, from the facts alleged, the ground upon which such rejection was based. The township plat of the lands had then just been returned by the surveyor general to the district land-office, but it had not been finally approved by the land department; and shortly after such application was withdrawn, and was not finally filed, and did not become an authenticated public record, until the 5th of February, 1879, four months after the making of such application. The lands were not, therefore, at the time of such application, open to entry, or to selection under the additional homestead law. Meantime the lands were not in possession of the applicants. They never attempted to take possession of them; but, as shown by the complaint, they were in part within the exterior boundaries of inclosures of plaintiff, and in part within the exterior boundaries of inclosures of one Brackett, and when the plat was finally approved and filed, they were a part of the public domain, inclosed, as aforesaid, in common with other lands held by the owners of the respective inclosures. It does not appear that either of the persons so having the lands inclosed ever filed a petition in the land-office, or any paper, claiming a right of priority of entry or purchase, under the act of 1866, or put the government upon any notice that they were in possession, or claimed to be purchasers under a Mexican grant from the final survey of which they had been excluded. The applications of Laney and Parks, made April 5, 1879, are not shown, as in all the other cases, to have been accompanied by any of the proofs required by law as to the character of the land, and presumptively were not so accompanied. It is probably for this cause that they were then rejected, the complaint failing to state what, if any, reason was given for this rejection. All the applications made by Laney, Parks, and Holly, in 1880, the complaint shows, were rejected because the defendant had acquired the right of pre-emption of the lands; and it further appears from the complaint that defendant had filed his declaratory statement as a pre-emptor as early as April 18, 1879, and was then in possession of a portion of the demanded and pre-empted premises, which had before that time been included within the inclosures of Brackett. It does not appear that Brackett ever objected to defendant's entry or possession. Neither does it appear that the applicants for homestead entry, or either of them, ever appealed to the commissioner of the general land-office from the order of the register and receiver, rejecting their applications, or took any proceedings whatever to secure the approval of their applications, or contest the right of the defendant. On the contrary, the rejection seems to have been accepted as final, and they and their successor in interest remained silent and passive until the defendant had proved up, paid for his land, and secured his patent. Plaintiff further alleges that these several applications to make additional homestead entries were made for her benefit, with her assent, and by her procurement, and that for a valuable consideration she has become the owner of all the right, title, and interest of the said applicants, and of the said Brackett, in the lands described in the complaint. Concede all this to be true, the complaint fails to show that they, or either of them, ever had any right, title, or interest in the lands to convey. Neither naked possession of the public domain, nor a rejected application for leave to enter it, under whatever law it may be made, if acquiesced in, as was done in this case, so far as appears from the complaint, will give any such right or title as will enable the party successfully to attack a patent issued by the government to another. Assuming that these additional soldiers' homestead entries might, under the law, be made in the name of the soldier, at the instigation and for the benefit of a third party, (a matter, however, upon which we do not pass,) and having been made and approved might thereafter be alienated before patent, as was held in Rose v. Lumber Co., 73 Cal. 385. 15 Pac. Rep. 19, cited by appellant, it does not help the plaintiff in this case at all, for here the entry was not made, and no right was acquired by a mere application, abandoned at the first adverse decision. From these views, it appears that the plaintiff has failed to show any right in the premises which entitles her to attack the defendant's patent, and therefore has failed to state in her complaint facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer to her complaint was properly sustained.

The complaint in this case had already been once amended. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. At the conclusion of the oral argument upon the hearing here in bank, it was suggested that this was error, and that the court below should have given the plaintiff leave again to amend. The privilege of amending, after trial of the issue of law raised by demurrer, is not one of right, but one resting in the discretion of the trial court. Code Civil Proc. § 472. If the plaintiff desired again to amend, she should have applied to the court below, and, if refused, exception should have been taken. It is too late to make the point for the first time in this court, when nothing appears

BUCKLEY V. ALTHOFF. (No. 13,824.)

STATEMENT ON APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

1. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 661, provides that, when a motion for a new trial is made on the minutes of the court, the judgment roll, and a statement to be subsequently prepared, shall constitute the record on appeal. Section 659, subd. 4, declares that the notice of a motion for a new trial on the minutes must specify the particulars wherein the evidence is claimed to have been insufficient, and the errors of law relied on. Held that, where the notice of the motion contained no such specifications, a statement, on appeal, afterwards prepared, was unauthorized, and could not be considered by the appellate court.

2. A statement on appeal which is not served until five days after the expiration of an additional period allowed by the court for its preparation cannot be considered by the appellate court.

3. When there is no "statement on appeal" or bill of exceptions which can be considered, or transcript filed within the time limited, the appeal must be dismissed.

In bank. On rehearing. For former report, see 24 Pac. Rep. 635.

Hassett & Tevlin, for appellant. Chas. J. Heggerty, (Gunnison & Booth, of counsel,) for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On the 28th of July, 1890, an order was made and entered in this cause dismissing the appeal, and, under the rule of the court, remittitur was issued forthwith. Subsequently, upon an ex parte showing, which seemed to be sufficient, the remittitur was recalled, and the appellant moved the court to vacate or modify the order dismissing the appeal, on the ground that the same had been imprudently made, through a misconception of the facts and the records in the cause. The reasons for making the order were not then fully stated in the opinion, nor was it entirely correct in its statement of the rule of practice under the Codes. The reasons then given will therefore be stricken out, but the motion to vacate the order dismissing the appeal, or to modify the same, must be denied.

The action was for forcible entry and detainer. Judgment for plaintiff, March 5, 1890. On the 8th of March, notice of intention to move for a new trial, to be heard on the minutes of the court, was given. The motion came on regularly to be heard on the 11th of March, and was then overruled. On the same day, notice of appeal was given, and undertaking on appeal filed March 13th. On the 21st of March, appellant procured from the judge of the court below an order granting to defendant "twenty days" further time from date hereof in which to prepare and serve his proposed statement on appeal herein." On the 10th day of April, he procured from the judge another order giving him "five days from the date hereof in which to prepare and serve his proposed statement on appeal herein." This time expired April 15th. In law and in fact he was not entitled to have settled in the case any "statement on appeal." His motion for new trial having been submitted on the minutes of the court, he could only bring to this court, on appeal, matters other than those appearing in the judgment roll by bill of exceptions, or a "statement of the case subsequently prepared." Code Civil Proc. § 661. And he was entitled to such a statement only upon having made a motion on the minutes of the court, upon notice duly given as provided in subdivision 4, § 659, Code Civil Proc. That subdivision provides that a notice of motion to be heard on the minutes of the court must specify the particulars wherein the evidence is claimed to have been insufficient, and the errors of law relied upon. It does not appear that any such specification was given, or assignment made, in the notice given in this case. Even when the notice is so given, the "statement of the case subsequently made" must be confined to the errors and particulars specified in the notice. As none were so specified, no subsequent statement of the case was required or authorized. The extensions of time were therefore secured to do something which the law did not authorize to be done, or which could not be used on appeal if done, whether that something was to prepare and serve "proposed statement on appeal," or "statement of the case subsequently made." The extended time expired on April 15th. The proposed statement was not served until the 21st day of April, six days after the expiration of the time allowed by law, and by all extensions given, so that, on this ground also, the statement was one which the court was not called upon to settle, and which could not be used upon the appeal. No transcript was filed within 40 days after the perfection of the appeal, and there was no statement or bill of exceptions to be used, or which could be used, upon the appeal, settled, or pending to be settled. The transcript was not therefore filed in time, and the order dismissing the appeal was properly made. No sufficient cause is shown why said order should be vacated, and the motion to vacate the same is denied. Let remittitur herein issue forthwith.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER CO. v. PATTEE et al. (Nos. 11,326, 11,823, 11,912.)

CORPORATIONS—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY BY OFFICERS.

1. Under Civil Code Cal. § 2228, which requires the highest good faith from a trustee towards his beneficiary, and under section 2230, which prohibits the trustee from taking part in any transaction adverse to the beneficiary, the secretary of a corporation, who is also its general manager, and to whom all its affairs are committed, is guilty of a fraud against the corporation in secretly purchasing its property in his own name at execution and tax sales.

2. To redeem from such purchases of the secretary, the corporation need repay him only his expenditures incurred in that behalf, and not his claim for salary, as the payment of such claim would be giving him an advantage over the other creditors of the corporation, in violation of Civil Code, § 2228, which prohibits a trustee from obtaining any advantage to himself in dealing with the trust property.

3. The title to the corporation's property acquired from the secretary by one who himself occupied fiduciary relations to the corporation, and who had full knowledge of the manner in which the secretary acquired his title, must stand or fall with that of his grantor.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Mateo county; E. F. HEAD, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco Water Company against Solon Pattee, and others. Both parties appeal. Civil Code Cal. §§ 2228, 2230, 2233, 2234, are as follows: "Sec. 2228. In all matters connected with his trust, a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith towards his beneficiary, and may not obtain any advantage therein over the latter by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind." "Sec. 2230. Neither a trustee nor any of his agents may take part in any transaction concerning the trust in which he, or any one for whom he acts as agent, has an interest, present or contingent, adverse to that of his beneficiary." "Sec. 2233. If a trustee acquires any interest, or becomes charged with any duty, adverse to the interest of his beneficiary in the subject of the trust, he must immediately inform the latter thereof, and may be at once removed. Sec. 2234. Every violation of the provisions of the preceding sections of this article is a fraud against the beneficiary of a trust."

Wm. M. Pierson, for appellant. Mesick, Maxwell & Phelan, for respondent.

Fox, J. The pleadings and findings in this case are somewhat voluminous, and we do not deem it necessary to recite them with any considerable detail. The case and its facts, briefly stated, are as follows: The plaintiff was incorporated in July, 1867, for the purpose of acquiring and supplying water to the inhabitants of the city and county of San Francisco. Its by-laws provided for the appointment of a secretary, and very fully defined his duties. Under them, the defendant Pattee was appointed secretary in 1867. There is a dispute as to when he ceased to be such,—he claiming that he resigned in August, 1878, and the plaintiff insisting that he continued to be secretary, and to act as such, until January 4, 1881. Some time prior to the 26th of February, 1878, the plaintiff had become the owner and possessed of certain lands in San Mateo county, taken up as government lands, the title to a part of which was not perfected until some time afterwards. No assessment was ever levied upon the stock of the corporation. Whenever money was needed to pay expenses or liabilities, the secretary went to the president, or others of the directors, and got the money required, or in default thereof the liabilities remained unpaid. The enterprise was unsuccessful; and it would seem that as early as 1872 the hope of bringing it to a successful issue was abandoned, for in October of that year the board of directors passed a resolution allowing the secretary the sum of $1,000 as compensation for his services up to that time, and authorizing the same to be placed to his credit on the books, to bear interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month, to be compounded semi-annually until paid, and the president assured him that when they made a sale of their lands and water-rights, as they hoped to do, he should be well compensated for his further services. This anticipated sale, however, was never effected, and in May, 1878, the company was in debt, with no funds to meet its obligations. A meeting of the directors was holden, and the secretary reported these facts to the board, calling attention, among others, to a debt due one Rosenblum. The board refused to levy any assessment, and the stockholders refused to advance further funds, but the board passed a resolution authorizing the president and secretary to make a loan of $2,000 to meet the outstanding liabilities, and to secure the same by a mortgage upon the company's property. The secretary undertook to negotiate this loan, but was unsuccessful. In August or September, 1878, the secretary told the president that he had been unable to make a loan, and that he was so annoyed by the bills that he would not longer act as secretary. About the same time, he told the defendant Boyd, who was the attorney and one of the directors of the company, the same thing, in substance, and in October, 1878, he made a pencil entry in one of the books of the company: "Resignation of secretary filed." It does not appear, however, that any resignation was ever in fact filed, and Pattee kept and retained all the books and papers of the corporation until January, 1881. No meeting of the directors was held after that of May, 1878, until January 4, 1881. In August, 1878, Rosenblum commenced an action against the company for the amount of his claim before a justice of the peace in Santa Clara county. When the officer attempted to serve the summons upon the secretary, he refused to accept the service, and told the officer that he was not the secretary; thereupon service was made upon the president. The papers were turned over to Boyd, who was the attorney, and a director of the company, and he employed the defendant Travers to appear specially in the case, and move to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. This Travers did, but his motion was denied, and judgment entered against the company. Travers reported the facts to Boyd, who paid him for his service, and dismissed him from further service in the case. In November of that year, execution was issued upon this judgment, the property sold, and at the sale Travers appeared and bid in the property in his own name, but with money furnished by Pattee, and at Pattee's request. In due time, the sheriff's deed was regularly issued under this sale, and the title thus acquired was transferred to and became vested in Pattee. During all former years it had been Pattee's custom to collect the necessary funds from some of the stockholders, and pay the taxes upon the company's property, but in 1877 he did not do so, and in February, 1878, the property was sold for delinquent taxes of the year 1877-78. Pattee procured an assignment of the certificate of sale, and ultimately the tax-title under sheriff's deed also became vested in him. In the fall of 1879, having secured the title under these two sales, Pattee entered into possession of the land by securing attornment from the tenants to him, he having theretofore had the general charge of the leasing of the land, collection of the rents, and of other matters connected with its management. None of the officers or stockholders of the corporation, except the defendant Boyd, to whom Pattee conveyed a half interest in the property so acquired, in consideration of the payment to him of one-half the cost thereof, had any knowledge of these transactions, by which Pattee and Boyd had come into the title and possession, until very shortly before the 4th of January, 1881. At the meeting held on that date, Pattee was asked about the matter, and then openly, and for the first time, so far as notice to the company was concerned, declared that he had acquired and held the property in his own right, and in hostility to the company; a claim which the company by its directors there and then repudiated. In 1878 and 1879, it ought to be stated, Pattee had been inquired of in regard to the delinquent taxes, and replied that it was all right, that he had bid in or redeemed the property; but he did not say that he had bought it in for his own benefit. In April, 1884, the president of the company, by authority of the board of directors, offered to reimburse Pattee and Travers all moneys they had paid out in securing their said titles, as well as certain moneys which Pattee had expended in procuring patent from the United States for a part of the land, together with interest thereon, and demanded that they respectively reconvey to the company; but they each refused to accept such reimbursement, or to make such conveyance. Shortly afterwards, this action was brought. Meantime, and in 1882, the defendant Pattee had executed to the defendant Low a quit claim deed of his half of the property, which the court finds was given as security for present and future loans made by the Anglo-California Bank, Limited, of which Low was one of the managers, and that such conveyance was so accepted without notice of any equities of the plaintiff, and for valuable consideration.

The action is to declare a trust, and to compel reconveyance of the property, upon repayment of all the moneys expended in securing those adverse titles, and procuring the patent, with interest thereon; the plaintiff claiming that because of the fiduciary relations of the defendants, Pattee, Boyd, and Travers, neither of them could acquire and hold these titles, as against the corporation, without first giving the corporation notice of their intention in the premises, and also claiming that Low was not a bona fide purchaser without notice and for value. The court found in favor of the plaintiff upon all the questions as to the fiduciary relations of the defendants, Pattee, Boyd, and Travers, (the latter of whom, however, seems to have been a mere agent of the other two,) and found in favor of the defendant Low, and the bank,—that the conveyance to Low was made without notice, and for valuable consideration,—and judgment was entered accordingly. Motion for new trial made and denied, and the plaintiff appeals from that part of the judgment in favor of Low and the bank; defendant Pattee appeals from that part of the judgment against him, and from the order denying his motion for new trial, and the defendant Boyd takes a like appeal as to that part affecting himself.

The defendant Pattee appeals on the ground of errors of law, insufficiency of evidence to justify the decision, and that the decision is against law. We have carefully examined the record on his appeal, and find no prejudicial errors of law in the matters covered by his assignments of error. The evidence also seems to sustain the findings, and the findings support the judgment. The issue upon which it is claimed that there was no finding—that of the value of the property—is an immaterial one. In his argument, counsel for this appellant claims that the court should have found in favor of this defendant under his plea of laches, and the statute of limitations. We think that in that regard the finding supports the judgment, and is supported by the evidence, but, if it was not so, there is nothing in this defendant's assignments of error, or specifications of insufficiency, upon which to base the argument.

It is also claimed for this defendant that his relations to the company were not of a fiduciary character, and that even if they were, he was not for that reason forbidden by law to buy in the property for his own benefit at a forced sale not made by himself, or at his instigation. The terms of the by-laws make him in large degree the general agent and manager of the corporation. The supervision of nearly all its affairs was committed to him, and the evidence shows very conclusively that during many years, while the corporation was in a state of inactivity, he was its head and front; it had no knowledge of its own affairs except as he gave it, and met or moved only as and when he suggested. He was therefore bound to act towards the corporation in the highest good faith, and was not at liberty to obtain any advantage over the corporation by concealment from its directors of the true condition of its affairs. Civil Code, § 2228. Under section 2230 of the same Code, he had no right to take part in any transaction concerning the property of the corporation, all of which was practically in his keeping, adverse to the interests of the company, without the consent of its directors, given upon full knowledge of the facts. If he did so it was a fraud against the company, (section 2234;) and if by doing so he acquired any interest adverse to the interest of the company, it was his duty to give immediate information thereof, (section 2233.) See, also, Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sum. 475.

It is also claimed that he ought not to be decreed to make restitution, except upon payment not only of his expenditures in that behalf with interest, but also of all other indebtedness of the corporation to him. For all claims except such as it is provided in the decree that he shall be reimbursed, he was, in common with others, a simple creditor of the corporation.

Without resort to, or waiting for, the sales under which he acquired the titles in question, he could at any time have subjected the property of the corporation to the satisfaction of his claim, and if insufficient, or whether insufficient or not, he had also his remedy against the stockholders. We know of no law, and have been cited to none, which would justify him in secretly procuring an adverse title to the company's property, and then compelling the company to give him a preference over all other creditors before it could be redeemed. When redeemed, he and other creditors will stand upon a common level, as they did before. If the doctrine thus contended for were sustained, he would have gained an advantage by his forbidden act, in direct violation of the provisions of the Code which we have cited.

The defendant Boyd appeals upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, that the decision was against law, and of errors of law. His specification of grounds of insufficiency and of errors is much more elaborate than on Pattee's Appeal, but much to the same effect; and on the argument it was conceded that, as to most, if not all the points made, the judgment must necessarily follow that rendered on Pattee's Appeal. But in Boyd's Case it was expressly found that no demand had been made upon him for conveyance, and no refusal to convey, before suit brought. If Boyd held by a title independent of that acquired by Pattee, this fact might raise a question for serious consideration; but as he holds under Pattee, and took with a full knowledge of Pattee's relations to the company, and of the manner in which Pattee's title was acquired, himself also occupying fiduciary relations to the company, his title must stand or fall with that of his grantor.

The plaintiff appeals from the judgment on an exception taken to the 17th finding, in favor of the defendant Low, and that portion of the judgment which is based thereon. In the bill of exceptions, all the evidence upon which said finding is based is set out, and we think it fully supports the finding. It in turn supports the judgment.

On each of said appeals, the judgment and order is affirmed.

GRIFFITH v. HAPERSBERGER. (No. 12,644.)<sup>1</sup>

BUILDING CONTRACT—PERFORMANCE.

1. Plaintiff contracted to construct for defendant the foundation of a public monument, payment to be made when the work was completed and accepted by the architects, and after plaintiff should satisfy the architects that the work and material furnished by plaintiff had "been fully paid, so that no lien can be filed against" it. Plaintiff through his subcontractor constructed one foundation which was rejected, and then built another which was accepted. Plaintiff paid his subcontractor for the first foundation but not for the second, but it did not appear that plaintiff was under any greater or other obligation to pay his subcontractor for both than defendant was to pay plaintiff for both. Besides, it was not found that any lien had been filed or that there were any bills unpaid for which a lien could be filed. It was found that there was not a strict performance of the letter of the contract, but it was found that there was a substantial compliance, and that the work was accepted and approved by the architects of the monument association. It was found that the work was not accepted by defendant's architects, and that plaintiff did not satisfy them in regard to liens, but it was also found that defendant had, prior to the completion of the work, discharged such architects and had not thereafter employed any. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

2. It is no defense to such action that plaintiff's subcontractor in an action against defendant, to which plaintiff was not a party, obtained judgment against defendant for work and material furnished in the construction of said foundation.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge.

Fox, J. Appeal from the judgment, and the case comes up on the judgment roll alone, appellant claiming that the findings of fact are such as entitle him to judgment, and that the court erred in its conclusions of law, and in rendering judgment on the findings for defendant. The complaint is in indebitatus assumpsit, for the recovery of $2,050, for work and labor done, and materials furnished. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and then sets up as a further defense that all the work and labor done and materials furnished for or to the defendant by plaintiff were done and furnished under a special agreement in writing, and that plaintiff has not performed the agreement on his part, and is not entitled to any further compensation thereunder. Defendant then, by way of counter-claim and cross-complaint, sets out the substance of the agreement, and alleges divers failures on the part of plaintiff, by reason whereof he claims to have suffered damage in the sum of $2,000, for which he prays judgment against plaintiff. There was an answer to this cross-complaint, and, upon the issues thus framed, the case was tried before the court without a jury.

The court found that the plaintiff did not perform labor or furnish materials for defendant, and the defendant did not undertake or promise to pay, otherwise than in accordance with the terms of a written contract, dated December 1, 1882, which is set out in the findings in full. From this contract it appears that the defendant was the original contractor for the erection of the Garfield monument, in Golden Gate park; that he entered into this subcontract with the plaintiff to do all the work and furnish all the material for the excavation, concrete foundation, and granite base of the monument, ready for the statue. The details of the work which the plaintiff undertook to do are very fully set out, but need not be as fully repeated here. The contract price was $5,630. The work and material were, among other things, to be according to plans and specifications made by Townsend & Wyneken, architects in the employ of defendant. One thousand two hundred dollars was to be paid when the corner-stone and the first base course was set, and the balance "when all is cut and set in position and accepted by the architects." By another paragraph, however, it was provided that "before any payment is made under the contract, the party of the second part [plaintiff] shall satisfy the said architects" that all materials furnished, and all the work of mechanics, laborers, and others, employed or hired by the plaintiff "have been fully paid, so that no lien can be filed against said work or such materials, mechanical work, or labor." Also "no payment to be made, without a certificate be obtained and signed by said architect that the said payment is due, and according to the terms of the contract." It is further found that the plaintiff, by and through one M. F. Redmond, "his subcontractor," built a concrete foundation, and, in another finding, that plaintiff paid Redmond for building it, but that this foundation was not in accordance with the contract between plaintiff and defendant, and was rejected; that after such rejection "plaintiff's agent and subcontractor, Redmond," built another concrete foundation beside the first, which was accepted, and upon it the iron, granite, brass, and copper work, and, in short, the monument complete, was subsequently erected.

The court further finds that for this second concrete foundation the plaintiff has not paid Redmond; also that some of the copper clamps and rods used in the other work of plaintiff were not set in lead, as required by the letter of the contract, but were set in sulphur instead; but that the work in this behalf was satisfactory to and was accepted by the monument association, the parties with whom defendant made his original contract, and was a substantial compliance with the terms of plaintiff's contract. There is no finding of any failure to pay for all materials furnished, and all labor done, except the one above mentioned, of the non-payment of Redmond for the building of this second concrete foundation; nor is there a finding that any lien was ever filed against the structure in any form whatever, although, according to another finding, Griffith's work was finished in or before September, 1883, and this action was not commenced until July, 1885. It is found that plaintiff's work was not done to the satisfaction, or under the direction, of said Townsend & Wyneken, and that plaintiff never procured their certificate, as required by the contract; but the court finds further in that behalf on the 15th of May, 1883, defendant dismissed the said Townsend & Wyneken from his service, and in writing released them from all responsibility as his architects of said monument, and that, by reason thereof, the plaintiff was prevented from procuring their approval or certificate. It is further found that from and after May 15, 1883, no architect was employed by defendant in the premises, and none were connected with the construction of the monument, except Wright, Kenitzer & Macy, who were competent and experienced archi-pects, employed by, acting under, and representing, the monument association; that on September 15, 1883, plaintiff did procure from them a certificate that he had "completed his contract for the excavation, concrete work, granite work, iron and copper work, required in the erection of the Garfield monument in Golden Gate park, city and county of San Francisco, as per contract dated the first day of December, 1882;" that no certificate of any architect was ever furnished that all or any of the work or materials used or furnished for the building of said second concrete foundation had ever been paid for; that in fact the same had not been paid for; and that there was, at the time of the filing of said findings, another action pending in the same court, brought by Redmond against one Weismann, the agent and representative of defendant, for the recovery of the sum of $948.60, for such materials and labor.

We may remark here that this finding as to the pendency of another suit is not within the issues in this cause. After he had procured the certificate of Wright, Kenitzer & Macy, above mentioned, payments were made to plaintiff to the amount of $3,700. No other or further sum is found to have been paid to him. The findings are voluminous, but we think we have here given sufficient of the substance of them for the purposes of the consideration of the point made by appellant. The conclusions of law upon these findings were all in favor of the defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. Even with the assistance of the able counsel for the respondent, we are unable to discover any principle of law upon which these conclusions and judgment can be sustained. For every technical failure to comply with the strict letter of the contract, found by the court, the courts also expressly found the antidote. The first concrete foundation was a failure, but the court finds that plaintiff paid for a concrete foundation, and that "his agent and subcontractor" built a second one, which was approved and accepted. It is said that the plaintiff did not pay for this second one. Both were built by a subcontractor under him, and it does not appear that he was under any other or greater obligation to pay his subcontractor for both than defendant was to pay him for both, and there is no pretense of such an obligation. But it is further said that the court has found another suit pending, brought by that subcontractor against the agent of defendant, to recover for the second foundation, and counsel cites the records of this court (Redmond v. Weismann, 77 Cal. 423, 20 Pac. Rep. 544) to show that judgment has gone against the agent of defendant in that suit. The finding was not within the issues of this cause, and cannot be regarded. The judgment in the case cited was on the findings in that cause, a cause in which this plaintiff was not a party, and in which his rights could not be tried. If through any mistaken theory of that case, or want of proper defense, judgment went against Weismann, when if the real facts had been known it would have gone otherwise, it may be Weismann's misfortune, but it is one by which this plaintiff cannot be estopped, for in it he was not heard, and had no day in court. This case must stand upon its own findings, and they, taken as a whole, will bear no other construction than that the accepted foundation was built by plaintiff, as well as the rejected one.

There is a finding that plaintiff has not paid all the bills, as it is claimed that under the contract he was bound to do. That finding, however, has reference solely to the non-payment of Redmond for this second foundation. Besides, it is not found that he has not so paid the bills as that no liens shall be filed or accrue, and the contract shows that this was the only purpose of that clause in the contract. It was a clause evidently taken from an ordinary builder's contract, and, in this case, was an unnecessary one, for the monument, though built by private contribution, was erected upon and as an adornment of one of the public parks of the municipality, and could not be made subject to lien. It was affixed to the freehold, and thus became a part of the land, the property of the municipality. Manufacturing Co. v. School-Dist., 10 Pac. Rep. 350; Leonard v. City of Brooklyn, 71 N. Y. 498. Plaintiff has alleged full performance. The court has found how he performed, and in this regard we think it amounts to a finding of full performance. It is found that there was not a strict performance of the letter of the contract, in the matter of the setting of certain clamps and rods, but it is also found how plaintiff performed in that regard, and it expressly finds that it was a substantial compliance with the terms of the contract, and was accepted and approved. This was all that was required. Voorman v. Voight, 46 Cal. 393. It is also found that plaintiff did not procure the approval or certificate of architects Townsend & Wyneken, but in the same connection it is found that defendant by his own act rendered it impossible to do so, and that plaintiff did get the certificate of the architects in charge. This was a sufficient compliance with the contract in that regard. Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 111; Steinbach v. Leese, 13 Cal. 367; Wolf v. Marsh, 54 Cal. 228; Houghton v. Steele, 58 Cal. 424; Civil Code, § 1512. Under these findings we are clearly of the opinion that the conclusions of law and the judgment should have been in favor of plaintiff. It was suggested on the argument that, if this conclusion was reached, the judgment should be for the balance unpaid on the contract, less the amount of the judgment, and costs in the case of Redmond v. Weismann. The record in this case furnishes no justification for such an order. The plaintiff has never had an opportunity to be heard as to whether he was liable for any part of the sum for which that judgment was recovered. Judgment reversed, with directions to the court below to enter judgment on the findings in favor of plaintiff, and against defendant, for the sum of $1,950, that being the unpaid balance of the contract price, with interest thereon from September 15, 1883, the date of the architect's certificates.

ON REHEARING.

(Jan. 7, 1891.)

PER CURIAM. Petition for rehearing is denied, but the judgment is modified to this extent: The superior court will compute interest on the amount awarded to respondent from January 1, 1885, as prayed for in the complaint, instead of September 15, 1883, the date of the architect's certificate.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—ACTION TO SET ASIDE—STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS—RIGHTS OF GRANTEE.

1. A voluntary conveyance by a husband to his wife of all of his property subject to execution is constructively fraudulent as to existing creditors, and an intent to defraud creditors is not necessary.

2. When the title of a grantee is attacked for fraud, he may look behind the judgment, and ascertain whether or not there was an actual indebtedness between the parties upon which the judgment is founded.

3. A grantee whose deed is attacked for fraud by one claiming to be a judgment creditor of his grantor may plead the statute of limitations against the debt before it becomes merged in the judgment; and, before any question can arise in relation to the statute of limitations, the objection must be taken in the proper manner, i. e., by demurrer, if the objection appears on the face of the complaint, otherwise, by answer.

4. Where a debt is barred by the statute of limitations, the debtor may renew it by a new promise in writing, and, where he afterwards makes a voluntary conveyance to his wife, which is attacked because constructively fraudulent, the grantee in such deed cannot say that she was injured by such new promise.

5. Under section 2874, Hill's Code, the expenses of the family are chargeable on the property of both the husband and wife, and where the wife takes a voluntary conveyance from her husband, and pays a sum which had accrued as family expenses before the conveyance to her, she is entitled to have the same, as well as a sum she paid to her husband's vendor as purchase money before the land was conveyed to her, out of the first proceeds of the sale.

Appeal from circuit court, Douglas county; R. S. BEAN, Judge.

The plaintiff is a judgment creditor of the defendant M. W. Davis, and brings this suit to set aside a voluntary deed made by M. W. Davis to Emily Davis. At the time the deed in question was made, Emily Davis was M. W.'s wife, but a separation occurred soon thereafter, and a divorce was obtained by the wife. The complaint is in the usual form in such case, except that it is not alleged therein that an execution had been issued on the judgment, and a return of nulla bona made thereon; but it is alleged that M. W. Davis had no property whatever, other than the land in controversy, out of which the plaintiff's debt could be made, and that at the time M. W. Davis deeded said land to his wife he was, and has ever since continued to be, wholly insolvent. Among other things, the defendant Emily Davis alleged in her answer that the judgment of L. M. against M. W. Davis was taken and procured by the fraudulent connivance between the plaintiff and defendant therein, and that the same was taken for the sole purpose of enabling the plaintiff, who is the brother of the defendant M. W. Davis, to bring this suit against the defendant Fanny Davis, when in truth and in fact the defendant M. W. Davis is not indebted to the plaintiff in any sum whatever. Some other allegations are made in the answer which will be more fully noticed in the opinion.

J. C. Fullerton and Hamilton & Hamilton, for appellant. Wm. R. Willis and C. A. Sehlbrede, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) In the view we take of this case, it is not necessary to particularly notice all of the questions attempted to be raised by counsel for appellant on this appeal. In the first place, it must be conceded that the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant M. W. Davis on a note that bears date prior to the execution of the deed to Emily Davis, and that there was no valuable consideration passed between Emily and M. W. Davis at the time the deed was executed; in other words, that it was purely a voluntary deed. This entitles the plaintiff to the relief which he seeks, that is, to set aside the deed as constructively fraudulent, so far as it hinders or delays the plaintiff in the enforcement of his judgment,—unless the legal effect of these facts is averted by something else apparent in the record. The note upon which the judgment mentioned in the complaint was entered bears date November 20, 1888, and the deed in question, January 19, 1889, so that upon the face of the record the debt existed at the time of the conveyance. But the defendant Fanny Davis insists that she may go behind the judgment, and that if it appears that the debt was fictitious or barred by the statute of limitations in the first case, it would not support the proceeding, and in the other, it could not be revived to her prejudice. These questions will be separately examined. The first is one of fact; the second, one of law.

1. For the purposes of this case, the defendant Emily Davis has the right to inquire behind the note upon which the judgment mentioned in the complaint is founded, and for this purpose we think she may inquire into the consideration of the note, because, if there was not an actual subsisting debt due and owing by M. W. Davis to L. M. Davis at the time the note was executed, the execution of the note could not create one, nor would such transaction constitute the plaintiff a creditor, within the meaning of the statute. It is therefore necessary to look to the evidence on that subject. The only evidence offered is that of the plaintiff. He testifies, in substance, that on the 14th day of October, 1888, M. W. Davis was indebted to him between $1,600 and $2,000 for medical attendance, money advanced and furnished, lodging, washing, etc. That, about the 20th day of November of that year, the parties had a settlement, "made a lumping settlement in the sum of $1,500," for which he took the note upon which the judgment mentioned was rendered, and that nothing had been paid thereon. On his cross-examination he testified that $480 of this sum was advanced, he thought, in 1878, and $40 more the following year; $75 at another time, and about $500 was advanced to buy his stock and dental outfit when he came to Roseburg. Thinks this was in 1879 or 1880. He further testified that the items for boarding and nursing accrued in Missouri in 1876 or 1877. He further says he charged $250 for dental tuition, and $250 for board, while M. W. lived with him for the purpose of receiving instruction, and that M. W. is a younger brother. No books of account were produced, and there is a degree of vagueness and uncertainty in the evidence which tends to render it somewhat unsatisfactory, but it is not contradicted, nor is the credibility of the witness assailed. This evidence is weak, and somewhat unsatisfactory, growing out of the delay in asserting the claim against M. W., and all the attending circumstances; yet we do not think it can be rejected. Unless rebutted or overthrown in some way, it is prima facie sufficient to prove that the note sued on was founded upon a sufficient consideration.

2. The appellant next insists that, it appearing that more than six years elapsed after the demands of the plaintiff accrued, and became due and payable, they are barred by the statute of limitations, and that as against her they could not be revived or made the foundation of a claim upon which a judgment could be entered, and made the basis for an attack on her title. If this contention was tenable in a proper case, and we think it was, it cannot avail this defendant for two reasons: (1) She did not plead the statute of limitations; and (2) so far as the facts are disclosed by the evidence, the new promise was made before the deed to the defendant Fanny Davis was executed. The rule of law must be taken as settled in this state that if a claim be set up against a party which is barred by the statute of limitations, and the fact appears upon the face of the proceedings, the objection must be taken by a demurrer; otherwise it must be taken by answer. And, if not taken either in one form or the other, according to the fact, it is to be deemed waived. In this case, the objection did not appear on the face of the complaint. It was necessary, therefore, to take it by answer, or else it was waived. The objection as to the new promise we think equally unavailing. If Fanny Davis had relied upon the statute of limitations in her answer, and the new promise had been made after the execution of the deed of M. W. Davis to her, we think that no new promise that M. W. might have made could have affected her. But, so far as the evidence discloses the facts, the new promise is older than her deed. It is true her counsel have argued with great tact and ingenuity that this is a mere device resorted to by these brothers to overreach her, and to enable the plaintiff to attack her title. The fact may be so, but it rests on conjecture merely, and not on the evidence. If this new promise were made before the deed to the defendant Fanny Davis, no reason is perceived why it should be held invalid as against her. At that time she had no interest in this land. M. W. Davis owned it, and could have mortgaged it to secure an outlawed debt if he had thought proper to have done so. He might have been sued on this old outlawed account, which his brother held against him, and refused to demur to the complaint on the ground that the debt sued on was barred; and the plaintiff could have taken a judgment against him, and subjected this same land to its payment before it was conveyed to his wife, and no one could have interposed any objection. For the reasons indicated, the statute of limitations is not in this case, and cannot influence its determination.

3. There is one other question that seems to require some attention. Hill's Code, § 2874, makes the expenses of the family chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife. Whatever family expenses were incurred while either of the parties owned this property were a charge upon it, and if, after Fanny Davis received the title, she paid any such expenses, her equity for the amount paid is superior to the plaintiff's, and must be first satisfied. The evidence tends to show the amount was $300. So, as to the claim of Aaron Rose for the balance of the purchase money. Whether Rose had a lien for it or not she paid it, and the same must be returned to her before the plaintiff is paid anything. The decree of the court below will therefore in all things be affirmed, except that Fanny Davis will be first paid, out of the proceeds of the sale of the property, $300, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum from the date of payment, which the court below is directed to ascertain, and the further sum of $145, paid by Fanny Davis to Aaron Rose, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, which the court below is also directed to ascertain.

TRIAL BY COURT—FINDINGS OF FACT.

When a case is tried before the court without the intervention of a jury, the findings of the court upon the facts shall be deemed as a verdict, and the duty of this court is to ascertain whether the legal conclusions drawn therefrom are such as the law pronounces.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Jackson county.

A. S. Hammond, for appellant. C. W. Kahler, for respondents.

LORD, J. This was an action to recover the sum of $250 as commissions for the sale of land by the plaintiff as a real-estate broker. The action was tried by the court without a jury, by consent of the parties. After hearing the evidence, the court found, as facts, that the defendants agreed to pay the plaintiff the sum of $250 if plaintiff would sell for the defendants certain lands described, but that he had failed to sell the same, or to procure a purchaser who entered into a binding contract for the purchase; and, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything in the action, but that the defendants were entitled to recover er their costs and disbursements, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The bill of exceptions contains all the evidence, and the error mainly assigned is error in the court in finding the facts as above stated. But this court cannot look into the bill of exceptions to ascertain the facts, as the findings of the court are conclusive upon us. In Hallock v. City of Portland, 8 Or. 29, it was held that when a case is tried before the court without the intervention of a jury, the findings of the court upon the facts shall be deemed as a verdict, and must be accepted as correct until set aside in that court. We have nothing to do with the facts as found, except to ascertain whether the legal conclusions drawn therefrom are such as the law pronounces. But, to enable the court to determine the correctness of the legal conclusions drawn from the findings of fact, it may be important that counsel should be vigilant to have the findings of fact stated with fullness and particularity to avail themselves of the legal objection which they desire to raise and to have determined. In the case at bar, the contention of the plaintiff is not that the legal conclusions drawn from the facts found are incorrect and erroneous, but that the uncontradicted evidence does not warrant the findings of fact as found by the court. His assignment of error is that the court erred in finding that the plaintiff had failed to sell the land, or to procure a purchaser to enter into a binding contract, and his argument is devoted to showing that the undisputed evidence is otherwise. In a word, he claims that a proper finding of facts would warrant the legal conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his commissions. If the legal consequences would result upon such a finding of facts as he claims that the uncontradicted evidence authorizes, and the court ought to have found, there is no doubt that the judgment works him an injury and wrong which it is the aim of the law to avoid. But, to my mind, it is not clear that the mode that the plaintiff has pursued to have the error of which he complains reviewed is the proper one, and can be availed of here, but, that injustice may be avoided, it is thought by the court, under the circumstances presented by this record, that it is safer and better to remand the cause to the trial court to make a full finding of the facts, and the legal conclusions to be deduced therefrom. And for this purpose the judgment is reversed; and it is so ordered, and that the costs and disbursements abide the result.

FENSTERMACHER et al. v. STATE.

ACTION—PETITION—REVIEW ON APPEAL.

1. The phrase "civil actions" includes actions at law or suits in equity, and all other judicial controversies in which rights of property are involved, and is used in contradiction to "criminal action."

2. A "petition" in common phrase is a request in writing, and in legal language describes an application to a court in writing, in contradiction to a "motion," which may be made  viva voce.

3. When a finding is wholly unsupported by evidence, and that fact is made to appear by a bill of exceptions purporting to contain all the evidence upon this point, this court would disregard it.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

The facts in substance are that on the 7th day of May, 1887, one John Fenstermacher died, in Multnomah county, intestate, leaving certain real and personal property described herein; that thereafter, on the 20th day of June, 1887, J. K. Wait was duly appointed administrator of the estate of the said intestate by the county court, and the said estate was duly administered upon and finally settled up by him, and he discharged on the 20th day of May, 1888, as such administrator. No legal heirs entitled to said estate having appeared thereafter, such proceedings were instituted as by law required before the circuit court of Multnomah county as resulted in a judgment declaring all the property belonging to said estate of the said John Fenstermacher, deceased, escheated to the state of Oregon, and, in accordance with the judgment or decree rendered therein, the property belonging to said estate was duly sold in accordance with law, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the necessary expenses, were paid over to the treasurer of the state; that on the 25th day of May, 1889, the above-named petitioners filed their complaint in the circuit court of Multnomah county, claiming to be the heirs at law of the said John Fenstermacher, deceased, and asking for a judgment of said court that they be declared to be the rightful owners to all of said property, etc.; that the cause was tried before the court without the intervention of a jury, and that the court found that the said petitioners were not the heirs of the said John Fenstermacher, deceased, and that neither of them was entitled to any of the property belonging to the estate of the said John Fenstermacher, deceased, which had heretofore escheated to the state of Oregon, and that said state do have and recover its costs, etc., from which this appeal is taken.

W. S. Beebe and John M. Gearin, for petitioners. Thos. A. Stevens, Dist. Atty., and W. W. Page, for the State.

LORD, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The first inquiry suggested is whether the proceeding authorized by Hill's Code, § 3141 is a suit in equity or an action at law. For the state, it was argued that the words "in civil actions" used in the section cited, supra, indicated that the action was at law, for the reason that if it had been intended to be an equity proceeding the word "suit" would have been used, and not "action;" but this construction is not tenable. A civil action is instituted for the purpose of enforcing a private or civil right, or to redress a private wrong, as distinguished from actions instituted to punish crimes, which are known as "criminal actions." Referring to the act of congress of July 2, 1864, which declares "that in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of any witness on account of color, nor in civil actions because he is a party to or interested in the issue to be tried," Mr. Justice MILLER said: "The phrase 'civil actions' includes actions at law, suits in chancery, proceedings in admiralty, and all other judicial controversies in which rights of property are involved, whether between private parties, or such parties and the government. It is used here in contradistinction to prosecutions for crime." U. S. v. Cigars, 1 Woolw. 125; Green v. U. S., 9 Wall. 655; Rison v. Cribbs, 1 Dill. 184. The phrase, then, "civil actions," as used in the section supra, may mean either a suit in equity or an action at law taken alone, but it is suggested in aid of that argument that the use of the word "petition," and the words "and the court thereupon must try the issue," have a tendency to indicate that the proceeding is in equity. "A 'petition' in common phrase is a request in writing; and in legal language describes an application to a court in writing, in contradistinction to a 'motion,' which may be made viva voce." FOLGER, J., in Shaft v. Insurance Co., 67 N. Y. 547. It is ordinarily used for interlocutory purposes. "As a general rule," said VAN FLEET, V. C., "a petition cannot be presented in a cause until a bill has been filed;" and, while he admitted that there are cases in which a proceeding might be instituted by petition, he thought it must be limited to those instances in which the legislature has expressly authorized its use, or where it has the sanction of long-established practice. Receiver of State Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 34 N. J. Eq. 451. Under some of the Codes it is the first pleading filed, like one complaint by the plaintiff, where-in he states the facts of his case. The word "petition," therefore, lends but little aid to uphold this contention. Nor do we think the other words, "and thereupon the court must try the issue," any more decisive of the matter. It is true, suits in equity are tried by the court, but so are actions at law, without the intervention of a jury, and by the court when the parties so consent and stipulate as required or provided in section 218, Code Or. But what to our mind is more decisive of the matter is the nature of the subject-matter to be tried. Its object is to identify the petitioners as the heirs of the intestate, and entitle them to recover the money escheated to the state, indicating a legal inquiry for which the proceeding was instituted, and which courts of law are competent to try. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the proceeding is one at law, and must be so regarded in the present case.

Another question raised is whether this court will interfere if there is no evidence to support a finding. In Kyle v. Rippy, 19 Or. —, ante, 141, which was tried without the intervention of a jury, and the finding excepted to, and the evidence included in a bill of exceptions, this court declined to review the evidence on the ground suggested, but remanded the cause for a fuller finding of the facts; but that was more in consequence of a want of particularity in the findings. In Hicklin v. McClear, 18 Or. 138, 22 Pac. Rep. 1057, the court said, by THAYER, C. J.: "If the findings of the circuit court are wholly unsupported by the evidence, and that fact is made to appear by a bill of exceptions purporting to contain all the evidence upon the point, this court would disregard the findings." So that in Bartel v. Mathias, 19 Or. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 918, where the question was raised that a certain finding of vital importance in the case was not supported by the evidence, and the evidence upon that point was set out in the bill of exceptions, this court examined it; but, finding that there was some evidence having a tendency to support it, held that the finding of a referee is conclusive as to the facts found, if there was any evidence before them having a tendency to establish such facts. In the case in hand, the record discloses, after the evidence was all in, that the counsel for the petitioners asked the court to find "that the petitioners were the heirs of the said John Fenstermacher, and entitled to the money described in their petition," which finding the court declined to make, to which refusal an exception was taken and reserved, and thereafter the court found that the petitioners were not the heirs of the said John Fenstermacher, and were not entitled to the money mentioned in their petition, to which finding counsel excepted, and the court allowed. The evidence is in a bill of exceptions. As this court said, in Hicklin v. McClear, supra, "whether or not that court was justified by the weight of evidence to make the finding, this court cannot consider." The weight of evidence is for that court, and not for us, to determine, however much we might feel disposed to differ from it. Testing the evidence by these principles, we cannot do otherwise than affirm the judgment.

RESULTING TRUST—PAROL EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION OF PAYMENT—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

1. When land is conveyed to one person, and another pays the consideration, a resulting trust will be presumed in favor of the one paying the consideration. It rests on the equitable principle that the property belongs to him who advances the money to pay for it.

2. As the trust results from the payment of the consideration, if the party claiming to be the beneficial owner has made no payments, he cannot show, by parol evidence, that the purchase was made for his benefit, for that may not involve anything more than a breach of a parol agreement to purchase and hold in trust for another.

3. It is not essential that the payment of the consideration be in money, but it may be made in anything of value.

4. The presumption that the party paying for the property intended it for his own benefit applies only when the transaction is between strangers, where there is no moral or legal obligation resting on the purchaser to pay the consideration for another.

5. When a purchaser takes conveyances in the name of his wife, the rule is reversed, and equity raises the presumption that the purchase and conveyance was intended as an advancement or gift.

6. If a purchaser takes a deed in the name of his wife for the purpose of hindering and delaying his creditors, and not for the purpose of making an advancement, a trust will result to the purchaser, and the land be liable for his debt.

7. The law enforces a careful regard for the rights of creditors against conveyances without consideration made by a party largely indebted, and unless he makes provision for the payment of his debts, or retains other property of sufficient value for that purpose, they are of no validity as to such creditors.

8. Whether a party largely indebted can put his property in the hands of another to hold until he can pay his debts, and, when the debts are paid, the transaction will be relieved of its fraud, not decided.

9. Where a party, in order to secure his property against the claims of his creditors, conveyed it to another to hold until he could pay his debts, and, after such debts were paid, directed it to be conveyed to his wife, and subsequently joined with her in a deed in exchanging said property for other property with C., held, that no trust resulted to him in such property.

Appeal from circuit court, Multnomah county; L. H. STEARNS, Judge.

This is a suit in equity, brought by the plaintiff, to quiet title, and to have a trust declared in certain lands described and lying in East Portland, standing in the name of his wife, Elizabeth Taylor, now deceased. The plaintiff alleges that now, and since the 16th day of December, 1869, he has been the owner and in possession of the said property, describing it; that on that day he purchased and paid for said described property, and had the legal title to the same conveyed to his wife, Elizabeth Taylor, in trust for himself; that she received such title in trust for him, and agreed to hold it subject to plaintiff's directions and control, and to convey the title to him, when demanded, and that, in case of her decease before the property was otherwise disposed of, she would leave a will devising the legal title to the plaintiff; that, on the 30th day of April, 1882, the said Elizabeth Taylor made her will devising said property to the plaintiff, and died on that day; and that the defendant claims an estate or interest in said property adverse to the plaintiff, etc. The defendant by his answer, after denying the facts, as alleged, sets up, affirmatively, (1) that the said Elizabeth Taylor was seised in fee-simple of said lands, and that she died intestate, leaving no heirs at law, except three daughters, naming them, each of whom inherited an undivided one-third of said property, etc., and that the defendant, by a regular chain of conveyances, has succeeded to the interest of two of such heirs; and (2) that the plaintiff ought not to be permitted to maintain his suit on account of facts alleged to create an estoppel, etc. Upon issue being joined the evidence was taken and submitted to the court, which, being duly advised by argument, after mature deliberation, found that plaintiff had no right or title to the described lands, except by estate by curtesy, and that the said Elizabeth Taylor did not hold the same in trust for plaintiff, nor subject to his direction and control; that she did not make a will devising the said property to the plaintiff, but that she was the owner thereof in fee-simple, and that the defendant had succeeded to her right in an undivided two-thirds thereof, subject to the curtesy of the plaintiff; and thereupon decreed that the plaintiff had no right, title, or interest therein, except an estate by curtesy for his own life; and that the defendant is the owner in fee-simple of an undivided two-thirds of said land, subject to said estate by curtesy, etc. From this decree the present appeal is brought.

A. L. Frazer and E. B. Williams, for plaintiff. B. Killen and W. E. Thomas, for defendant.

LORD, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The question raised by this record is whether, upon the facts, the wife of the plaintiff held the property in dispute in trust for him, or in her own right as the intended beneficiary of it. Where one purchases an estate, and pays for it, and takes the title in the name of another, or where one purchases land with the money of another, and takes the title to himself, there arises, by operation of law, a resulting trust in favor of him whose money paid for it. Parker v. Newitt, 18 Or. 274, 23 Pac. Rep. 246. It rests on the equitable principle that the property belongs to him who advances the money to pay for it, or that the beneficial ownership follows the consideration. If the party claiming to be the beneficial owner has made no payments, he cannot show, by parol evidence, that the purchase was made for his benefit, for that might involve no more than a breach of a parol contract to purchase and hold in trust for him. Nor is it essential that the payment of the consideration be in money, but it may be made in anything of value. "It is sufficient," said WELLS, J., "if that, in fact, which formed the consideration of the deed moved from the party for whom the trust is claimed to exist, or was furnished in her behalf, or on her credit. The trust results from the purchase and payment of the consideration by or for one party, and the conveyance of the land to another. The receipt of a deed founded on such a transaction raises a presumption that it was taken for the benefit of the party supplying the consideration." Blodgett v. Hildreth, 103 Mass. 487. As a consequence, it follows that a trust must arise, if at all, at the time of the conveyance, and that the money, or other consideration for the deed, which is the foundation of the trust, must then be paid or secured to be paid. White v. Carpenter, 2 Paige, 238. The resulting trust must arise at the time of the purchase, and cannot be created afterwards. But the presumption that the party paying for the property intended it for his own benefit applies only when the transaction is between strangers, where there is no natural or legal obligation resting on the purchaser to pay the consideration for another. When the purchaser takes the conveyance in the name of his wife, the sale is reversed, and equity raises the presumption that the purchase and conveyance was intended to be an advancement or gift. "Whenever," says Mr. Pomeroy, "the real purchaser—the one who pays the price—is under a legal or even a moral obligation to maintain the person in whose name the purchase is made equity raises the presumption that the purchase is intended as an advancement or gift, and no trust results." 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1039. But if a husband purchases an estate, and pays the consideration thereof, and procures the title to be conveyed to his wife, with the understanding that she shall convey the same to him when demanded, she has no such beneficial interest in the property that will, in the event of her death while holding the title as against the husband, descend to her heirs. It is the payment of the purchase money by the husband that creates the trust, and the agreement to so hold and convey when demanded may be shown in evidence to rebut the presumption that the property was conveyed to the wife as an advancement. Cotton v. Wood, 25 Iowa, 46.

Again, if the purchaser takes the deed in the name of his wife or child, for the purpose of defrauding or delaying his creditors, and not for the purpose of making a settlement, or advancement, a trust will result to the purchaser, and the land be liable to his debts. Guthrie v. Gardner, 19 Wend. 414; Belford v. Crane, 16 N. J. Eq. 265.

When, however, a party holding real estate in his own right, in order to secure it against the claims of his creditors, makes a conveyance of it to another, without any valuable consideration, who accepts the conveyance upon a secret trust for such party's use, it is void as to existing creditors, and the land is liable for their debts. Nor can a party largely indebted give or convey away his property in disregard of the claims of his creditors, and escape the suspicion that the transaction originated in fraud. The fact may be that no fraud was intended, but if they operated to the prejudice of his creditors, and delay and hinder them, such conveyance will not be upheld, or allowed to defeat the payment of their claims. The law enforces a careful regard for the rights of creditors against conveyances without consideration, made by a party largely indebted; and unless he makes provision for the payment of his debts, or retains other property of sufficient value for that purpose, they are of no value as to them, and may be set aside, and appropriated to the payment of their claims. These principles are elementary, and the justice of them so obvious that no citations are necessary to sustain them.

Turning now to the evidence it only remains to apply these principles to it, and declare the result. For convenience, it may be best, first, to briefly trace the line of conveyance to the property in dispute. The plaintiff was the owner of a tract of land upon Suavie Island, the greater part of which, he and his wife conveyed to one Nelson Hoyt; that shortly after, by direction of the plaintiff, Hoyt conveyed the same to the wife of the plaintiff; and that in the year ensuing the plaintiff and his wife exchanged this land for the land in dispute. Taking these transactions separately, the testimony shows that in the month of January, 1868, the plaintiff, being in debt, and fearing that his creditors would subject his property to its payment, conveyed to one Nelson Hoyt 120 or 160 acres of land that he owned on Suavie Island, and that the said Hoyt accepted the conveyance upon a secret trust for the plaintiff's use. This trust, the testimony of the plaintiff shows, was to hold it for him until he could raise the money to pay his debts. Shortly thereafter, he directed Hoyt to convey this land to his wife, Elizabeth Taylor, not, however, as the plaintiff claims, until he had fully paid his creditors. But the only proof of such payment is the declaration of the plaintiff. Hoyt says that when he conveyed, at the plaintiff's request, the property to his wife, "the plaintiff said he had paid up his debts." No receipts or vouchers or other evidence of payment were offered to establish this important fact, nor was any creditor called to show that he had received payment for his debt. But, on the other hand, there was the testimony of one of the creditors, produced by the defense, tending to show that his debt was not paid at the time Hoyt conveyed this property to Elizabeth Taylor. If that were true, the original transaction was not purged of its fraud, and Elizabeth Taylor took the property subject to the debts of the plaintiff's creditors. It may be true that the motive that induced the transfer of the property to Hoyt was not fraudulently intended, but it is not questioned that it did not operate to the prejudice of the creditors of the plaintiff, only that, when the same property was conveyed by Hoyt to his wife, the debts of his creditors had been paid. The law is plain that a person indebted cannot convey his property to another without consideration, unless some provision is made for the payment of his creditors, without the transaction being regarded as fraudulent.

As between the plaintiff and his creditors, the conveyance from him to Hoyt was void; and, as between plaintiff and Hoyt, equity would have refused its aid to the plaintiff to reclaim his property from him. And the argument of counsel concedes that, if the debts were not paid when Hoyt, at his request, conveyed the property to his wife, the original transaction was not purged of its fraud, and the land went into her hands with that fraud still clinging to it, and liable for her husband's debts. Whether a party largely indebted can put his property in the hands of another, to put it out of the reach of his creditors, and to hold until he can pay such debts, and then, if he is fortunate enough to succeed in paying them, that the transaction is purged of its fraud, we do not, nor is it necessary for us to, decide. But, for the purposes of this case, we may assume the correctness of the argument that the debts were paid when Hoyt conveyed to Mrs. Taylor, and the original transaction is purged of its fraud, so that, when she took the deed for it, the property stood free from all fraudulent impediments. What then? As the case now stands, Hoyt was merely an intervening trustee for the plaintiff to convey his property to his wife. In effect, the transaction was the same as if the deed had been made directly from the plaintiff to his wife. Here, no consideration was paid to Hoyt, who conveyed to the wife. The plaintiff conveyed by deed to Hoyt, and Hoyt conveyed by deed to plaintiff's wife; no money or other valuable consideration passed. The plaintiff was not a purchaser, nor Hoyt a seller. It was the plaintiff's conveyance through Hoyt to his wife. There is no evidence, nor is it alleged or claimed, that there was any understanding that Mrs. Taylor was to hold this property subject to the control of her husband. The testimony of Hoyt is explicit that nothing was said at the time of that conveyance, except that the plaintiff requested him to deed the property to his wife. It is difficult to understand how the equitable principle that when land is conveyed to one person and another pays the consideration a resulting trust will be presumed in favor of the one paying the consideration upon such facts. The trust is based upon the fact of the payment of the purchase money by the husband for the property, and, as we have already shown, no consideration was paid to Hoyt, who conveyed to the wife, nor was the plaintiff a purchaser, nor Hoyt a seller. The plaintiff simply conveyed his property through Hoyt to his wife. It was his conveyance through Hoyt. The equitable principle that a resulting trust will be presumed in favor of the one paying the consideration is not applicable to such facts. This is not a transaction of that kind. Nor can it apply for another reason, namely that the presumption of a resulting trust in favor of him who supplies the consideration only applies between strangers, and has no application where a family relation exists, and there is no moral or legal obligation for the purchaser to pay the consideration. When the purchaser takes the conveyance in the name of his wife, for whom he is under a legal obligation to provide, the rule is reversed in its application, and, between such parties, the presumption is that the payment by the husband was intended as an advancement or gift.

A man cannot give away his property to-day and take it back to-morrow, and, if he makes his wife the owner, the same result follows, and he must abide by her ownership. As we have shown, the authorities to this point speak without a dissentient voice. It results then that the conveyance of the Suavie Island property to the wife made her the owner of it, and the plaintiff must abide by that ownership. Yet the plaintiff claims that when he and his wife joined in a deed of this property, containing 120 acres, and 40 acres belonging to him, to one Clark, in exchange for the East Portland property, (the property in dispute,) which Clark deeded to his wife, he purchased and paid for the property in dispute, and that, at the time of such conveyance to his wife, she agreed to hold it subject to his direction and control, and that, in the event she should die before him, she was to will it to him, and that, in accordance with such agreement, just before her death, she made a will of it to him, although it was void, by reason of an omission to name any of the children in the will. This proceeds upon the theory that the plaintiff paid the consideration money, or that it was his property that constituted the consideration for the property in dispute at the time of its conveyance to his wife, when the fact is that the great part of the consideration was composed of her property, and only a small part (40 acres) was composed of his property. Of what value these 40 acres were there is no evidence, but presumably they were of very little value, as they were not regarded of sufficient consequence to be included in the conveyance of Hoyt to protect them against the claims of his creditors, so that the pro rata part of the consideration to be paid for the property in dispute is not ascertainable. That there is some testimony tending to show that his wife recognized the property in dispute as belonging to him may be admitted, although there is some other evidence in contradiction of it. Hoyt says that once, when Mrs. Taylor was at his house, she remarked that if she died before the plaintiff she intended to will the property to him; that she wanted him to have it. This referred to the property in dispute, but there is nothing in this inconsistent with the ownership. So too McNulty says that in 1879, after she had had the property in dispute about 10 years, in a conversation in which she claimed the property, and her husband disputed it, she afterwards said she was only joking. It is hardly necessary to consider this in the view we take of the facts. A trust arising by operation of law must arise at the time of the transaction, and cannot be created afterwards. As Chancellor KENT said: The trust must have been "coeval with the deeds, or it cannot exist at all." Botsford v. Burr, 2 Johns. Ch. 405. It must result from the original transaction at the time it takes place, and cannot be mingled and confounded with any subsequent dealings. A trust must have been impressed on the Suavie Island property at the time it was conveyed by Hoyt to Mrs. Taylor, by operation of law, to affect the property in controversy. If no trust was created at that time, but she took the property as her own, that ownership remains until she legally transfers or disposes of it. We have shown that in any view the transaction must be regarded as a conveyance to the wife, conferring upon her the ownership of that property; that no trust attached to it by implication of law at the time Hoyt transferred it to her. Now, as that property—the property belonging to Mrs. Taylor—constituted the main consideration for the property in dispute, and the deed was taken in her name, no trust could result, and the property became her own. The whole foundation of a resulting trust is the payment of the purchase money, which must be clearly and satisfactorily established. As this was not paid by the plaintiff, but by his wife, no trust could result to him, and the bill should have been dismissed. This view renders it unnecessary to consider some other aspects of the case, or to express any opinion concerning the same. The bill is dismissed, and it is so ordered.

RES ADJUDICATA—EFFEKT.

A former decree between the same parties for the same cause is a bar to a re-examination of the same facts in this case; but, when new facts have occurred since the former decree, entitling the plaintiff to relief, she may have a decree founded on those facts.

Appeal from Douglas county; R. S. BEAN, Judge.

This is a suit for divorce. The charges are, briefly, cruelty and personal indignities rendering life burdensome. These are denied by the answer, and, by way of a further defense, the answer pleads the rendition of a decree by the circuit court of Douglas county, Or., between the same parties in which the same facts were relied upon as in this suit. The reply denied the new matter. The plaintiff had a decree in her favor, from which this appeal is taken.

W. R. Willis and C. A. Schldrede, for appellants. J. C. Fullerton and Geo. W. Colvig, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. It is manifest, from an examination of this record, that very much of the plaintiff's case is covered by the former decree between the same parties, and therefore cannot be considered again in this case. But there is enough which has occurred since that time to entitle her to a decree. The alienation between these parties seems to be permanent and irreconcilable. The feelings of both are deeply moved, one against the other. The defendant is engaged in the saloon business at Roseburg, and has been for many years, and appears to have entertained much suspicion concerning the fidelity and chastity of his wife. From his own testimony in the case, the "green-eyed monster" seems to be ever before him, and his frequent insinuations and statements concerning his wife's chastity show conclusively the state of his mind on the subject. It is unnecessary to recapitulate them, or make a permanent record of them here. So far as this record discloses, these charges are without foundation. The plaintiff appears to have been industrious, and to have manifested at all times a becoming solicitude for the welfare of her children. We do not find any error in this decree appealed from, and it is affirmed.

THOMAS & HOUSTON ELECTRIC CO. v. SIMON

COMMON CARRIERS—STREET RAILWAYS—RIGHT OF EMINENT DOMAIN.

1. Common carriers are classified as carriers of goods and carriers of passengers, because their employment is quasi public, and the public have an interest in the faithful performance of their duties.

2. The provisions of the statute for the condemnation of a right of way have little or no reference to corporations operated as street railways propelled by electricity or horse-power for local convenience, and the transportation of passengers, and do not authorize such to condemn private property for a right of way.

Dolph, Bellinger, Mallory & Simon, for appellant. Stott, Boise & Stott, for respondent.

LORD, J. This is an action to condemn a right of way for a street and suburban railway operated for the carrying of passengers. A demurrer was filed to the complaint, which was sustained by the court below, and the plaintiff refusing to proceed, judgment was rendered therein from which this appeal is taken. The contention of the plaintiff is that our statute authorizing the condemnation of land for a right of way contemplates the exercise of such power as much by street and suburban railways propelled by horse-power or electricity as railroads where cars are propelled by steam. The argument is that section 3239, Hill's Code, which provides that a corporation organized for the construction of "any railway" may appropriate land for a right of way, by the use of the phrase "any railway," ex vi termini, includes street and suburban railway corporations, organized to transport passengers only, and propelled by horse-power or electricity, as well as railroads authorized to transport passengers and freight, and propelled by steam; that the terms of the statute, viewed as a whole, indicates and imports that it was intended to authorize railway corporations to condemn lands for the use of their road, whether they were organized to carry passengers or freight, or both, or whether they were propelled by steam, or other power. To strengthen the construction that it is not necessary that the railway corporation, however propelled, should be formed to carry passengers and freight to entitle it to exercise the power of eminent domain, and condemn lands for its use, the language of section 3236 is relied upon as showing that this distinction is not observed with reference to navigation corporations authorized to construct portage railways, wherein it reads: "For the purpose of transporting freight or passengers across any portage on the line of such navigation in like manner and with like effect as if such corporation had been formed for such purpose." To this it is answered that every railway corporation for the construction of a railroad under the statute for the condemnation of lands is a common carrier, and that such a statute, being in derogation of common right, is not to be extended by implication. Section 3254 of the statute, authorizing the condemnation of land for a right of way, provides: "Every corporation formed under this chapter for the construction of a railway as to such road shall be deemed common carriers, and shall be entitled to collect and receive a just compensation for transportation of persons or property over such road." The argument is that as a common carrier of goods for hire, and while a common carrier, it may carry passengers and combine the two employments of carrying goods and passengers, as is almost universally done by railroads, yet, as a corporation for the construction of a railway, it cannot be deemed a common carrier unless it is formed to carry goods and passengers; that the legislature in delegating the right of eminent domain intended only that such railroads should be entitled to exercise it as were common carriers of freight and passengers. Hence a corporation could not exercise the right of eminent domain in the construction of a railway organized to transport passengers only, and not freight. Much of this argument is based on the technical definition of a common carrier as one who undertakes for hire to transport the goods of such as choose to employ him from place to place, so that before a corporation can be deemed a common carrier it must of necessity include in its business the transportation of goods or freight from place to place. There are usually in a railway act some sections which have the effect of putting the railway company on the footing of common carriers, (2 Rob. Pr. 524;) but, whether made so by general statute, or by their charters, railroad companies are held to be common carriers, (2 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 781.) And it is said when they are made so by the express provision of a statute, such provision will be merely declaratory of the law as it already existed. Hutch. Carr. § 67. A common carrier is such because his duties partake of a public character. "To bring a person," says Judge Story, "within the description of a common carrier, he must exercise it as a public employment. He must undertake to carry goods for persons generally, and must hold himself out as ready to engage in the transportation of goods for hire, as a business, and not as a casual occupation pro hac vice." Story, Bailm. § 495. To constitute one, then, a common carrier it is necessary that he should hold himself out as such. A carrier of passengers who undertakes to carry all persons who apply to him for transportation is engaged in a public employment, and is a public or common carrier of passengers. "A common carrier of passengers," says Judge Thompson, "is one who undertakes, for hire, to carry all persons indifferently who may apply for passage. Railroad companies, the owners of ships, ferries, omnibuses, street-cars, and stage-coaches are usually common carriers of passengers." Thomp. Carr. 26, note 1. It is true that carriers of passengers are not common carriers as to the persons of those whom they carry. But common carriers are classified as carriers of goods and as carriers of passengers. The reason is their employment is quasi public, and the public have an interest in the faithful discharge of their duties. "Every common carrier," said MCLKEY, J., "has the right to determine what particular line of business he will follow. If he elects to carry freight only, he will be under no obligation to carry passengers, and vice versa. So, if he holds himself out as a carrier of a particular kind of freight, or of freight generally, prepared for carriage in a particular way, he will only be bound to carry to the extent and in the manner proposed. He will, nevertheless, be a common carrier." Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis W. Ry. Co., 107 Ill. 451. A common carrier, then, may be either a carrier of passengers or freight, or both. The argument, then, that the plaintiff is not the kind of corporation authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain because it is only a carrier of passengers, and not of freight, would not deprive the plaintiff of its character as a common carrier, and, as such, to be deemed within the statute. This would result in giving to the statute a construction which would include both classes of carriers, but not necessarily that such carriers should combine both employments. It might be engaged in carrying passengers or freight, or both, and still be deemed a common carrier.

But it is apprehended that the safer way to determine whether the word "railway" or "common carrier" as used in the statute is to be confined to railroads operated by steam or railroads operated by other power, such as street railways, is to look at the context and intent, and in that way ascertain whether the plaintiff is such corporation organized for the construction of a railway as is contemplated by the statute to be invested with the power to condemn lands for the use of its road. While it is true that the word "railway" may include railroads operated by steam as well as those whose cars are propelled by some other power, yet it is common knowledge that such corporations as belong to the latter class are usually operated as street railways for local convenience. The plaintiff is an electric company and as such we know belongs to the class of corporations operated as street railways for the benefit of the local public. It was so understood at the argument, and the action is described as one to condemn "a right of way for a street and suburban railway for the carrying of passengers." I take it, then, that we are to consider the plaintiff as belonging to this class in determining whether it is such a corporation for the construction of a railway as is intended by the statute to be invested with the power to exercise the right to eminent domain. The statute provides (section 3239) that "a corporation organized for the construction of any railway," etc., (Id. § 3240,) "may appropriate so much of said land as may be necessary for the line of such road, not exceeding sixty feet in width, besides a sufficient quantity for workshops," etc., "and in case of a railway a sufficient quantity of such land in addition to that before specified in this section for necessary side tracks, depots, water-stations, cuttings, embankments," etc., "and such railway company shall have the right to cut down any standing timber in danger of falling upon its road," etc., "may cross, intersect, join, and unite with any other railway," etc., "and may make the necessary turnouts, sidings, and switches, and other conveniences," etc., (Id. § 3246,) "and all streams and other waters on the line of such road shall be safely and securely bridged except," etc., and (Id. § 3254,) "every corporation formed under this act for the construction of a railroad as to such road shall be deemed a common carrier," etc. Few, if any, of these provisions have any reference to the class of corporations to which the plaintiff belongs, and was scarcely intended to apply to them. They contemplate and authorize a railway to be constructed where none was built before, through the country, requiring bridges, cuttings, fillings, and embankments, and sometimes tunnels, through hills and mountains, and, also, the building of depots and stations for the accommodation of freight and passengers, of an-gine-houses, repair-shops, switches, and turnouts to enable the corporation to properly conduct its business. A railroad corporation, which must avail itself of the benefit of such a law to enable it to do these manifold things to build its railway and put it in operation, may well be considered, from the public nature of its employment, and the interest the public has in the proper conduct of its business, as a "common carrier," without a legislative declaration that it shall be deemed such. But it is plain that the provisions of such a law can have little or no reference to corporations organized and operated as street railways, propelled by electricity or horse-power, and intended to accommodate local convenience for the transportation of passengers. They contemplate a track laid upon an established street or highway, and are usually restricted to the bounds of the city, its vicinity, or adjacent towns, and generally derive their authority to lay their tracks upon such streets or highways from the municipality or county, and their construction is regarded by many adjudications as a legitimate use of such streets and highways, and an exercise of the right of public travel. This distinction as to the uses and purposes of each of such class of corporations is thus stated in Railway Co. v. City Ry. Co., 2 Dav. 178, by ROBERTSON, J.: "A railroad is for the use of the universal public in the transportation of all persons, baggage, and other freight; a street railway is dedicated to the more limited use of the local public for the more transient transportation of persons only, and within the limits of the city. In the technical sense, therefore, a street railway is not a railroad." It is not enough that a railway is for a public use to authorize the taking of private property, but the taking must be for a public use within the scope of its undertaking, and the object which it is to subserve. To authorize railroads operated for such purposes to take the private property of the citizen, and appropriate it to its use without his consent, the statutory authority for it must be plainly given; otherwise, the right does not exist. In view of these considerations, we do not think the provisions of the statute for the condemnation of a right of way apply to the plaintiff, so as to authorize it to take private property without the consent of the owner for its own use as a right of way. It follows that the judgment must be affirmed.

ON REHEARING.

LORD, J. Further consideration of our statute for the condemnation of a right of way by a railroad strengthens the conviction that it does not extend to or contemplate the business class of railways to which the plaintiff belongs. Few, if any, of its provisions have any reference or application to it as such. Nor has any authority been cited, or argument suggested, other than that the word "railroad" may include railways operated by steam or other power, to give it a different construction. In preference to construing the statute by this method, we thought the safer way to ascertain what the legislature intended was, as SHAW, C. J., said in Cleveland v. Norton, 6 Cush. 380, "to take the entire provisions of the act and ascertain, if possible, what the legislature intended." From that point of view, we thought it contemplated a railroad in the larger sense, and such as is considered a highway for travel and traffic, with its necessary adjuncts, and that it was to such railroads that the provisions had reference, and come within the design of the legislative grant, conferring on such the right of eminent domain for the various things specified as indispensable to effect the purposes of its organization, and essential to carry on its business. Nor do we find that the authorities differ with us in this regard. Referring to some of the things which must be regarded as among the acknowledged necessities for operating such a railroad, LE ALLEN, J., said in Re Railroad Co. v. Kip, 46 N. Y. 552: "But passenger depots, convenient and proper places for storing and keeping cars and locomotives when not in use, proper, secure, and convenient places having reference to the public interests to be subserved for the receipt and delivery of freight, and for the safe and secure keeping of property between the time of its receipt and dispatch, or after its arrival and discharge, and before its removal by the owner or consignee, are among the acknowledged necessities for the running and operating the railroad, to the proper prosecution of the business in the interests of the public. This may be regarded as indispensable to the accomplishment of the general purposes of the corporation, and the design of the legislative grant." In State v. Railroad Com'rs, 56 Conn. 312, 313, 15 Atl. Rep. 756, CARPENTER, J., said: "Depots for passengers and freight are essential parts of a railroad," and that "a railroad is incomplete without them." In speaking of the constitutional power of the legislature to authorize the taking of lands for the construction and operation of railroads, under the statutes of that state, LIBBEX, J., said: "It rests upon the proposition, now well established, that railroads are public highways, the great thoroughfares for public travel and commerce." Spofford v. Railroad Co., 66 Me. 39. In a note in 29 Amer. & Eng. R. Cas. p. 52, referring to Mr. Justice HARTAN's summing up of the legal status of railroads as public highways for travel and traffic, etc., the writer says: "Whence it may be concluded, and these conclusions are sustained by authority, that (1) railways are quasi public corporations, created for the purpose of conducting the business of common carriers of passengers and property upon their lines of railway, and for no other purpose; (2) as such they are engaged in a public service." From the point of view that railroads are highways for public travel and commerce, it is indispensable to the accomplishment of the purposes of their organization that they should have depots for passengers and freight and all the adjuncts necessary and essential to carry on their business. By looking at the entire provisions of our statute, we find all these matters provided for, and within the design of the legislative grant, whence we conclude that our statute contemplated a railway in this larger or comprehensive sense, and intended to confer the power of eminent domain on such as are highways for the carriage of passengers and freight, and not on the class of railways engaged in the business to which the plaintiff belongs. Our conclusion then is that the motion must be denied.

KING et al. v. BRIGHAM et al.

BOUNDARIES—MONUMENTS—EVIDENCE OF LOCATION.

1. The actual location of lines and monuments on the ground will control over courses and distances, and, if such monuments can be found, the courses and distances must give way. Approving Lewis v. Lewis, 4 Or. 178.

2. Where it is claimed lines and monuments do not agree with courses and distances, the evidence of their actual location must be so clear and satisfactory as to establish that fact to the entire satisfaction of the court or jury, and to place beyond question the actual location of the lines or monuments.

Appeal from circuit court Multnomah county; E. D. SHATTUCK, Judge.

This is a suit brought, under the statute of 1887, (Hill's Code, §§ 506-510,) by the respondents against J. R. Brigham, A. D. Tufts, Henry Fleickenstein, S. Julien Mayer, David Cole, D. Cavanaugh, Peter Esser, Mary Soderstrand, and the city of Portland, to settle a disputed boundary between the King and the Lownsdale donation land claim in Multnomah county, Or. The complaint is in the usual form, averring, "that the said boundary lines between the lands aforesaid is as follows, to-wit: Commencing at a point in the east boundary line of the Amos N. King donation land claim, which point is the north-west corner of the W. W. Chapman donation land claim, and also the south-west corner of the D. H. Lownsdale donation land claim, (this corner is marked by a stone monument;) thence northerly, along the east boundary line of the Amos N. King donation land claim, to a point which is ninety-three (93) feet easterly, measured along the south boundary line of B street, in said city, from a point where the south boundary line of said B street is intersected by the west boundary line of Fourteenth street, in said city, as extended by the common council of said city of Portland, county of Multnomah, and state of Oregon, said line being the easterly boundary line of the said plaintiffs' land, and the westerly boundary line of the defendants' land." The separate answers of each of the defendants, except the city of Portland, are substantially the same, and "deny that the boundary line commences on the east boundary line of the Amos N. King D. L. C. other than as hereinafter set forth, or that said point is the north-west corner of the W. W. Chapman and D. H. Lownsdale donation land claims, or that said line runs thence northerly, along the east boundary line of the Amos N. King donation claim, to a point which is 93 feet easterly, measured along the south boundary line of B street, from a point where said B street is intersected by the west boundary line of Fourteenth street, as alleged by plaintiff, or that said line is the easterly boundary line of plaintiffs' lands, or the westerly boundary line of the lands belonging to these defendants. These defendants, further answering, allege that the true and correct east boundary line of the A. N. King D. L. C., as established by the proper officers of the United States to said King, commences at a point on the baseline which is three chains east of the south-west corner of the south-west quarter of section 33, T. 1 N., of R. 1 E. of Willamette meridian, and running thence north, 20 degrees 15 min. east, 20.60 chains to a point near and intersecting the south line of B street, as now laid out and existing in said city of Portland, county of Multnomah, and state of Oregon; and that the south-west corner of the D. L. C. of said D. H. Lownsdale and Nancy Lownsdale, as established by the officers of the government of the United States, and patented to them, commences at a point on said line last described, north, 20 deg. 15 min. east, and 6.15 chains distant from the said commencement point of said King's D. L. C.; thence running north, 20 degrees 15 min. east, 14.45 chains, intersecting and near the south boundary of said B street, and distant in a westerly direction from the west line of Fourteenth street, as originally laid out, 77 feet, more or less, to the said east line of King's D. L. C., and the west boundary line of said Lownsdale D. L. C., as herein set forth. And for a further answer these defendants plead adverse possession for more than ten years." The reply denies the new matter set up in the answer, including the adverse possession of the defendants. The answer of the city of Portland, after denying and alleging substantially the same facts concerning the true boundary as in the answer of the other defendants, alleges that there is a public street through the lands of defendants Brigham and Tufts. This cause was referred to a referee to report the testimony and conclusions of fact and law, and, on the coming in of his report, the court below modified the same and found "that the eastern boundary line of the donation land claim of Amos N. King, and the western boundary line of the donation land claim of Daniel H. and Nancy Lownsdale, as originally run, is a line commencing at the stone monument at the N. W. corner of the donation land claim of W. W. Chapman, which is also the S. W. corner of the donation land claim of Daniel H. and Nancy Lownsdale; and thence running northerly on a line north, — degrees east, to a point in the south line of the John H. Couch donation land claim, which is seventy (70) feet from the west line of Fourteenth street, in the city of Portland, Oregon, sometimes called 'Old Fourteenth Street.'" The court also found that, "by reason of adverse possession of the plaintiff Amos N. King, as found by the referee, he (said Amos N. King) is the owner in fee-simple of all the lands described in the complaint which lie north of the south line of Morrison street, if extended westerly, and west of a line running north, 20 deg. 15 min. east, from the stone monument at the N. W. corner of the W. W. Chapman claim, to the south line of the John H. Couch donation land claim, where there is an iron post set by C. W. Burrage." A decree was entered against the city of Portland adjudging that Morrison street does not extend further west than the west line of Fourteenth street. A decree was then entered establishing the line between plaintiffs and defendants Cole, Cavanaugh, Soderstrand, and Esser as one running from the stone monument at the south-west corner of the Lownsdale claim to a point in the south line of the Couch claim, which is 70 feet west of the west line of Old Fourteenth street, and between plaintiffs and defendants Brigham and Tufts, as a line running from the stone monument at the north-west corner of the Chapman claim north, 30 deg. 15 min. east, to the iron post set by C. W. Burrage in the south line of the Couch claim. From this decree the defendants Brigham and Tufts and Cole appeal. The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

BEAN, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The matter sought to be established in this suit is the true location of the boundary line between the donation land claims of A. N. King and Daniel H. Lownsdale in Multnomah county, Or. In March, 1852, King, Lownsdale, and W. W. Chapman filed upon adjoining donation claims, on what was then unsurveyed public lands. The initial point of the King and Chapman claims, as stated in the notifications of the respective parties, is the same, being 3 chains east of the S. E. corner of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 33, township 1 N., range 1 E. According to the calls of the notification, certificates, field-notes, and patent of the King claim this boundary line runs from the initial point north 20 deg. 15 min. east, 20.60 chains; this line being the one in dispute in this case. The Chapman claim, from the initial point, according to the notification, runs north, 20 deg. 15 min. east, 6.15 chains. But the initial point, as mentioned in the field-notes of the survey and in the certificate of the Chapman claim, is .04 chains further east than as stated in the notification, and the course as given in the field-notes and certificate is north, 20 deg. 45 min. east, in place of north, 20 deg. 15 min. east, as given in the notification. The Lownsdale claim is what is known as a legal subdivision claim. The original plat map of the survey of the claims of King, Chapman, and Lownsdale, as approved by the surveyor general, shows the eastern boundary line of the King claim, and western boundary line of the Chapman and Lownsdale claims, to be a common line, and the south-east corner of the King claim to be the south-west corner of the Chapman claim, and the north-west corner of the Chapman claim to be the south-west corner of the Lownsdale claim. But the field-notes of the survey of these claims, as made by the United States deputy surveyor, does not mention or refer to any point or monument as common to the respective claims, or as common to any two of them. There are stone monuments at the south-east corner of the King claim, and the north-west corner of the Chapman claim, which are conceded, in this case, to have been located at the place designated by the government surveyor as the original corner of these claims. There is no dispute in this case as to the correct location of the original initial point of the King claim on the base line. It is also conceded by plaintiffs that a line projected from the initial point of the King claim, and running thence north, 20 deg. 15 min. east, 20.60 chains, the course and distance according to the calls in the notification, certificate, field-notes, and patent of the claim, will intersect the southern boundary line of the Couch claim about 75 feet westerly from the western boundary line of Fourteenth street, sometimes called "Old Fourteenth Street." This is the line defendants claim to be the true boundary line between the King and Lownsdale claims, and, therefore, it will be observed that plaintiffs admit, at the outset of this case, that the line defendants are contending for is the correct line, as called for by the course and distance given in the notification, certificate, field-notes, and patent of the King claim; but they seek to avoid the force of this fact by claiming: (1) That, since the King, Chapman, and Lownsdale claims are, or were intended to be, adjoining claims, to have a common division line, the true boundary line between them should be extended from the south-east corner of the King claim through the north-west corner of the Chapman claim, to the intersection with the Couch claim at the point on B street where there is an iron rod, set by C. W. Burrage; (2) that the location of the original north-east corner of the King claim, by the deputy United States surveyor, has been established by the evidence, and should control over courses and distances, this corner being, as plaintiffs claim, at the point in B street where the iron rod is located; and (3) that a line extended east from the located corner of the King claim, and, in this case, known as the corner under Judge Stearn's house, according to the course and distance given in the field-notes of the King claim, will establish the south-east corner of the claim at the point in B street where the iron rod, before referred to, is located. These claims we will notice in the order claimed.

1. The south-east corner of the King claim is the last corner established by the government surveyor in running the exterior lines of the claim. The field-notes show the claim was surveyed by commencing at the initial point, in the base line, and running thence north, 20 deg. 15 min. east, 20.60 chains, and so on around the claim to the south-east corner, and thence a certain course and distance to the place of beginning. There is no reason shown in this case why this corner is any more nearly correct than any other known corner of the claim, and certainly no sufficient reason was suggested by counsel why it should prevail over the known initial point of the survey, and we have been unable to find any. The claim that the north-west corner of the Chapman donation should govern in the location of the line in dispute may be disposed of by saying that such corner is nowhere mentioned or referred to in the courses or distances given in the field-notes, notifications, certificate, or patent of the King claim, nor mentioned as one of the calls in the description of such claim; and, besides, the field-notes of the Chapman claim show that the initial point of the claim is four links east of the initial point of the King claim, and the course is 30 min. east of the corner of the King survey, so that, according to the field-notes of the two claims, the north-west corner of the Chapman donation must necessarily be east of the line of the King claim in dispute in this case, and any line extended from or through this corner cannot be the true east boundary line of the King claim.

The law is well settled in this state that the actual location of the lines and monuments on the ground will control over courses and distances, and, if such monuments can be ascertained, the courses and distances must give way. Raymond v. Coffey, 5 Or. 132; Goodman v. Myrick, Id. 65; Lewis v. Lewis, 4 Or. 178. The initial point of the King claim being undisputed, if the monument at the north-east corner of the claim, as actually located, can be ascertained, the boundary line in dispute will be a straight line from the initial point to such corner. Mr. King, one of the plaintiffs, is the only witness who undertakes to testify, of his own knowledge, concerning the actual location of this corner. He says that he saw Leland, the deputy United States surveyor, who surveyed his claim, set a post at the north-east corner thereof in 1859 or 1860, but that he cannot tell what became of the post, or how long it remained, but thinks at least two years; that afterwards he fenced in a small field, the east line of which was on the line as surveyed by Leland, but he would not be positive whether he built the fence while the stake was there, or not, but the witness tree was there. Too long ago; cannot tell when he fenced it, but the fence stood over 20 years, and until New Fourteenth street bridge was built. The fence was 30 or 40 feet from the post, and a little east of it; and the north end of the fence was 30 or 40 feet from the east end of the bridge. Thinks the fence did not run quite up to the post. There was a pretty steep bank there,—a kind of cove. It might be 10 or 15 feet from the post to the end of the fence. The fence ran southerly something over two blocks, a block and a half. "I would not be positive in this." Mr. E. J. Jeffreys testifies that King pointed out the stake to him some 21 or 22 years ago. "My memory is that it was a wooden stake; nothing peculiar about it that I can remember. B street has since been filled. This street has been filled over sixteen years I think. Saw old fence supposed to be on the line. This fence was built in 1868 or 1869, and remained until New 14th street bridge was built, in 1883. The stake pointed out to me by King was nearly thirty feet east of New 14th street bridge. The fence ran nearly parallel with the fence then and now standing west of the property claimed by Cavanaugh, Soderstrand, and Brigham and Tufts. Don't understand the post I mentioned as a post to designate a corner of the King claim, with reference to the compromise line with Couch. All I know about it being the N. E. corner in B street is what Mr. King told me." J. E. Oliver, another witness for plaintiffs, says that, "prior to the building of the New 14th street bridge, there was an old fence that ran along to the best of my recollection. It started off the hill at this side of the gulch, about the end of the bridge in the south side, run north, and would intersect B street about thirty feet east of Fourteenth Street bridge. This is as near as I can come to it, to the best of my recollection; everything has changed so. In some respects things have changed so in that neighborhood during the last fifteen years that my memory is very indistinct in regard to location, in others, it is not. Don't know where the King east line is, other than what Mr. King told me." This is substantially all the testimony of plaintiffs as to the actual location of the north-east corner of the King claim. On the part of defendants, W. S. Chapman testifies that while he was city surveyor from July, 1872, to July, 1874, he ran the east line of the King claim, commencing at the initial point, and running on the course and for the distance called for in the original field-notes of the survey, and that the line so run would bring the corner about 15 or 20 feet north of the south line of B street, and between 70 and 80 feet west of the west line of Old Fourteenth street, and he thinks about 15 or 20 feet west of the east line of New Fourteenth street. Being asked if he discovered any post or witness tree in what is now New Fourteenth street, in the north line of the King claim, and south line of the Couch claim, he says: "I started from King's initial point, and ran the course and distance, which brought me to what ought to be his north-east corner. I then looked about for the witness tree called for in the notes. This I found, it having been blown over, falling northward, about one-half of the large roots on the main side of the tree being in the ground, and still connected with the trunk of the tree, about thirty feet of which was still intact, the balance of the tree having been cut up and hauled away. On this tree, on the under side thereof, and a quarter of the way from the under side, from the middle of the under side to the middle of the west side of the tree, I discovered the letters 'C 51.' I should now think that that tree was fully 36 inches in diameter at the time I speak of. I made allowance by careful measurements, so as to get the position of the bearing tree when it was standing erect. Then I laid off the course and measured the distance stated in the field-notes, and at such distance set a post for the true north-east corner of the A. N. King D. L. claim. I then ran the west line of Old 14th street, and took the distance from the west line of Old 14th street to this corner as set by me, which distance I found to be 70 feet." This corner claimed to have been found by Chapman corresponds with the description of this line as found in the field-notes of the King survey. It appears from the testimony that, soon after the Chapman survey, the old fence referred to by King, Jeffreys, and Oliver was torn down, and has never been replaced, and that parties owning property south of where the old fence stood moved their fences onto the line as surveyed by Chapman, and have maintained them there ever since, and, as far as the evidence in this case shows, without objection from King; and, further, the testimony of Tufts and Mayer, who were desirous of purchasing property along what is now the disputed line, tends to show that Mr. King did not claim that his line extended east of the line as run by Chapman; and, while the rule of law is, as heretofore stated, that actual location of the lines and monuments on the ground will control over courses and distances, we think that, where it is claimed that such lines and monuments do not agree with the courses and distances, the evidence of their actual location should be so clear and satisfactory as to establish the fact to the entire satisfaction of the court, and to place beyond question the actual location of the line or monument. In this case, after a careful examination of the evidence, we are not satisfied that the actual location of the corner, as claimed by King, has been proven by that clear and satisfactory testimony the imperative requirements of the law demand. The stake only stood for about two years; no effort was made to preserve it; and the fence by which it is sought to establish the location of the corner was not built until 1863 or 1869, some six or seven years after it is admitted the stake disappeared. Mr. King himself could not have been very positive about the matter, else he would not have permitted the fence to be torn down after the Chapman survey, and especially he would not have permitted parties owning property along this line to have inclosed and occupied up to the Chapman line from 1874 to the commencement of this suit, without objection on his part, so that, if there was no other evidence as to the location of the corner, but that offered by plaintiffs, we would be compelled to hold it unsatisfactory; but, when taken in connection with Chapman's testimony, we are irresistibly led to the conclusion that Mr. King must be mistaken as to the location of the stake set by Leland. It is true Mr. King attempts to account for the witness tree found by Chapman by saying that it must have been a witness tree for the stake set by the surveyor who surveyed his claim in 1850, and that afterwards Chapman, Lonsdale, and himself, by mutual agreement, changed the line in question by making the corner further east. If such agreement was ever made, it must have been before King filed on his claim, for there is no evidence in this case of any changes in his original filing, and the field-notes of the survey made by Leland, some seven or eight years afterwards, corresponds with the courses and distances given in the original notification. The court below found the true north-east corner of King's claim to be according to the Chapman line, but held the true east boundary line of the claim to be a line from the north-west corner of the Chapman claim to this corner. By commencing at the north-west corner of the Chapman claim to extend the line, for the reasons already stated, we think the learned judge was in error.

3. What has already been said about the uncertainty of the south-east corner of the King claim as a proper monument from which to extend the east line of the claim applies to the corner at the south-west corner of the Couch claim, with this additional suggestion: That the evidence shows that this corner was established by a surveyor who surveyed the Couch claim, and as a corner of that claim, and not of the King claim. The court below, while finding the north-east corner of the King claim to be as claimed by defendants, nevertheless held that the plaintiffs had acquired title by adverse possession up to the line as claimed by them, as against appellants Brigham and Tufts. In this we think there was error. The evidence shows that Mr. King held this possession, if at all, under mistake or ignorance as to his true line, and with no intention to claim beyond the true line when discovered. Such a possession is not adverse, and cannot ripen into a title as against the real owner. Caufield v. Clark, 17 Or. 473, 21 Pac. Rep. 443. It follows therefore as to these appellants, the decree below must be reversed, and between them and plaintiffs the boundary line established was a line run as follows: Commencing at the point on the base line 3 chains east of the S. E. corner of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 33, township 1 N., range 1 E., in Multnomah county, Or., running thence north, 20 deg. 15 min., east, 20.60 chains to a point near and intersecting the south line of B street, in the city of Portland; and that this suit be remanded to the court below, with directions to appoint commissioners, as by law provided, to locate and mark out the line as by this court determined.

SAUER v. MEYER. (No. 13,699.)

FORFEITURE OF LEASE—RE-ENTRY—RIGHTS OF SUBTENANT.

A lease provided that the rent should be payable on the 1st of each month in advance. It also gave the lessee the right to sublet, and provided "that, if any rent shall be due and unpaid for * * * ten days after the same should have been paid under the conditions hereof, * * * then it shall be lawful for the said party of the first part to re-enter," etc. The rent for three months being due and unpaid, the lessor agreed that it should stand until the 1st of the next month. Held, in ejectment by the lessor against a sublessee of half the property, that, forfeiture having been waived for those months, the action could not be maintained until demand for the rent had been made on or after the 10th of the next month.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Luis Obispo county; V. A. GREGG, Judge.

BEICHER, C. C. This is an action of ejectment. The court below gave judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll. The facts of the case, as found by the court, are, in substance, as follows: In November, 1883, the plaintiff leased the demanded premises for the term of ten years and one month from the 1st day of December following, the rental during the last five years of the term to be "forty dollars per month, payable in gold coin on the first of each and every month in advance." The lease provided that at the expiration, or sooner determination thereof, the lessees should have the right to remove from the premises all improvements placed thereon by them, and to sublet the premises or any part thereof, and "that if any rent shall be due and unpaid for the period of ten days after the same should have been paid under the conditions hereof, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for the said party of the first part to re-enter the said premises and remove all persons therefrom, in the manner prescribed by law." During the year 1889, the defendant was in possession, as sublessee, of one-half of the leased premises. On the 1st day of October of that year the whole rent, $120, for the months of August, September, and October was then due and unpaid, and on that day the plaintiff agreed orally with the defendant's lessor, who was one of the original lessees, that the same should stand unpaid until the 1st day of November following. On the 1st day of November the plaintiff demanded of the defendant the payment of all rents then due, and the defendant denied that he owed plaintiff, and refused to pay anything. On the 4th day of the last-named month this action was commenced, and on that day, before defendant knew of its commencement, he offered to pay the amount due plaintiff for rent under the lease, and asked the amount due, and told her he was ready to give her a check for the same on a local bank, in which he had money sufficient to pay the sum due. The plaintiff refused to tell defendant the amount due, but made no objection to the offer of payment by check. On the 26th day of November, and before defendant filed his answer herein, he offered, in writing, to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $160, in gold coin, the same being the amount due for rent under the lease up to and including that month, and the plaintiff refused to accept the same, but specified no objection thereto. The case was tried in December, and on the trial thereof, and before its submission, the defendant brought into court, and delivered to the clerk of the court, for the use of the plaintiff, the sum of $220, the said amount being more than enough to pay all the rent then due and the costs of the suit. The value of the improvements placed on the premises by the lessees is $5,000. Upon these facts, we think the defendant was entitled to have judgment entered in his favor.

To maintain an action of ejectment, the plaintiff must show that he was entitled to the possession of the demanded premises at the time he commenced his action. Hestres v. Brennan, 37 Cal. 385; Bank v. Hynes, 50 Cal. 195. The appellant here claims that she had a right to recover, because there had been a forfeiture of the lease for non-payment of rent. Forfeitures are not favored, and our Civil Code contains this provision: "A condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created." Section 1442. To give a landlord a right of re-entry for non-payment of rent, a demand of the rent, upon or after the last day which the lessee has to pay, is essential to complete the forfeiture and enable him to maintain an action. Tayl. Landl. & Ten. (8th Ed.) § 297; Wood, Landl. & Ten. (2d Ed.) § 514. It does not appear here that any demand for the payment of the rent due in August and September was made during those months, and the agreement of October 1st that the rents for August, September, and October should stand unpaid until November 1st, was a clear waiver of any forfeiture, if demand had been made. The plaintiff demanded on November 1st that the defendant pay all the rents then due, and, conceding that this demand was sufficient, and that the rents should then have been paid by defendant, notwithstanding he was only a subtenant of half the leased property, still no forfeiture then occurred, or could occur, until the expiration of 10 days thereafter, for the reason that the lease only provided that the lessor should have the right of re-entry in case "any rent shall be due and unpaid for the period of 10 days after the same should have been paid." As the action was commenced four days after the demand, it was evidently prematurely brought. Other grounds are urged for the affirmance of the judgment, but they need not be considered. We advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; HAYNE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is affirmed.

URTON v. WOOLSEY. (No. 13,699.)

VENUE—ACTIONS TO FORECLOSE VENDOR'S LIENS.

The complaint averred plaintiff's right to enforce and foreclose a vendor's lien on lands in another county. After the complaint was filed, the prayer was amended so as to expressly ask for foreclosure of the lien. Held, that under the provisions of Const. Cal. art. 6, § 5, that "all actions for * * * the enforcement of liens upon real estate shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof, * * * is situated," the court had no jurisdiction over the case, and no authority to enter judgment of foreclosure.

Jud C. Brusie, S. R. Hart, and Taylor &

Hall, for appellant. Graham & Monson, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Judgment was given for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment; also from an order refusing a change of venue; also from an order refusing to set aside a default, and vacate the judgment because taken against him through surprise, excusable neglect, etc. The motion for change of venue was on the ground that defendant resided in a county other than the one in which the action was commenced; and perhaps the denial of the motion may be sustained on the very technical ground that the notice and demand state that "defendant is a resident of" and "resides in" the other county, instead of stating, in the language of the Code, that he so resided "at the commencement of the action." It is possible also that, on the record before us, the ruling of the court denying the motion to open the default cannot be reached, although that denial seems to have been somewhat harsh, because while the defendant resided in Amador county, and his attorneys in Sacramento, (the cause pending in Fresno,) the motion for change of venue and a demurrer to the complaint were denied and overruled on September 20th, in the absence of defendant and his attorneys. No leave to answer was given. Default was entered the next day, and final judgment was entered on the 23d. It is not necessary, however, to thoroughly examine these questions, because, in our opinion, judgment itself should be reversed for want of jurisdiction.

The action was commenced in the superior court of Fresno county. The complaint sets forth a written contract between plaintiff as vendor, and defendant as vendee, for the sale and purchase of certain lands situated in the county of Tulare, and avers facts showing plaintiff's right to enforce and foreclose a lien upon said lands for the purchase money. The prayer of the complaint, as originally filed, did not ask in terms for a foreclosure of the lien; but a short time afterwards, and while an amendment could be made as a matter of right, the plaintiff amended the prayer of the complaint so as to make it ask expressly for a foreclosure of the lien, and the judgment forecloses said lien, and decrees the sale of said lands. The action, therefore, is an action to enforce a lien upon real property; and the constitution provides that "all actions for . . . the enforcement of liens upon real estate shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof, affected by such action or actions, is situated." The superior court of Fresno had, therefore, no jurisdiction over the case, and no authority to enter the judgment. We do not just now recall any case where this point has been directly decided by this court, although in Gurnee v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 88, the law is clearly assumed to be as above stated; but we are fully satisfied, upon principle, that no court has jurisdiction to entertain an action like the one at bar unless it has been commenced in the county where the land is situated. The judgment is reversed, with directions to the superior court to dismiss the action.

OHM v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (No. 13,689.)<sup>1</sup>

MEXICAN GRANTS—VALIDITY—LIMITATIONS—PLEADING.

1. A Mexican grant of 800 varas square, "as a place called Rincon, embraced within the limitation of Yerba Buena," is so vague and uncertain that nothing passes by force of the grant alone, nor will it be helped out by possession taken under it by the grantee, as the Mexican law, then in force, required possession to be given "by judicial authority, with the citation of all those bounded upon him."

2. Such grant is also fatally defective, where the original application, to which is attached each successive paper or certificate up to and including the final grant, fails to show on its face that the grant was made with the approval of the pueblo, of the governor, and of the departmental assembly, and that a record of such fact was made in the public archives, as required by the laws of Mexico then in force.

3. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1875, subd. 3, which permits courts to take judicial notice of the acts of the judicial department of the state, the supreme court will judicially notice the vacation of a decree confirming a Mexican grant.

4. One who alleges that he has a perfect title to land under a Mexican grant, not barred by the statute of limitations, may maintain a legal action for the possession, and there is no necessity for the interference of a court of equity to enable him to assert his rights.

5. Since the passage of St. Cal. 1863, p. 327, which gives five years "from the date of its passage" in which one claiming title to land under a Spanish or Mexican grant may commence an action for its enforcement, the want of confirmation, patent, or survey of such a grant by the United States government has not operated to interrupt the running of the statute.

6. Where a pleader, in his complaint, alleges a fact, and then sets out the written evidence on which he relies for proof of the fact, the complaint will be held good for only what the evidence proves.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

A. Everett Ball and J. M. Kinney, for appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding and Geo. Flournoy, Jr., City Atty., for respondents.

Fox, J. This is an action in equity for a decree declaring the appellant to be the owner of certain premises situate in the city and county of San Francisco, commonly called, in early times, the "Sherrebeck Claim," and adjudging that the defendants hold the legal title in trust for plaintiff; and also for rents and profits up to the time of the filing of the complaint, in the sum of $1,500,000, and at the rate of $250,000 per month from that date (August 1, 1885) to the date of judgment. Defendants demurred to the complaint on several grounds, and, among others, that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that plaintiff's claim was stale; also that it was barred by the provisions of sections 318, 319, 322, and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The demurrer was sustained, and defendants had judgment, from which plaintiff appeals.

In his complaint, plaintiff claims as successor in interest of Peter T. Sherrebeck, the alleged grantee of a Mexican grant of a tract of land 800 varas square, within the pueblo of San Francisco. He does not content himself with alleging the ultimate fact of grant and title, but sets out with great particularity all the proceedings had in applying for, and in the making and delivery of, the alleged grant. He shows that a pueblo was already established; that the land was within the pueblo; that the applicant applied to the prefect of the district for a grant; that the prefect, as the law required he should do, referred the application to the alcalde of the pueblo, who reported the land vacant, and the applicant as possessing the requisite qualifications; but that, in his opinion, only land upon which to build a house and corral, and to plant, can be granted to him, which means that only a house lot of 50 varas square, and a planting lot of 200 varas square, could be granted to him. Whereupon the prefect, according to the allegations of the complaint, made a grant to the applicant of 800 varas square, "at a place called 'Rincon,' embraced within the limitation of Yerba Buena," which grant is set out in the complaint, and from which the quotation just made is copied. It contained no description or boundaries whatever, other than that so quoted. It did not require that juridical possession be given, and the complaint does not show that any ever was given. It, however, alleges that under it the grantee took possession of 800 varas square, claimed to be the property now sought to be recovered. The complaint fails to show a valid grant. The description given in the paper grant was so vague and uncertain that nothing would pass by force of this paper alone, nor would it be helped out by possession taken under it, by the grantee. Under the law, juridical possession by the public authorities was required to be given. "No person," reads the law, "though his grant be older than others, can take possession for himself, or set limits to his landed property, unless it be done by judicial authority, with the citation of all those bounded upon him, (colindantes,) for whatever is done contrary to this will be null and of no validity or effect." "As the grantee could not locate his land by his own survey, it would seem a necessary conclusion that he could not do so by mere occupation, and the assertion of a claim to any particular place." Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 411. This survey or juridical possession made or given was requisite, in order to attach the grant, if it was one having any force whatever, to any specific tract of land, and must have been made by competent authority. Steinbach v. Moore, 30 Cal. 508, affirmed in More v. Steinbach, 127 U. S. 79, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1067; Leese v. Clark, 18 Cal. 536.

This grant was also fatally defective in other particulars. It is a matter of common knowledge, as well as of law, that the initial paper, in all these cases of Mexican grants, was the petition, or application for a grant. Each successive paper or certificate, to and including the final grant, and the certificate of juridical possession, was indorsed upon or attached to this petition, so that when the last step was taken which perfected the title, the grantee had in his possession all the original papers in the case constituting one instrument, records of the different parts thereof having been made in the public archives as the proceedings progressed, and this instrument constituted his muniment of title. In this case the plaintiff has alleged that the grant was made with the approval of the pueblo, the governor of the territory, and of the republic of Mexico. The law required that it should be so made, and that a record of the fact should be made in the public archives. The plaintiff has made his paper title a part of his complaint, by setting it out in hæc verba. By so doing, he has proved that the averments of his complaint above referred to are not true. The grant was not made with the approval of the pueblo, but against the objection of the chief executive officer, who spoke for the pueblo, as shown upon the face of the paper pleaded. The paper fails to show that it was with the approval of the governor of the territory, or of the republic of Mexico. Without such approval, attested by the signature of the governor, and the order of the departmental assembly, it was without authority of law. Such was the rule, even where the lands were not municipal. Luco v. U. S., 23 How. 515, 543. Being municipal lands, the fact of the grant must be registered in the public archives of the municipality. S. F. Land Titles, p. 144, art. 17; Dwinelle's Colonial History of San Francisco, addenda, p. 11; Plan of Pictic, § 17; Donner v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 508. The paper fails to show registration anywhere, either in the archives of the nation, the department, or the municipality. The complaint alleges that it was recorded by the prefect in the archives and registers of his prefecture; but the paper fails to show even such recording, and there was no law making the archives of the prefect, if he kept any, public archives for the registration of land-titles. It may be said that since there is an allegation of the recording, whether it was recorded or not becomes a matter of proof, and cannot be questioned on demurrer. The answer to this is that the fact is one which ought to appear upon the paper itself according to the laws and usages of the country; that these laws, usages, and customs of the country are matters of which the court will take judicial notice, as well as of the principal fact that they are not so recorded. Fremont v. U. S., 17 How. 567; Romero v. U. S., 1 Wall. 721. The complaint is to be taken most strongly against the pleader. When he alleges a fact, and then acts out the written evidence upon which he relies for proof of the fact, the complaint will be held good for only what the evidence proves.

There are other points of objection taken to the validity of this grant, but they do not need to be considered here. To obviate these defects the complaint alleges decree of confirmation of this grant, on the 5th day of December, 1859, and sets out the decree. This decree is equally indefinite with the grant in the matter of description, and on its face requires a survey and location. More than 25 years had passed after this alleged decree before the filing of this complaint, and there is no allegation of survey whatever. But more than this; the pleading of this decree was unwarranted in law, and almost without precedent in the history of jurisprudence. The decree itself was vacated and set aside within six months afterwards, and there is no decree of confirmation of the grant. This fact does not appear upon the face of the complaint, but it is a matter of common history and knowledge of the country, and is an act of the judicial department of the government of the United States, of which this court will take judicial notice, under subdivision 3, § 1875, Code Civil Proc. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 697, 22 Pac. Rep. 26, 131; Romero v. U. S., 1 Wall. 742.

Plaintiff's cause of action, if any he ever had, is both stale and barred by the statute of limitations. There is no pretense in the complaint that the plaintiff or his grantor have been in possession of this property since the date of the treaty of peace, in 1848,—42 years since. It is alleged that the pueblo became a municipal corporation, by the name of the "City of San Francisco," (the predecessor of the present municipal defendant,) in April, 1850; that it applied for confirmation of its title to four square leagues, including said 800 varas square, in 1852; that, pending the proceedings thereunder, it disputed the title of said Sherrebeck, and the location of the same. According to the rules of construction of pleadings, it must be held that this is an admission that the title was disputed by the defendant as early as the institution of such proceedings,—July 1, 1852. Plaintiff's grantor had been then at least four years out of possession. If, as plaintiff claims, he had a perfect title under the Mexican government, or under the pueblo, his cause of action then at once arose, and he could at once, and if his title be, as claimed, a perfect one, and not barred, he can still maintain his action at law, for the recovery of the possession of said property. That such an action could be maintained upon such a title as he claims this to be was held by this court as early as Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 323; affirmed in Cohas v. Ralsin, 3 Cal. 443; Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 616; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 231; and has never been overruled. According to his own theory of the case, there has therefore never been a necessity for a resort to a court of equity to assert his right. He had ample remedy at law, and a court of equity will not interfere.

But he has slept so long upon his rights, if he ever had any, that he cannot now recover at law, and the same rule that forbids his recovery at law forbids it in equity. His right of action accrued, and the statute of limitations commenced to run against him, at the latest, July 1, 1852. Before the expiration of five years, however, the statute of limitations was amended, so that the action could be maintained if commenced within five years from the time of final confirmation of the title by the government of the United States, or its legally constituted authorities, if the title was one derived from the Spanish or Mexican government. St. 1855, p. 109. In 1863, the statute was again amended, giving five years from the date of the passage of that act in which to commence the action, where title was claimed under the Spanish or Mexican government, unless five years had already run since the date of confirmation. St. 1863, p. 327. Since the passage of that act, there has been no disability on account of want of confirmation, patent, or survey, against the running of the statute of limitations. A careful reading of that act can leave no doubt that the statute of limitations commenced to run in favor of the city and county of San Francisco, and its grantees, for the lands embraced in the grant to the pueblo of which it or they were in possession at the date of that act, (April 18, 1863,) no matter whether it be held that the confirmation of the grant was the act of congress of July 1, 1864, conveying the title to the land embraced within the Van Ness Ordinance, (of which the Sherrebeck claim was a part;) the act of March 8, 1866, granting and relinquishing to the city the four leagues confirmed by the decree of the circuit court of May 18, 1865; the date of the final survey of the four leagues, or of the patent to the city. There can be no doubt that five years, without reference to date of confirmation, is the limitation under the Codes, and to our minds it is equally clear that such is the limitation under the act of 1863, when section 6, as there amended, is carefully analyzed, as it needs to be, for it is not clearly constructed, and at first reading is somewhat difficult of comprehension. This court, however, seems to have reached the same conclusion, as to its proper construction and effect, as long ago as San Jose v. Trimble, 41 Cal. 536. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; WORKS, J.; PATERSON, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment on the first point discussed; but what is said about the statute of limitations is very important, and may lead to serious consequences in other cases. It is the general understanding that the statute does not begin to run until after a patent. Does not this opinion overturn that doctrine?

In re OSBORN'S ESTATE. (No. 13,372.)

EXECUTORS—LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF CO-EXECUTOR.

1. An executor being about to leave the state temporarily, turned over to his co-executor the funds in his hands. Thereafter he took no part in the management of the estate, but his co-executor attended to the business. The executors filed a joint account four years after the time prescribed by the statute. At this time said executor knew that there was a shortage which he personally made up, without reporting it. He never made any effort to have a final settlement of such account. Held, that his co-executor having thereafter used the funds on hand at the time of such report, and having become insolvent, said executor was liable therefor.

2. The fact that the money and sole management of the estate was turned over to said co-executor, with the concurrence of one having a power of attorney to collect moneys due non-resident beneficiaries of the estate, in no way relieves said executor from responsibility.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. V. COFFEY, Judge.

Cope, Boyd & Fifield, for appellant. Selden S. Wright and Wright & Wright, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. Edmond Saul and the appellant, William E. Straut, were appointed executors of the will of William G. Osborn, and entered upon the discharge of their duties October 28, 1867. The value of the estate for which they accounted was $32,667.20. Claims were presented amounting in all to only $1,560.74. Nearly all of the heirs and devisees were non-residents, and constituted Hon. Seth M. Richmond, of New York, their attorney in fact with authority "to collect, receive, sue for, demand, and give acquittances for all legacies, moneys, and property due and payable from the executors and trustees of the estate, and to make and execute full and ample receipts therefor." In February, 1868, Mr. Richmond came to this state, and it was determined by the executors, with his concurrence, to sell beach and water-lot No. 588. It was sold for the sum of $23,500, $10,000 cash, and the remainder on mortgage. The mortgage was assigned to Mr. Richmond, and there was paid to him the sum of $1,500, leaving $8,500 of the purchase money received in the hands of the executors. Each executor deposited one-half of that sum ($4,250) to his credit in the Hibernia Savings Bank, receiving a pass-book therefor. Appellant, having been called east on business, delivered his pass-book, containing his account with the Hibernia Bank to his co-executor, and transferred the account to him. Saul drew out the moneys deposited in Straut's name prior to September 1, 1868, and thereafter had the deposit entered in his own book. Richmond was aware of Straut's intention to leave the money and business of the estate in the care of Saul, and made no objection thereto. No account was filed until September 3, 1872, and no proceedings were ever taken for its settlement by the executors. No other account or exhibit was filed in the probate or superior courts until 1886, when the executors were, under a citation directed to them, ordered to file a final account of their administration. Straut only was served, Saul being absent from the state. Appellant filed an account on the 27th day of October, 1886, showing that the only moneys of the estate received by him was said sum of $4,250, deposited in the Hibernia Bank, and subsequently turned over to his co-executor, and the further sum of $650, received by appellant in March, and immediately remitted to the attorney for the heirs. From the time of the issuance of letters to the executors until the sale of beach lot 588, appellant had taken no active part in the management of the estate—had not received or disbursed any of its property. All collections made subsequent to the sale of that lot were made by Saul. Straut was absent from the state from March to October, 1868. During all that time Saul was in business for himself, in good standing and credit in the community. At the time the account was filed in 1872, appellant knew that there was a shortage in the account of his co-executor, and contributed about $2,500 to make it up, believing himself to be liable for one-half of the shortage. When the account of 1872 was rendered, there was in Saul's hands, belonging to the estate, the sum of $3,714.43, of which $3,060 was collected subsequent to January 1, 1869. Appellant took no part in the management of the estate after his return from the east in 1868. Saul became insolvent, but the precise time of his insolvency is not shown by the evidence. Appellant states in his testimony that he does not know what was the financial condition of Saul at the time the account of 1872 was filed, but he thinks he was then in business for himself; that Saul left this state about seven or eight years ago, and when last heard from was living in Mexico. The court below held that the appellant was indebted to the estate, as executor, in the sum of $3,716.70, less the sum of $1,000 allowed him as commissions. In view of the fact that there was no intentional wrong on the part of Mr. Straut, the court did not allow interest on the principal sum found to be due the estate.

An executor, who has money of the estate in his hands, and turns it over to his co-executor, or who actively assists to put it into the hands of his co-executor, is generally liable for any misapplication of it by the latter. There are exceptions to this general rule; but to avoid liability in such cases it must appear that good reasons existed for turning over the money to the co-executor, and that in allowing him to keep, control and disburse it, he acted in good faith, without notice of any purpose to misapply it, and with reasonable prudence and discretion. In the Sanderson Case, 74 Cal. 213, 15 Pac. Rep. 753, the court said: "It has sometimes been broadly stated that, if an executor turn over assets which he has received to his co-executor, he becomes responsible for the due application and administration of those assets by his co-executor." There are cases which go to that extent. Crosse v. Smith, 7 East, 246; Douglass v. Satterlee, 11 Johns. 16; Edmonds v. Crenshaw, 14 Pet. 166. But this is not a universal rule. There may be circumstances which would render it, not only appropriate, but necessary to make such a transfer of the assets of an estate by an executor to his co-executor in good circumstances and credit—such as inability to act by reason of sickness or imprisonment. Sterrett's Appeal, 2 Pen. & W. 419. The liability of the executor who has thus intrusted to his co-executor the fund for which he was himself primarily responsible, depends upon the circumstances of each case. Good faith alone will not save him from liability, nor will bad faith on the part of his co-executor subject him to it. If good reason existed for turning over the money to his co-executor, and if, in allowing him to keep, control, and disburse it, he acted in good faith, and with reasonable care and prudence, so that it cannot be said those who are entitled to receive it have lost it through his fault or negligence, he will not be held responsible. A wrongful act or omitted duty lies at the foundation of his liability. He has the right to assume in all cases that his co-executor is an honest man. The testator by his appointment recommended him as such, and the fact that he is insolvent should create no suspicion upon which to base a want of confidence. An honest executor who is poor is as worthy of confidence and trust as an honest executor who is rich. McKim v. Aulbach, 130 Mass. 484; Wilson's Appeal, 115 Pa. St. 101, 9 Atl. Rep. 473; Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. 534; Oriniston v. Olcott, 84 N. Y. 346; Langford v. Gascoyne, 11 Ves. 333. But, where the estate or part of it has been lost through the failure of the executors to perform some duty required of them by the trust, such as to collect debts before the statute of limitations has barred action thereon, to preserve the estate, to prevent waste, etc., they are liable jointly and severally. In the Sanderson Case, supra, the court said: "The obligations of co-executors arise from their contract, and are several. Although one may in some cases make himself liable by placing the other in a position to do wrong, or by aiding him in his acts of misfeasance, the liability is still the several liability of each. And this is so, even if it be conceded the devisees or legatees may under some circumstances claim both to be liable. * * * If an executor stands by and sees a breach of trust committed, or about to be committed, by a co-executor, and does nothing to protect the estate, or to call the defaulting executor to account, he is liable. * * * When an executor is guilty of neglect with reference to assets in the possession of his co-executor, he is not made liable upon the theory that the assets are in the possession of both, which, in fact, they are not, but upon his neglect in delivering them to his co-executor without good cause, or in not seeing to it that they were taken out of the possession of the co-executor, or were not by him misapplied or lost." This decision is in line with current authority, and with the provisions of the Code. Section 2239, Civil Code, provides that "a trustee is responsible for the wrongful acts of a co-trustee to which he consented, or which, by his negligence, he enable the latter to commit, but for no others." See, also, Story, Eq. Jur. § 1284, note; Croft v. Williams, 88 N. Y. 384; Lincoln v. Wright, 4 Beav. 427; Welgand's Appeal, 28 Pa. St. 471. Applying these principles to the case at bar, we find no way to escape the conclusion that appellant was properly charged with the balance found by the court to be due from the executors on March 17, 1871, less commissions.

There is no doubt that Mr. Straut acted in the utmost good faith in all matters connected with the estate, and that he is a man of high character and excellent repute. There has been no intentional neglect of duty, and it is a matter of regret that his inadvertence, over confidence, and good nature have brought upon him this loss; but we are not authorized by the hardship of this particular case to depart from well-settled principles, and establish a precedent which would open an avenue of waste, fraud, and speculation in the management of estates, and for which the guilty parties could not be held accountable. We cannot say that Mr. Straut was wrong or negligent in placing the money in the hands of his co-executor. He was about to leave the state for an indefinite period. The journey had to be made by sea and land, and was a perilous one. There was nothing to create a suspicion that Saul might misapply the money left with him. There were few claims against the estate, which was one that could have been and ought to have been speedily administered and distributed. Nor was there anything wrong in allowing Saul to manage the estate. Straut had the right to act alone, or not at all, as he chose. He could have renounced the trust entirely,—it is unfortunate for him that he did not do so; but in acting with Saul he made the latter's acts his own, and is bound by them. The delay in the filing of accounts and settlement of the estate was a direct violation of a statutory duty. The executors were required to file an exhibit under oath, showing the amount of money received and expended by them, the amount of all claims presented, names of the claimants, and all other matters necessary to show the condition of the estate, and to render full account within 30 days after the expiration of the time mentioned in the notice to creditors. Instead of filing an account, showing the amount of money received by him, and what had become of it, as he had a right to do to protect himself, and as required by law, Mr. Straut chose to allow four years to elapse without any showing by himself or his co-executor, and then joined in an account with his co-executor, which he adopted as his own, and prayed for its settlement. There is nothing upon the face of the report to show that he had received only the amount of money referred to, ($4,250,) or that he had turned it over to his co-executor. If the facts had been made to appear in that account, the devisees would have had something to put them upon their guard. Appellant's neglect through a period of nearly 20 years to report to the court his own transactions with respect to the property of the estate was itself negligence, and, taken in connection with the report made by himself and his co-executor, wherein it was made to appear that they had received all the moneys therein accounted for jointly, is sufficient, we think, to render him liable. The court below evidently believed that the loss would not have been sustained if the appellant had exercised reasonable diligence and care in the performance of his duty as executor, and for that reason held him chargeable with the deficiency; and we cannot say that the court erred. In Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 566, the court held that where an executor through his negligence suffered his co-executor to receive and waste the estate, when he had the means of preventing it by proper care, he was liable to the beneficiaries for the waste. In Thompson v. Finch, 22 Beav. 316, an executor was held liable for failure to see that money was properly invested, although he had been informed by his co-executor that it had been properly invested. The executor in that case allowed a period of 10 years to pass without ascertaining what the co-executor had done with the funds, and for such negligence was held liable, although no improper motive was attributed to him. It has been held in a great many cases that it is the duty of executors to account within reasonable or statutory time, and a neglect to account which results in waste renders the executor liable the same as in case of failure to collect debts, before the statute of limitation has run against them. Styles v. Guy, 1 Macn. & G. 434; Sutherland v. Brush, 7 Johns. Ch. 17. By joining his co-executor in the account of 1872, appellant admitted the joint liability of the executors for the balance then in their hands. If the account had been settled by the court, as prayed for by them therein, the order of the court would have been an adjudication of their joint liability. Ducommun's Appeal, 17 Pa. St. 268; Haage's Appeal, Id. 190; Hengst's Appeal, 24 Pa. St. 420.

The fact that the money and the sole management of the estate were given into the hands of Saul with the concurrence of Mr. Richmond is immaterial. Edmonds v. Crenshaw, supra. Mr. Richmond's power of attorney authorized him only to collect moneys due non-resident beneficiaries, and gave him no authority to direct the management of the estate, or to waive any of the rights of those whom he represented. The court found that the sum of $3,060 of the balance due from the executors was collected by Saul subsequent to January 1, 1869. From this finding it is apparent that only $654.43 could have been money which appellant turned over to Saul, and as he is entitled to a credit of $1,000, commissions as executor, he claims that the judgment should have been in his favor. It is true said amount of $3,060 of the money turned over by him to Saul was actually and regularly disbursed by the latter in payment of claims and legacies, and if appellant had reported correctly and within reasonable time his transactions, so as to show the court and beneficiaries the limit of his responsibility, he would have been protected. Instead of doing this, however, under a mistaken idea as to his liability, and through fear "that if the matter were exposed in the courts it might seriously affect his credit, and the credit of his firm," he failed to disclose the fact that "he, Saul, was not doing right," and that "there was a shortage," borrowed $2,250, which was one-half of the amount then due the legatees, and sent it to Mr. Richmond in satisfaction, as he believed, of all claims against him on account of the default of his co-executor. Subsequently, Saul prepared an account showing a balance due to the estate of $3,622.79. Appellant examined the account, and it was signed and filed as the joint account of the two executors. Upon its face it appeared that the executors had acted jointly in the receipt and disbursement of all the property of the estate, and retained a balance of $3,622.79, including commissions. Here is where appellant made his greatest mistake. The law required prompt reports from both. Instead of reporting his own transactions, and permitting or requiring his co-executor to do likewise, which would have put all concerned upon notice of the several liabilities of each executor, he joined in an account which represented him to be jointly responsible with Saul, although he knew that Saul "was not doing right," and allowed it to slumber on the records for over 16 years, without any effort to correct it, or have it settled. In the meantime his co-executor became insolvent, and left the country, and is now, together with his property, if he has any, beyond this jurisdiction. When appellant discovered that there was a shortage, that his co-executor was not doing right, and was in failing circumstances, it was his duty to the beneficiaries and to himself to report the facts to the court, and prosecute a settlement of the account; this would have determined the liability of each, and put all concerned upon their guard. The exact time when Saul became insolvent is not shown, but appellant testifies that he was in business some time after the account was filed, but that "his reputation was not as good after that time as it was before." It is an unfortunate case; but upon all the authorities, and upon principle, we must hold the executor responsible when it is so apparent that only his own negligence and mistaken idea as to his liability have occasioned the loss. It would never do to permit an executor to appear to be acting and sharing in the responsibility with his co-executor, join in reports of what they have done jointly, and many years afterwards, when the co-executor is bankrupt, and out of the jurisdiction of the court, allow him to contradict the reports rendered, and avoid responsibility by showing that as a matter of fact he has done none, or only a part, of the things reported. There is but one safe course for one named as executor to pursue, either renounce the nomination and refuse to qualify, or make prompt and correct reports and accounts of his transactions as executor, and have them settled. The order affirmed.

HOYT V. SAN FRANCISCO & N. P. R. CO.
(No. 14,066.)<sup>1</sup>

APPEAL—DISMISSAL.

Under Sup. Ct. Cal. Rule 3, providing that, if the transcript is on file when the notice of motion to dismiss appeal because the transcript was not filed in time is given, that shall be a sufficient answer to the motion, it is not sufficient that the transcript was filed on the same day that the notice was given, but later in the day.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

PER CURIAM. This is a motion to dismiss appeal because the transcript was not filed in time. The judgment was rendered May 26, and appeal taken June 12, 1890. September 16th, 94 days after the taking of the appeal, the clerk of the court below issued his certificate showing that no transcript had been prepared or certified. September 20th, notice of motion to dismiss was given, accompanied with a copy of the clerk's certificate. This was served at 9:30 A. M. At 3:30 P. M. the fee for filing the transcript was paid to the clerk of this court, but the transcript was not then delivered to said clerk. At 8 P. M. of that day, the transcript was served on counsel for respondent, and at 11 P. M. the clerk found the transcript in the letter box at his residence, and marked it filed as of that day. Rule 3 provides that if the transcript is on file when the notice is given, that shall be a sufficient answer to the motion; and counsel now invokes the rule that the court will not take cognizance of fractions of days. We appreciate the force of, and the reason for, the rule so invoked, and have no doubt sometimes applied it on motions of this kind. But where, as in this case, an event had actually occurred, and a fact been established, under which rights had accrued before the happening of another event, which, if it had occurred a few hours before, might have defeated those rights, we think it the duty of the court to take note of the order of those events, even though they may all have happened on the same day. The court has been, and possibly ought to be, liberal in the matter of extending time for the filing of transcripts, or of relieving parties from the effect of failure, where the delay has been brief, and good cause has been shown; but in this case no attempt was made to secure an extension of time, and no cause or excuse is shown for a delay of nearly 60 days in filing a transcript so brief that it could have been, and finally was, in fact, prepared and filed in a single day. If the general rule in regard to fractions of days is inevitably to apply in every such case, rule 3 of this court may as well be repealed, and no limit fixed for the filing of transcripts. Such practice as that adopted in this case is peculiarly adapted to the encouragement of appeals for delay, and ought not to be countenanced by the court. The motion is granted, and the appeal dismissed.

LEHMANN v. SCHMIDT. (No. 12,547.)
FACTOR'S LIEN—CONVERSION—WAIVER—SPLITTING CAUSE OF ACTION—EVIDENCE.

1. Defendant agreed with the owner of some wine to receive and sell it, and under the agreement did receive part of it. He then refused to sell the wine or have anything more to do with the contract, or to return the wine which he had received, or to account for it. When demand was made on defendant, he made no claim of lien. He stated to witness that it was so mixed up with his wine that he could not make any statement of it. Held, that the court was justified in finding that there had been a conversion of the wine, and that defendant had waived his lien for advances and expenses, if any he had. Reversing 22 Pac. Rep. 973, and 24 Pac. Rep. 120.

2. It being stipulated in the agreement that the owner was to receive for the wine 20 cents per gallon "net," defendant was not entitled to any allowance for sediment.

3. Defendant having converted the wine to his own use, the net amount per gallon that the owner was to receive by the terms of the agreement was some evidence of its value at the time it was converted.

4. Under an assignment to plaintiff by the owner of all his interest in a certain number of gallons of wine, "more or less," held by defendant or sold by him for said owner's account, plaintiff could maintain an action for the value of a less number of gallons than therein specified.

On rehearing. For former reports, see 22 Pac. Rep. 973, and 24 Pac. Rep. 120.

PATERSON, J. The authorities are clear upon the proposition that, when one person converts to his own use the personal property of another, the latter may waive the tort, and sue in assumpsit for the value thereof. Fratt v. Clark, 12 Cal. 89; Roberts v. Evans, 43 Cal. 386; Berly v. Taylor, 5 Hill, 577; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 108. But it is contended by appellant that the defendant had a lien on the wine for money paid out and advanced, and that his refusal to comply with the plaintiff's demand did not constitute a conversion. The court found, however, that the defendant advanced on account of said wines under the agreement the sum of $678.50 and no more, and that he incurred no other liabilities on account of the wine under the agreement; and the answer of the defendant admits that he had received "as the proceeds of the sale of a portion of said wines mentioned in plaintiff's complaint" the sum of $1,124.16. Thus it appears from the findings, evidence, and admissions of defendant that he had received more than he had advanced and expended. But if this were not so the defendant waived his lien, if any he had, for moneys advanced or expenses incurred on account of the wine by repudiating the contract, refusing to deliver the wine, and by declining to account to Smith for the amount received or expended. It has been held in England that a person having a lien on goods does not waive it by the mere fact of his omission to state that he claims them in that right when they are demanded, but, if a different ground of retention than that of the lien be assumed, the lien ceases to exist. In this country the weight of authority seems to support the contention that if the bailee refuse upon demand to deliver the property without setting up any lien thereon he waives his right to claim a lien after suit brought. Hanna v. Phelps, 7 Ind. 24; Everett v. Saltus, 15 Wend. 478. In the case at bar it is true the defendant was not merely a bailee for service, he was also a factor to sell; but he not only failed to assert a lien on the wine for advances and expenses at the time a demand was made upon him, but he notified Schmidt "that he would not have anything more to do with the contract," refused to go on with the sale of the wine or have anything further to do with it, and refused to deliver possession of the wine, or make any accounting in relation thereto. He stated to one of the witnesses that he could not tell anything about the wine, as "it was so mixed up with his own wine that he could not make a statement of it." Upon this evidence the court was justified in finding that there was a conversion of the property, and that defendant waived his lien, if any he had. Section 2910, Civil Code; McPherson v. Neuffer, 11 Rich. Law, 267; Ramsby v. Beezley, 11 Or. 49, 8 Pac. Rep. 288; Overt. Lieus, p. 142, § 115.

We do not think that the defendant is entitled to any allowance for the 230 gallons of sediment, or for the money expended for freight, labor, and materials. He knew when he took the wine that there would be some sediment and waste in curing it, and it was stipulated in the agreement that plaintiff was to receive 20 cents per gallon net. He agreed to furnish the necessary labor and outlay for freight, labor, etc., in shipping and curing the wine. It is admitted that he received the 7,981 gallons of wine with which the court charged him, and, having converted it all to his own use, any expense or loss incurred in getting possession of that quantity or improving its quality must be borne by himself.

The finding of the court as to the value of the wines is supported by the evidence. Mr. Smith testified that if the defendant had sold the wine at once "he could have realized a great deal more than twenty cents per gallon, for wines were very high at that season, but his neglect and delay caused me a great loss." Furthermore, it was stipulated in the contract, as stated above, that plaintiff should receive 20 cents per gallon net; and, under these circumstances, having converted it to his own use, we think the price stipulated in the agreement is some evidence of the value of the property at the time of the conversion.

The point was made that the assignment to the plaintiff did not entitle him to maintain this action, but we think it is sufficient to support an action for the value, although it be for only a portion of the wines referred to in the agreement. The rule against the splitting up of the cause of action (Zirker v. Hughes, 77 Cal. 235, 19 Pac. Rep. 423.) is inapplicable to this case.

The findings of the court are supported by the evidence, with the exception of the fourth finding, which states that defendant incurred no other liabilities and made no other advances than the $678.50 cash, advanced to Smith. The latter testified that he received from the defendant the sum of $678.50 in cash, and some casks that he had ordered from the defendant. The defendant testified that the casks referred to were furnished at the request of Smith, and were worth the sum of $39.55, including drayage, which amount was charged to Smith as an advance under the contract. It is clear, therefore, that the defendant should have been allowed that amount as an offset in addition to the $678.50. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the judgment by inserting therein $912.95, instead of the words and figures "nine hundred and fifty-two and fifty-hundredths ($952 50-100) dollars." As so modified the judgment will stand; but the respondent will be taxed with the costs of this appeal.

STREET ASSESSMENTS—FORECLOSURE OF LIEN—PARTIES.

In an action to foreclose a street assessment lien upon a lot under St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 816, it being required by the statute that the owners of the lot be sued, the burden of proof that defendants were the owners is upon plaintiff, though the answer alleges that the title was in certain persons, one of whom was not a party defendant.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WILLIAM T. WALLACE, Judge.

J. M. Wood, for appellant. Geo. B. Merrill, for respondents.

BELCHER, C. C. This action was brought to foreclose a street assessment lien upon a lot of land in the city and county of San Francisco. The original complaint was filed in November, 1877, and an amended complaint in March, 1887. The court below gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The complaint alleged, among other things, that the defendants were the owners of the property assessed. The answer denied this averment, and alleged that "at all the times and dates of the proceedings set forth in the complaint, and particularly on the twenty-first day of May, 1877, the defendant J. C. Merrill, and one Moses Ellis, who is not made a party defendant in this action, were the owners in common, each of one-half part undivided, of the land mentioned in said complaint." At the trial the plaintiff offered and read in evidence the original contract, assessment, diagram, and warrant, and affidavit of demand thereto annexed, together with the indorsements thereon, showing the due recording of all the papers, and also a deed of J. C. Merrill, by the sheriff of San Francisco, conveying all the undivided one-half part of the land in question to his co-defendant, the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, on the 9th day of July, 1881, which was recorded on the 11th day of the same month. The plaintiff then rested his case, and the defendants offered no evidence. The court found that all the allegations of the complaint were true, except as to the ownership of the land, and, as to that, "that the defendants were not the owners of said land, on the 21st day of May, 1877, as alleged in said amended complaint, or at any other time;" and, as a conclusion of law, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment and decree in his favor, but that defendants were entitled to judgment for their costs. To maintain his action, it was necessary that the plaintiff make all the owners of the property assessed parties defendant. Hancock v. Bowman, 49 Cal. 413; Clark v. Porter, 53 Cal. 409; Diggins v. Reay, 54 Cal. 525; Harney v. Appelgate, 57 Cal. 205. Whether the defendants were such owners or not was an issue distinctly raised by the answer, and the only question is, on which side was the burden of proof upon this issue? Counsel for appellant contend that the burden was on the defendants to show that they were not the owners of the property, but that Merrill and Ellis were, as alleged in the answer. In support of their contention, counsel cite section 13 of the act under which the proceedings were taken, (St. 1871-72, p. 816,) declaring what shall constitute a sufficient complaint, and section 17, declaring who are to be regarded and treated as owners, and also the case of Whiting v. Townsend, 57 Cal. 515. The portions of the sections cited read as follows: Section 13: "In bringing an action to recover street assessments, the complaint need not show any of the proceedings prior to the issuance of the assessment, diagram, and certificate; but it shall be held legally sufficient if it shows the title of the court in which the action is brought by the parties plaintiff and defendant, the date of the issuance of the assessment, the date of the recording thereof, the book and page where recorded, a general statement of the work done, a description of the lot or lots sought to be charged with the assessments, the amount assessed thereon, that the same remains unpaid, and the proper prayer for relief." Section 17: "The person owning the fee, or the person in the possession of lands, lots, or portions of lots, or buildings, under claim of ownership, or exercising acts of ownership over the same for himself, or as the administrator or guardian of the owner, or the person in whom, on the day the action commenced, appears the legal title to the land by deeds recorded in the recorder's office in the city and county of San Francisco, shall be regarded, treated, and deemed to be the owner, (for the purposes of this law,) according to the intent and meaning of that word as used in this act." In Whiting v. Townsend it was held that the complaint was sufficient under the thirteenth section of the statute, but there was no suggestion or intimation that all of the owners need not be joined as defendants. On the contrary, the court, on page 519, said: "The finding of the court below was that the defendants were the owners in fee of the land at the time the assessment was made, and at the date of the commencement of the action. This is a sufficient finding upon the question of ownership. * * * The whole lot was liable for the entire assessment, and no particular part of it was liable for any particular portion of the assessment. The statute requires that the owners of the land, lot, or portion of lot assessed shall be sued," etc. In the sections and case above cited we see nothing to sustain the theory of appellant. His complaint undoubtedly complied with the provisions quoted from section 13, but it does not follow, because this is so, that the necessary parties were made defendants. In a case of this kind, the owners of the property assessed, or their representatives, on the day when the action is commenced, must be sued, or the action must fail. Whether the defendants were such owners or not was therefore an issuable fact, and the burden of establishing by competent proofs the affirmative of the issue was clearly cast upon the plaintiff. He offered no evidence upon the subject, and his theory seems to have been that the averment in the answer that Merrill and Ellis were the owners was new matter which relieved him of the burden, and cast it upon the defendants. This theory, however, is untenable. The averment referred to was not new matter, but was, in legal effect, merely a denial of the averment of the complaint as to ownership. Goddard v. Fulton, 21 Cal. 436. The appellant also says in his brief: "The Hib. S. & L. Society was the owner of one-half, and why not be compelled to pay a half, at any rate?" A full answer to this query is found in the cases above cited. In Clark v. Porter and Diggins v. Reay it was distinctly held that, in such a case as this, the statute gives no authority for a decree enforcing the lien, in the absence of any of the parties interested. We advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the order appealed from is affirmed.

YORK v. FORTENBURY et al.

PLEADING AND PROOF—VARIANCE—APPEAL—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

1. An answer alleging a joint loan to both plaintiffs is not sustained by proof of a loan to one of them individually.

2. Where the record on appeal does not contain all the evidence, an objection that the judgment is not sustained by the evidence will not be considered.

Appeal from superior court of Denver.

W. B. Herr and W. W. Cooke, for appellant. Stuart Bros. & Andrews, for appellees.

HELM, C. J. Appellees brought suit against appellant for work and labor done at appellant's instance and request. The answer, after putting in issue all the material averments of the complaint, concluded with a counter-claim in the following words: "That defendant lent to the plaintiffs, at their special instance and request, the sum of $500; that they have not paid any part thereof." The cause was tried to the court, without a jury. Appellant's counter-claim was disallowed, and judgment was rendered in favor of appellees for $240 and costs. A reversal is asked upon the ground that the judgment is not sustained by the evidence. In the first place, there is not a total absence of proofs to support a matter essential to appellees' recovery. The testimony is in some particulars conflicting, but the judgment is not so inconsistent with the great preponderance thereof as to justify interference by this court. Besides, in view of the fact that the record before us does not purport to contain all the evidence, we would, in any event, decline to consider favorably the present objection.

The principal ground urged, however, in support of a reversal, is the exclusion of appellant's testimony offered to establish her counter-claim. The action was brought by two parties, Fortenbury and Carson, as co-plaintiffs. The answer averred a joint loan to the plaintiffs. The proof rejected showed that the loan in question was made to Fortenbury individually, Carson deriving no benefit therefrom, and not being in any way connected therewith. The allegation of a loan to both plaintiffs is not sustained by proof of an individual loan to one of them. There was, therefore, such a variance between the pleading in question and the proof offered, as justified the court's rejection of the latter. In view of the foregoing conclusion, it is not necessary to discuss the further specific point made in the briefs that the individual debt of a partner cannot be set off against a firm demand in suit by the firm, or the exceptions to this rule, relied on by opposing counsel. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

ZIPPAR V. REPPY.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—TENANCY FROM YEAR TO YEAR.

Where a lessee for a year, upon the expiration of his term, continues in possession by the consent of the lessor, with no alteration in the agreement between them save an increase in the rent, which is duly paid, he becomes a tenant for another year.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

Pence & Pence and Dolloff & Wright, for appellant.

BISSELL, C. George P. Reppy commenced this action before a justice of the peace to recover the possession of certain properties situated in the city of Denver. He based his right of recovery upon a lease executed upon the 1st day of December, 1886, by one Harriett Ullman, the owner of the property, to him and another. The defense was a lease, resulting, by operation of law, from a holding over by Zippar, after the expiration of a term previously granted. It appeared in evidence that, in August, 1885, the owner of the property, Mrs. Ullman, executed a written lease to the defendant, Zippar, for the period of one year, upon certain terms and conditions, among which was the payment of a monthly rent of $80. The tenant Zippar occupied the premises until the expiration of the term limited by his original agreement. Within a day or two of the 1st of August, 1886, Mrs. Ullman called for her rent, and when tendered a check for $80, which had been the agreed price, demanded $5 per month more, alleging that the neighboring premises were being rented for $85, and she should decline to take less for her property. Nothing whatever was said between the parties as to the terms, or conditions, or duration of the ensuing tenancy in case Zippar should accept the proposition of a raise. The next day Mrs. Ullman came back for her rent, and was paid the $85, which she had insisted upon receiving as the monthly rental. Thereafter, the defendant, Zippar, continued to occupy the premises, and pay the stipulated rent, until the month of December, 1886, at which time he was given notice to quit; refusing to vacate, these proceedings were instituted for the purpose of ejecting him. The proceedings resulted in a judgment of ouster. He contended that since he had been a tenant from year to year, and, upon the expiration of the term limited by the original agreement, had continued in possession by the consent of the landlord, with no change in the contract between them save the alteration which was made in the price, he had a right to occupy and be treated as a lessee for the term of one year. That he was right is too well settled in the law to permit of dispute. After the expiration of a lease for a year, if the tenant holds over with the consent of the landlord, the law treats him as responsible to him as upon a hiring for another year, upon the same terms and conditions as those which controlled the antecedent tenancy. This principle is so well settled that it would be folly to incumber the reports with a statement of the reasons upon which the rule is based. It is enough to declare its existence. Schuyler v. Smith, 51 N. Y. 309; Wolfe v. Wolff, 69 Ala. 549. As in all other states where the question has arisen, the same doctrine has been declared in Colorado, and in these terms: "If a tenant under a lease for a year holds over after the expiration of his term, in the absence of a new agreement, he holds the premises subject to the covenants and conditions contained in the original lease. The holding over rests not upon the former lease, but upon a new contract which the law implies to be for the same time, and upon the same terms, with the lease under which the premises were held the preceding year." Sears v. Smith, 3 Colo. 288; Reithman v. Brandenburg, 7 Colo. 481, 4 Pac. Rep. 788. Nothing whatever occurred between the parties at the time of the payment of the rent, in August, 1886, to prevent the application of this well-established rule. Both the landlady and the tenant were silent upon every matter essential to the construction of a new agreement. It is well settled that the rights of the parties were unaffected by the alteration of the rent. Digby v. Atkinson, 4 Camp. 275. The existing tenancy must then be held to be one for a year, running from August, 1886, until August, 1887. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

RICHMOND and REED, CC., concur.

DENVER, U. & P. RY. CO. v. BARSALOUX

—INJUNCTION.

1. Where a city, by its ordinance, grants to a railroad company the right of way for its tracks through certain streets, and there is nothing in the ordinance as to the width of the tracks, the company will not be enjoined at the suit of owners of abutting property from changing its track from a narrow to a broad gauge.

2. If an injunction could be granted, a decree prohibiting the broadening of the gauge outside the limits of defendant's property could not stand.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

A bill was filed in this case by Barsaloux and others by which they sought to restrain the Denver, Utah & Pacific Railroad Company from laying a third rail on a street over which they were, and for several years had been, operating a narrow-gauge road, until compensation should be made for the resulting damage, or the company proceed to condemn under the statute. It appeared that, in 1878, one Joseph L. Collins filed in the recorder's office of Arapahoe county a plat of an addition to the city of Denver. The addition contained some 33 lots, and through it, according to the plat, ran a street which was named Argostreet. This street seemed to be only a division or boundary between the two blocks of lots, for there was no outlet at either end, and it abutted as to its termini upon other properties belonging to other people. Later, Collins conveyed three of the lots to Louis Mabe, who transferred them in August, 1881, to Annie Barsaloux, the wife of David Barsaloux, one of the plaintiffs. These transfers were put in evidence, and whatever of right or title, as to the street, would pass to adjoining lot-owners by virtue of a conveyance from Collins, passed to Mrs. Barsaloux; the other two plaintiffs, Brahoney and Reese, offered no evidence of title save a deed from Brill to Reese, in December, 1881, and a deed from Ryan to Brahoney in March, 1881. Where their grantors got title does not appear; but the matter of title was not the subject of inquiry in the court below, nor is error assigned for failure of proof upon that matter. It is sufficiently manifest however that all these parties were in possession of the respective lots, as they were claimed some time in the year 1881. In the fall of that year the railroad company constructed a narrow-gauge track over its own property which was immediately south of the Collins addition, and thence northward along and throughout the entire length of Argo street. The plaintiffs were in possession of the property described in their bill at the time that the road was constructed. It is probable however that the construction of the houses thereon; and the actual occupancy, commenced about the time the railroad was built. The company's depot lay to the south and west of the plaintiffs' property; but, by an ordinance of the common council of the city of Denver, the corporation was authorized to construct and lay its tracks along and across the various alleys and streets lying between the depot and their property which joined the Collins addition on the south. From the time that the railroad company prepared its grade and laid its track along Argo street, in the fall of 1881, it continued its use and operation as a narrow-gauge road down to the time of the injury complained of. In the spring and summer of 1887, the company proceeded to lay, on the ties already in the street, a third rail to accommodate the transfer of broad-gauge cars to their yard and depot from their connections with the broad-gauge roads north of the addition. The laying of the third rail had been finished, at the time of the filing of the bill, to a point beyond the immediate frontage of the plaintiffs' property. It appeared that from time to time afterwards they put in new ties, fixed the grade, and otherwise strengthened the work already done, but that the new ties were all of the same length as the old ones, and apparently occupied no more of the street. The evidence tended to show that the burden of the easement was unchanged by the alteration of the gauge of the road. No evidence of special damage or of any damage at all, except that which might inferentially result from the broadening of the gauge of the road, was offered by the plaintiffs. No sort of objection was ever made by the plaintiffs to the use of the street by the railroad company until they commenced to widen their tracks. The answers of the company setting up their various defenses were interposed in apt season, and a preliminary injunction was issued restraining the corporation from further proceeding with the laying of the third rail; and, on the final hearing, after making the proofs which show the foregoing facts, the court entered the following decree: "And now on this day, this cause again coming on for final decision on the pleadings, evidence, and arguments of counsel heretofore submitted to the court, and the court, now being sufficiently advised in the premises, does find the equity of said cause with the plaintiffs, whereupon it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the preliminary injunction heretofore, and on, to-wit, the 13th day of October, A. D. 1887, issued in said cause be, and the same is hereby, made perpetual so far as the same restrained the construction of a third rail beyond the point at which the same is now constructed, and that plaintiffs do have and recover from the defendant their cost herein expended to be taxed, and that they have execution and fee-bill therefor, to which the defendant at the same time excepts."

Wolcott & Valle, for appellant. Brown & Putnam, for appellees.

BISSELL, C., (after stating the facts as above.) A great many questions are raised and discussed by counsel, but as the case has been practically settled by a decision rendered in this court subsequent to the hearing and judgment in the court below, most of them will be left undetermined. The very full statement of facts which precedes this opinion will show the applicability of that decision to this controvery, and serve to eliminate from the discussion most of the other questions which would naturally be suggested. There is no dispute concerning the extent and character of the antecedent occupation of the street by the railroad company. The road was built and put into practical operation in the fall of 1881, and since that time, down to the laying of the third rail, which is the injury complained of, the street had been occupied by the company, and the road constantly used by them in the operation and maintenance of their system. To this operation and use the plaintiffs offered no objection. During this entire period, as they allege, they were the owners, and in the occupancy, of the lots which they claimed were injured by the laying of the third rail. This rail was to be laid on the old road-bed and ties, and was, if anything, an added burden laid upon the street. At no point in its course did the road cross the property of the complainants, and touch the lots of which they possessed the fee. The case then is clearly within the principles laid down in the case of Railroad Co. v. Domke, 11 Colo. 247, 17 Pac. Rep. 777.

It was not open to the complainants to interfere with the operation of the road already constructed. The absence of protest or objection, and the implied assent to that use, properly presumed from their silence, effectually precluded the plaintiffs from seeking any equitable relief against the continued operation of the road as originally constructed. They are equally without right to injunctive relief for the damages resulting from the laying of the third rail, and the extended use of the road-bed for that purpose. The plaintiffs were, if anything, simply abutting lot-owners, with no title to the fee of the street, and therefore without other right to recover than what accrued from the damages which they might sustain by the increased burden put upon the street, and the injury done to their particular estates. But against these wrongs equity does not relieve in this state, unless some special circumstances, bringing the case within some other branch of equitable jurisdiction, be averred. The party injured is not without remedy, but his recovery may only be had in a court of law where the damages may be estimated. Were the foregoing reasons insufficient to warrant a reversal, the decree could not be permitted to stand. It did not undertake to adjudicate the rights of the parties as to the use of Argo street where it abutted upon the plaintiff's property, but conceded the use proved to be consistent with the rights of the owners. By its terms it inhibited the company from continuing the broadening of their gauge beyond the point which it had reached at the time of the institution of the suit. This point was beyond the limits of the complainant's property. About the user and extension of the road in that manner no one under the proofs in this suit had a right to complain. It was not competent for the court to adjudicate as to a matter which was not properly involved in the issues, and which was not embraced by the proofs made. The case should be reversed and remanded, with instructions to the court below to dismiss the bill at the plaintiffs' costs.

DENVER, U. & P. R. CO. v. TOOHEY.

ESTOPPEL BY DEED.

Where an owner of land abutting on a street for a valuable consideration releases a railroad company from all claims for damages by reason of the maintenance of its railroad in such street, he cannot afterwards maintain an action to enjoin the company from changing its track from a narrow to a broad gauge.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

This case, No. 2215, was consolidated with No. 2214, (Railway Co. v. Barsaloux, ante, 165,) which is the preceding case against the company, and the two cases were tried together. The record comes into this court showing that the cases were tried on the same proofs, except in so far as they are modified by the difference in the parties plaintiff, and the lots involved, and a further fact which will be stated. Mrs. Toohey proved title by the production of a conveyance from Collins, who platted the addition. The statement of facts made in the preceding case is applicable to this. It further appeared on the trial that Mrs. Toohey, prior to the institution of her suit, had executed the following instrument: "Know all men by these presents that I, Ann Toohey, of the city of Denver, in the state of Colorado, for and in consideration of the sum of $200, to me fully paid by the Denver, Utah & Pacific Railroad Company, the receipt whereof is hereby confessed and acknowledged, do hereby release, discharge, and forever quitclaim the said Denver, Utah & Pacific Railroad Company from all and singular every claim and demand whatsoever existing in my favor against the said railroad company, from the beginning of the world to this date, and particularly from all and singular the damages of every name and nature which I have sustained by reason of the construction, maintenance, and operation by the said railroad company of its railroad in front of my premises situate on the strip of land called 'Argo Street' in the city of Denver, which said premises are described as being lot numbered 32 in Collins' addition to the city of Denver. Dated September 22, A. D. 1884. [Signed] ANN TOOHEY." The pertinence of this proof is manifest from the record. Under the evidence it cannot be said that the third rail; or the manner of operating the road after the change, put an added burden on the street, which was a damage to Mrs. Toohey or to her property. The same decree was entered in this case as in the Barsaloux Case against the company. From it the same appeal was prayed and taken.

Wolcott & Vaile, for appellant. Browne & Putnam, for appellee.

BISSELL, C., (after stating the facts as above.) It is unnecessary to repeat what has already been decided in the case of Railway Co. v. Barsaloux, ante, 165. For the reasons given in that opinion it is evident that Mrs. Toohey cannot maintain her bill, and is entitled to no relief under the proofs which she has made. But her case need not be put upon those grounds alone. Upon the record this release is an insuperable obstacle to her recovery. If she had suffered any damage from the original construction of the road she had been fully compensated for it; and, for a valuable consideration, had released the company therefrom. No subsequent use of the street for railroad purposes, nor any further operation of the road, could give to Mrs. Toohey any right of action, without sufficient proof by her that a new use, or a new mode of operation, had in some fashion so damaged her as to give rise to a cause of action, based on such new use, or such new mode of operation. This the evidence fails to establish. For this reason, as well as those which are assigned in the preceding opinion, the decree in favor of Mrs. Toohey must be reversed, and her cause remanded, with directions to the court below to dismiss her bill at her own costs.

REED and RICHMOND, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the suit.

BECKETT et al. v. CUENIN.

SERVICE OF WRIT—PUBLICATION—PLEADING.

1. An affidavit for an order for the service of a summons by publication, which merely states that the action is brought to recover on two notes therein described, but not alleging any connection of defendants with the notes, is fatally defective under Code Colo. § 44, requiring such an affidavit to show that a cause of action exists against defendants.

2. A judgment recovered in a court of record will be set aside where no complaint or written statement of the cause of action was filed therein.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Gunnison county court.

In July, 1886, the plaintiff, Cuenin, started this case in the county court of Gunnison county, by filing in that court an undertaking and an affidavit for attachment. The summons and writ of attachment were issued. The summons recited substantially that the plaintiff demanded judgment for $1,000, with interest at 10 per cent. from June 12, 1884, for attorney's fees amounting to 10 per cent. of the note, and for costs of suit. Subsequently, and in September, the plaintiff filed an affidavit in the following words: "Dexter T. Sapp, being duly sworn, says that he is the attorney for the plaintiff in the above-entitled cause. That this action is brought to recover of the defendants the sum of one thousand one hundred twenty 97-100 dollars upon two promissory notes of $500 each, dated August 14, 1884, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from said date, and also ten per cent. attorney's fees, as provided in said notes. That said William D. Beckett and John M. Beckett compose the copartnership of said Beckett Bros. That upon the 17th day of July, A. D. 1886, a writ of attachment was issued in this cause, and placed in the hands of the sheriff of said Gunnison county for service. That on said day a writ of summons was issued in this cause in due form, subscribed, 'Brown & Sapp, Attorneys for Plaintiff,' which summons was placed in the hands of the sheriff of Gunnison county for service upon said defendants. That the defendants William D. Beckett and John M. Beckett now reside at Hastings, in the county of Clay, state of Nebraska, as deponent is informed by Louis Boisot, of Gunnison, Colorado, said Boisot having been the attorney of said Becketts, and as deponent also believes from having received letters from said defendants which were mailed at said Hastings. That at no time since the issuing of summons in this case has either of said defendants been within the state of Colorado. That the sheriff of Gunnison county has returned to this court the summons issued herein and placed in his hands for service as aforesaid, with his indorsement thereon, to the effect that he cannot find the said defendants in his county. That personal service of said summons can be had upon said defendants at said Hastings, in the state of Nebraska, but cannot be had upon either of them in the state of Colorado, as deponent is informed as aforesaid, and as he believes. That the defendants are a necessary and proper party to the action for the reasons (1) that there are no other defendants and no other person or persons liable for the debt sued for; (2) that, by virtue of the writ of attachment issued in this cause, real property owned by one of said defendants, and situate in the county of Mesa, in this state, and debts owing to said defendants, have been attached by garnishment in the said county of Gunnison, and, without some kind of service of summons in this cause, it will be impossible to have the property and debts so attached applied towards the payment of the claim in this cause sued for. Wherefore, affiant asks that an order may be granted that the service of said summons be made by the publication thereof. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 21st day of September, A. D. 1886. EDWARD P. COLBORN, Judge and Acting Clerk." As a matter of fact the affidavit was not signed, although the statement of the verification recites its subscription. The order for publication was made, and publication was had, and in March, 1887, after making proof of the mailing of two copies of the summons to the two defendants, and a showing therein that no appearance had been entered for the defendants, a default was entered by the judge and acting clerk of the court, and afterwards, and on the same day, according to the recital of the judgment, viz.: "Upon application to the judge and acting clerk by Brown & Sapp, attorneys for said plaintiff, judgment is hereby entered against said defendants, in pursuance of the prayer of said complaint; wherefore, by virtue of the law and by reason of the premises aforesaid, judgment is hereby entered against the defendants, and in favor of the plaintiff, for the sum of fourteen hundred and seventy-three and 20-100 dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the date hereof until paid, and his costs and disbursements incurred in this action, taxed at the sum of seventeen 55-100 dollars, and that he have execution therefor. Attest: EDWARD F. COLBORN, Judge and Acting Clerk." No complaint was ever filed in court in the case. On the 22d of March, an execution was issued on the judgment, and on the 31st of the same month the defendants served their notice of appeal as provided by the statute.

BISSELL, C. The errors contained in this record leave no basis upon which the judgment can be sustained. The service was made by publication, and the order therefor was entered upon the affidavit which is set forth in the statement. It is an established principle in all courts that the method of acquiring jurisdiction by publication is in derogation of the common law, and that the statutory requirements must be successively and accurately taken in order to confer upon the court jurisdiction over the defendant. This principle has been so often decided and so universally declared that it is wholly unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the proposition. The application of this rule precludes any successful defense of the order of publication which was entered by the county court. To justify the making of the order, the plaintiff was bound under section 44 of the Code to file an affidavit by which it should appear that a cause of action existed against the defendants. No such showing was made in this case, according to any reasonable construction of the section. The affidavit does not state that any cause of action exists in favor of the plaintiff, or against the defendants, nor is this fact otherwise made affirmatively to appear in it. It sets up that the action is brought to recover the sum of $1,120.97 upon two promissory notes, which are described as to the date of their execution, but it does not state, either that the defendants were the makers of those two notes, or the guarantors thereof against whom a right of action existed in favor of the plaintiff, or that they were the payees and subsequent indorsers, or indorsers thereof and not payees, or that the plaintiffs were the owners and holders of the notes. The affidavit states no cause of action whatsoever against these two defendants, or either of them, upon the two notes as described. Under these circumstances it is wholly impossible to uphold the jurisdiction of the court in the premises. Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149; Yolo Co. v. Knight, 70 Cal. 432, 11 Pac. Rep. 662; Slocum v. Slocum, 17 Wis. 155; Towsley v. McDonald, 32 Barb. 604; Shields v. Miller, 9 Kan. 390; Atkins v. Atkins, 9 Neb. 191-194, 2 N. W.

Rep. 466. It is exceedingly doubtful whether there is any such showing of non-residence as would entitle the plaintiff to proceed to obtain service by publication; but the insufficiency of the affidavit renders it unnecessary to put the decision upon this ground. The failure to file a complaint prior to the rendition of judgment, or at all, is a fatal irregularity. According to the practice, as it existed at that time, it was necessary that the complaint should be filed before the entry of judgment. Section 9 of an act to amend, etc., Sess. Laws 1885, p. 182.

Whether the failure to file the complaint prior to the entry of judgment would of itself have been fatal to the validity of the judgment, or whether upon application for the purpose prior to the appeal the court could have made an order permitting it to be done, it is not necessary to consider. No such application was made, nor was any complaint ever filed. On general principles, regardless of this statute, it must be held that a complaint, or some written statement of the cause of action, is absolutely indispensable to the maintenance of a judgment recovered in a court of record. As it was well put in Young v. Rosenbaum, 39 Cal. 654: "It would seem impossible to maintain in any forum a judgment unless it was based upon a complaint, or a statement of the cause of action of the party in whose favor it was rendered." These errors render it impossible to maintain the judgment. Since the cause must be reversed, it is needless to discuss the question whether it should be reversed because it was entered for more than the sum which the plaintiff was entitled to recover according to the action as he instituted it, or whether he should be permitted to remit the excess, and the judgment be upheld for the balance. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

RICHMOND and REED, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment below is reversed.

PERKINS et al. v. MARRS et al.

TROVER AND CONVERSION — DAMAGES — INSTRUCTIONS — VERDICT — ASSIGNMENT PENDING ACTION.

1. In an action for the value of personal property taken and converted, damages equal to the legal interest upon the value of the chattels converted may be allowed, and included by the jury in their verdict.

2. Under Code Colo. § 81, providing that any error which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties shall be disregarded, and that no judgment shall be reversed because of such error, a judgment will not be reversed at the instance of the defendant because of error in the form of an instruction, when no definite request was made by defendant upon the subject, and the verdict includes nothing that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

3. An objection that the court instructed the jury orally, without the consent of defendant, is unavailable on appeal when the transcript fails to show, either that the court instructed the jury orally, or that defendant objected to the action of the court in that respect.

4. That a verdict includes the value of property not declared for in the complaint is wholly immaterial where plaintiff permits to be taken from the verdict a sum largely in excess of the value of such property.

5. In trover, the right to recover the value of the property converted is not defeated by an assignment of the property by plaintiffs pending the action, where no objection is taken to the continuance of the suit in the name of the original plaintiffs, or motion made for the substitution of the assignee, it being provided by Code Colo. § 15, that, in case of the transfer of interest, the action may be continued in the name of the original party, and shall be neither affected nor abated.

Commissioners' decision. Error to district court, Arapahoe county.

In 1886, Marrs, Middleton & Hunter brought this action against Perkins and Colthrop to recover the value of several horses which had formerly been the property of one John L. Alexander, who had mortgaged them to the firm to secure certain promissory notes payable to the order of Marrs & Middleton. The notes had been transferred to the new firm of Marrs, Middleton & Hunter, who were the owners of them. The ownership of the notes, as set up in the fifth paragraph of the complaint, was not disputed. The plaintiffs declared upon their title as mortgagees, and averred the taking and conversion by the defendants. The complaint set up the conversion of six horses, with the description by name and by color. The defendants admitted the taking of four horses, and controverted the taking of the remainder. On the trial, without objection, proof was made that the defendants had received and disposed of five horses, which were included within the terms of the mortgage as originally executed and set out in the complaint. The value of the five horses, without interest, according to the testimony of the several witnesses, varied from $545 to $665. According to the testimony, the defendants had taken one white horse called "Snowflake," whose value was established to be from $75 to $100. It appears from the record that there was a difference between the allegations of the complaint and the proof, as offered, with reference to this particular horse. It was not described in the complaint either by name, by color, or by any other description. No testimony was introduced save that offered by the plaintiffs. Upon the conclusion of the testimony, one instruction seems to have been given to the jury which embraced four several propositions of law. An exception was saved to that instruction simply in general terms as to each and every part of it. A request was made by the defendants for an instruction, substantially, that the plaintiffs could not recover the value of any horse not named in the complaint. No instruction was prepared and tendered to the court, nor was any objection made to the court's refusal to give the instruction requested, nor was any exception saved to such refusal. There was a verdict for the plaintiffs for the sum of $706.15. A motion for a new trial was interposed which attacked the verdict principally upon two grounds: First. That the instruction of the court charged the jury: "If the plaintiffs are entitled to recover, your verdict will be for the value of the horses at the time of their conversion, and interest on such sum from that date to the day of the trial." And, second, that the verdict included the value of the horse Snowflake which was not warranted by the allegations of the complaint. On the hearing of the motion, by permission of the court, the plaintiffs remitted from their verdict $186.15. According to the journal entry of the judgment, this included both the interest and the value of the horse not declared for. The defendants sued out a writ of error to reverse the judgment entered.

BISSELL, C., (after stating the facts as above.) It is evident from the record that no harm has come to the plaintiffs in error from the entry of the judgment against them. The property which they took was covered by the mortgage owned by Marrs, Middleton & Hunter, who were entitled to recover it, or its value. Numerous errors have been assigned and argued by counsel, but there are not many which deserve serious consideration. The error most insisted upon seems to be entirely unavailable to the appellants. The instruction of the court upon the subject of interest may not have accurately expressed the law as applicable to an action of this description. It is quite evident that the jury computed the interest, and included the computation in their verdict. If this were not, under the facts, error without prejudice, it would not be ground for reversal, because it is not included in the judgment as entered. By the permission of the court, the plaintiffs remitted $186.15 from their verdict, taking judgment only for the balance. The court, in its entry, declares that this sum includes all the interest which was originally expressed in the verdict, as well as the value of the horse Snowflake. This conclusion of the trial court finds support in the record, and the finding would seem to remove that question from the necessary consideration of this court. Counsel have attacked the finding upon this question of fact with so much zeal and acuteness as seemingly to require that the judgment be maintained without the aid of it. In form, the instruction was not justified by the authorities in this state. At the time the case was tried it was pretty generally supposed by the profession that, in actions of trover for the conversion of personal property, the interest upon the money detained could not be computed by the jury, and included by them in the verdict which they might return. This question has been set at rest in this state by a recent decision wherein the whole subject was examined. It is now the established rule in Colorado, that while, as interest, damages may not be recovered for the detention of the money, or the money value of property taken and converted, yet damages equal to the legal interest upon the value of the chattels converted may be allowed, and included in the verdict which the jury may render. Refining Co. v. Tabor, 13 Colo. 41, 21 Pac. Rep. 925. Under the law, as established in that case, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, and have included in the verdict of the jury, a sum of money, as damages for the detention of the property, which would have been the exact equivalent of the interest which the jury computed and included in the verdict, and which the court told them the plaintiffs had a right to recover. In form the charge was undoubtedly erroneous, though in substance it was a correct expression of the law. But, as committed in this case, it is not an error for which the cause will be reversed, and sent back for a new trial. The plaintiffs in error cannot be heard to complain of the form of the instruction, for they took no specific objection to that clause relating to the matter of interest, which was but one of the half dozen legal propositions embraced in it; nor did they specifically request the court to charge the jury according to the law upon that subject. It has been repeatedly adjudged that, upon a general objection to an entire charge, error may not be predicated. Under the very liberal provisions of our Code, (section 81,) which substantially provides that the court shall disregard any error in the proceedings which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties, and that no judgment shall be reversed by reason of such error, this court would not reverse the judgment because of the error in the form of the instruction when no definite request was made by the defendant upon the subject, and when the verdict included nothing but that which the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

An error is assigned upon the action of the court in instructing the jury orally, without the consent of the defendants or their counsel. In this state the court is without authority to instruct the jury orally when either party specifically objects to this form of instruction. To make the error available, an exception must be saved upon an objection duly taken. There is nothing whatever in the transcript tending to show either that the court instructed the jury orally or that the appellant objected to what the court did in respect of that matter. Wherever parties desire to insist upon and preserve their rights in this particular, it is incumbent upon them to make it apparent by the record that an error has been committed. It is manifest from the verdict of the jury that they found for the plaintiffs as to the five horses which the testimony showed the defendants had appropriated to their own use. There was, therefore, originally included in the verdict the value of the white horse, Snowflake, which was not declared for in the complaint, but concerning which there was abundant evidence of conversion. The jury probably proceeded upon the hypothesis that, as the defendants had taken the horse, and his value was established, the plaintiffs had a right to recover for him. It is quite possible that the jury were right in their conclusion, and that their verdict even might have been sustained, since the evidence concerning it was introduced without objection; but it is wholly unnecessary to determine this question. The value of that horse was eliminated from the verdict, and is not included in the judgment, for the amount remitted was largely in excess of his value. It is true that the plaintiffs sought to deduct from the judgment the amount of the interest which the jury may have computed. Whether the plaintiffs succeeded in eliminating from their verdict both the value of the horse and the amount of the interest becomes wholly immaterial. They were entitled to recover the interest as damages, and, if it be conceded that they were not entitled to recover the value of the horse, they have permitted to be taken from their verdict a sum largely in excess of his value. Under these circumstances it is evident that, under the provision of section 78 of our Code, this court would have no right to reverse the judgment upon the error complained of.

The only remaining error which it is important to consider is that which is based upon the proofs contained in the record, showing that the plaintiffs had transferred, at the time of the trial, all their interest in the notes and mortgage, and were therefore personally without right to recover the value of the property converted. The plaintiffs in error contend the law is that, in an action of trover for the conversion of personal property, the plaintiff's right to recover its entire value is dependent upon his possession of the title thereto at the time of the institution of the suit. This doctrine grows out of the principle that, upon the recovery of a judgment, and the satisfaction thereof in an action of this description, the title to the property, for the conversion of which suit was brought, vests in the defendant. It therefore follows that, if the plaintiff, at the time of the institution of his suit, is without title, his recovery must be limited to the nominal damages which result from the taking, since he has no title upon which the law can operate when the defendant satisfies the judgment which has been obtained. That this is the law applicable to cases of this description is well settled. Cooley, Torts, 459. It is without application to the case at bar. In the complaint, the title of the plaintiffs at the time of the institution of the suit is distinctly averred in their fifth paragraph, and it is not controverted or put in issue by the defendants in their answer. It therefore follows that it is established by the record herein that the plaintiffs had the right to recover when they commenced their action. It is not so easy to see how a recovery in the suit could be defeated, or this judgment reversed, because of the showing which the record contains of a subsequent transfer of the plaintiffs' title. It must be conceded that, upon the cross-examination of one of the plaintiffs, it transpired that they had parted with their interest; but the testimony showing the transfer also declares the fact that the suit was being prosecuted in the interest of the assignee. No objection to the continuance of the suit in the names of the original plaintiffs was interposed by the defendants, nor did they make any motion in the court below seeking to have the assignee substituted, in order that, upon the record, his title and his interest might be both affected and concluded. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs' right to recover is not limited to the nominal damages to which only they would be entitled when the transfer precedes the commencement of the action. The Code (section 15) distinctly provides that, in case of a transfer of interest, the action may be continued in the name of the original party, and that it shall be neither affected nor abated by reason of such transfer of interest. This provision, in effect, prevents the application of the doctrine contended for to the facts in this case. If the defendants desired the record to show the transfer of interest in order that the satisfaction of the judgment might be clearly conclusive against the real party in interest, and operate to transfer the title as against the plaintiff in the record, it was open to them, when the facts were disclosed, to move the court for a substitution of the parties. Had they seen fit to take such action, the record then would have been a perfect defense in case of a subsequent litigation. They are protected, however, against any subsequent action by the assignee of the securities by the fact that the assignment was subsequent to the commencement of the suit. The assignee is bound by the judgment, and will be concluded as to the title in any subsequent suit. The record presents no other question which need be considered or determined. There are no errors apparent which warrant a reversal of the judgment. It should be affirmed.

REED and RICHMOND, CC., concur.

(15 Colo. 270)

HILL v. CORCORAN.

REPLEVIN—GOODS IN CUSTODY OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL—COMPETENCY OF JUROR.

1. Goods in the custody of a United States marshal, under attachment issued from a federal court, may be replevied by suit in a state court, by consent of the federal court. Adhering to Mitchell v. Smith, 13 Colo. 170, 21 Pac. Rep. 1026. ELLIOTT, J., dissenting.

2. Where a juror in an action of replevin is shown to be a clerk in the employ of a firm on intimate relations with one of the parties in interest, and which became their bondsmen upon the instrument which secured them in possession of the property in controversy, he is properly excused.

3. The fact that during the trial one of the jurors was accused of a grave crime, and employed one of the counsel for the successful party to defend him, is not ground for a new trial, where it does not appear that the juror was rendered incompetent or failed to give due attention to the testimony and arguments.

4. A judgment will not be reversed because of a remark by the trial judge tending to discredit counsel for taking an exception to the action of the court in excusing a juror for cause, where there is no showing as to the number of jurors in the box who remained there to render the verdict after the remark was made, and the remark itself does not tend to indicate any predisposition of the court regarding the controversy.

5. To justify an instruction that inadequacy of price is for the consideration of the jury in determining the fairness of a sale by a failing debtor, there must be proof of the real value of the goods, and this is not supplied by merely comparing the price with the original cost of the goods.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from superior court of Denver.

This was an action of replevin brought by the appellee Corcoran against Hill to recover the possession of certain property alleged to have been unlawfully taken, with damages for the detention. Hill defended and justified the taking under mesne processes of attachment issued out of the federal court in Colorado in two cases, in one of which Cousins and others were plaintiffs, and Louis Witkowski was defendant, and in the other of which the Bay State Shoe & Leather Company were plaintiffs, and Witkowski was likewise defendant. The defendant not only contested the jurisdiction of the court over him in this suit, but further defended on the ground that the sale between Witkowski and Corcoran, under which Corcoran claimed title, was fraudulent as against creditors, and consequently that the transfer was indefensible. Issue was taken by the plaintiff Corcoran upon the various matters set up in the answer, and he justified his suit, and attempted to sustain the jurisdiction of the court, by setting up leave of the federal court to institute the particular suit by an order duly entered for the purpose. The replication was demurred to, as to so much of it as set up the authority to institute this suit under leave granted, on the theory that the federal court was without jurisdiction to grant the leave, and that under the order, or by reason of it, or under any circumstances, the state court could acquire no jurisdiction because the property had been seized by the marshal. The demurrer was overruled, and the cause tried upon the main issue as to the character of the sale to Corcoran. No evidence of the value of the goods sold to Corcoran was given save that which came out in the history of the sale to him by Witkowski, and the inventory made at the time. Little evidence was given by the defendant which tended to establish the fraudulent character of the sale, nor did the defendant attempt to prove the extent of Witkowski's indebtedness, or Corcoran's knowledge of his situation. Whatever was proved upon that subject was of an inferential character, and derived almost wholly from the general history of the sale. The jury found upon this issue for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals.

Joseph N. Baxter and N. B. Carpenter, for appellant. Patterson & Thomas for appellee.

BISSELL, C., (after stating the facts as above.) Among the many errors urged on behalf of the appellant, that which is most extensively argued is based upon the action of the court in entertaining jurisdiction of the suit. This question was supposed to have been set at rest by the decisions of this court in the cases of Smith v. Bauer 9 Colo. 380, 12 Pac. Rep. 397; Weil v. Smith, 11 Colo. 310, 18 Pac. Rep. 30; Mitchell v. Smith, 13 Colo. 170, 21 Pac. Rep. 1026; and Smith v. Jensen, 13 Colo. 213, 22 Pac. Rep. 434.

In view of the constant and repeated assaults upon the principle involved in these decisions, and of the later adjudications of the supreme court of the United States, particularly that of Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355, it has been deemed best to further elucidate and explain this court's position on the question. This is ample justification for the labor and space essential to what may be taken as an end of the controversy, until the highest tribunal of the nation shall declare its opinion on the very matter in dispute. The language used by that very distinguished court in the case last referred to, as in all the cases following Freeman v. Howe, in 24 How. 450, affords some apparent warrant for the contention of appellant's counsel. When properly understood and explained, however, none of the federal authorities, nor any of the arguments urged against this court's position, compel any modification of the doctrine already announced. It is one of the fundamentals of the law that, to entertain and decide a controversy between parties, it is essential that the court which tries the case shall have jurisdiction of both subject-matter and of parties. The postulate that wherever there is a want of jurisdiction, either as to the person or as to the subject-matter, the judgment which it may render is indefensible, is without exception. It has thus become common to assert that, wherever a matter can be termed "jurisdictional," it is beyond the power of the court to increase or diminish its powers at pleasure concerning that matter. With regard to the subject-matter of this replevin suit, the action of the federal court concerning it cannot be said, except in a special and very restricted sense, to be jurisdictional. To permit the res to be seized on the process of another court, organized and exercising its judicial functions under a different sovereignty, may, without doing violence to legal terms or juridical definition, be termed an "invasion" of the jurisdiction of the court which has taken the property. But in the sense, and in the broad inclusion of meaning, in which that word "jurisdiction" is by the courts and lawyers used, understood, and defined, the word is not accurately applied, and has led to much uncertainty and confusion. In the main action in which the mesne process issued, the court has jurisdiction, assuming the action to have been rightly brought, of both parties and subject-matter. If, however, B.'s property be taken on the writ issued and executed in C.'s suit against A., the court, as to the essentials of the controversy arising from the seizure, has jurisdiction neither of the person nor of the subject-matter. B. is neither privy, nor party. If his property be taken and sold he is neither bound nor concluded by either process, judgment, or sale. He has not lost his property right, nor is he without remedy. The definite thing may have disappeared, and he may be restricted in the remedies open to him to enforce his rights and redress his wrongs. But of him, and of the subject-matter of any suit which he may lawfully institute, the court which seized his property has no jurisdiction without the concurrence of other facts to bring the matter within the scope of federal cognizance. This demonstrates the inaccuracy of the application of the word "jurisdiction" as a designation of the primary and fundamental difficulty. It is only the limited possessory element of jurisdiction which is either concerned or involved. The general trouble has arisen from the insurmountable obstacle to absolutely accurate and perfect judicial declaration. Unless the precise question be raised by the record, it is most liable to lie hidden beyond the range of mental vision, and be discoverable only as the land is when the ship has sailed far enough in its direction. The exact question herein has never been presented to the supreme court of the United States, nor has it ever had occasion to declare its position on this phase of it. The position of this court being unassailable, and supported by every consideration of comity, necessity, and convenience, as well as by sound and convincing legal argumentation founded on well understood and recognized rules of judicial definition and interpretation, it may very properly be assumed to be in harmony with the probable future declarations of that court. The whole question is one of the avoidance of a conflict in the exercise of the powers of two courts acting under authority conferred by different sovereignties, but exercised within the same general territorial limits. This is plain to be seen when the subject is considered both with reference to the purposes for which the authority is claimed, and the absence of right on the part of the parties really interested to assert that the control of the federal court is exclusive. The object is not to preserve the property or its fruits to answer the judgment, for neither can ultimately be devoted to any such purpose, if the process has been laid upon property to which the defendant, in the process had no title. This is apparent because the officer may be sued in a state court in trespass for the unlawful taking, or he and his bondsmen may, in like manner, be sued upon his official bond, and made to respond for the unlawful conversion. This is abundantly settled by the same high court which declares that property taken under its process may not be interfered with so long as it is within the scope and power of the writ. Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 17, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286; Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334.

The real owner is not precluded from asserting his title as against the marshal in a tribunal of his own selection. It is only that the goods are temporarily and incidentally in the custody of the court, and a stranger may not lay hold of them. Under these circumstances it is not easy to see why the federal court may not by order permit the res, the specific thing, to be pursued. The privilege does not at all belong to the officer, neither is it his right.

He could not justify on any grounds personal to himself. The jurisdiction of the federal court is dependent on citizenship, or on some other statutory consideration. If both be lacking there is no personal right in the officer. When he is permitted to set up the defense he simply asserts the power and authority of the court. It is only because the court's rights and functions are involved that the plea is permitted to him. That it is not a personal privilege is evident from those decisions which permit the damages for the taking to be recovered either of him or his bondsmen. If it were a personal privilege, or his right and privilege as an officer, the defense would always be available, and he could, at all times, and in all courts, insist upon his right to litigate in the federal forum, whether sued in trespass, or on his bond, or in replevin. That he may insist upon it in replevin is solely because the property is in the custody of the federal court. The plaintiff in the action in which process issued is equally without right to demand that the replevin suit be heard in the federal tribunal. He is without any choice in the premises as to the forum in which that controversy shall be settled. The original suit does not enter into the solution of that problem. The jurisdiction of the court over the original subject-matter and controversy is neither assumed nor cast off at its pleasure. It always remains when justly invoked and set into active operation. To say that it may by order release property which has been seized under its process either to answer a judgment which may or may not be recovered, or to satisfy one already rendered, when the particular property is alleged not to be answerable to the judgment, and permit that question to be litigated in a court otherwise of competent jurisdiction, is not to assume a power in the court to refuse or assert a jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a controversy represented by citizens who have a right to be heard in that forum. The officer is without personal right to be heard, for he may elsewhere be made to answer for his illegal taking. The party is without right because he neither has the property nor can he be heard to plead in any suit against the officer. The plea of levy under the process of the federal court is then neither a personal plea nor one incidental to the office of marshal, but the setting up of a fact, to-wit, the antecedent acquisition of possession of the property by another court foreign to the tribunal in which the later action has been instituted. It is the fact of possession solely, which, if at all, permits the jurisdiction to be said to attach. It does not spring from the existence of the main suit, nor grow out of the personnel of the officer, but the circumstance that the officer of a particular court under its process has seized the goods by construction brings them within the jurisdiction of that tribunal; and the possession, save by the exercise of a wise and well-directed comity, may not be disturbed. The ultimate judgment in the action wherein the mesne process was issued, and the sale of the property seized under final execution, in no manner affects the question of title to the property. The res, the specific thing, may be lost or transferred, but the owner may still recover of the officer for the taking, and neither the seizure and sale nor the judgment of that court is of any moment in determining the matter of the ownership. When then it is asserted that the question is one of jurisdiction it is only true in a limited and special sense. The property is in the hands of the court, and consequently is accurately said to have passed within its jurisdiction. The question of title to the property seized is never involved in the principal suit nor at all affected by the fact of seizure. A particular remedy for the establishment of that title is unavailable, because it invades the court's possession. All the court surrenders, when it enters an order permitting suit to be instituted against its officer, is that possession, and the right to it. It neither assumes jurisdiction of the subject-matter of any suit, nor does it reject jurisdiction of any controversy which has been initiated in it. The parties to the original suit remain unaffected by the order, for they never had any right to have the question of title to B.'s property investigated in the suit which has been brought by A. against C. The officer has lost nothing, because he might always be sued in the foreign tribunal for his illegal acts. The court has simply said the possession is so far yielded that the matter of ownership may be litigated in the state court. That the power exists to make the order appears unquestionable. It is conceded that there is no statutory grant of such authority, but it is the incidental and inherent right existing in every court to control, direct, and govern its own process, to maintain its authority over property which has been seized under it, or relinquish it, at its pleasure, so long as no right to contest the surrender inures to any suitor or citizen. As said by Mr. Justice MILLER in Buck v. Colbath, supra: "It is only while the property is in the possession of the court, either actually or constructively, that the court is bound or professes to protect that possession from the process of other courts. Whenever the litigation is ended, or the possession of the officer or court is discharged, other courts are at liberty to deal with it according to the rights of the parties before them, whether those rights require them to take possession of the property or not." The supreme court has undoubtedly declared the law to be that the stranger whose property has been seized may, in their court, assert and defend his title as against the process. No other position would be consistent either with the rights of citizens or the exercise of a proper authority by the court. The position and rule laid down by the supreme court of the United States are not at all in conflict with the principles which this court has declared. Both rules may well be permitted to stand, and the comity and harmony which has always prevailed, and been asserted by both tribunals, will be the better conserved and protected. The court did not err in overruling the demurrer to the replication.

The remaining errors assigned require no extended consideration. Two of them may be grouped, since they grow out of the excusing of one of the jurors from service and the remark made by the court incidentally, when he was let off from service on the panel. It is quite true that, when the court commits an error in excusing a juror who is challenged for cause, that error is the subject of review in this court, and when it is plain to be seen that thereby a party has been prejudiced, the cause will be reversed. This cause however does not seem to be brought very clearly within that rule. The record as it is brought up fails to show at what time, and under what circumstances, the juror Light was excused from service, save that it appears that, during the progress of the examination, counsel for appellee submitted to the court "that it was a question whether the juror under the circumstances ought to be admitted into the panel." No direct challenge was made for cause, nor did the court rule directly upon the proposition of a challenge as made by the challenging party. The judge proceeded to further examine the juror, and upon the conclusion of his questions excused him; and thereto the appellee saved an exception. But for the remark of counsel, no objection to the excuse of the juror could have been taken, and such exercise of the court's discretion would not have been available on error. Mooney v. People, 7 Colo. 218, 3 Pac. Rep. 235. Were it necessary, the court would be inclined to hold that there was no sustaining of a challenge for cause upon which error could be based; but it is evident that the juror was so circumstanced in his situation and in his relations that the court properly exercised the discretion reposed in it when it excused him from the panel. He was in the employ of a firm, apparently on the most excellent terms and intimate relations with one of the parties in interest. The firm became their bondsmen upon the instrument which secured them in the possession of the property in the original controversy. It is apparent that one side of the case at least might easily have been the subject of enlarged discussion in the house wherein the juror was a clerk, and that, from the atmosphere, he was liable to imbibe notions and prejudices which would render him, not perhaps an incompetent juror, but one who would not be thoroughly impartial as between the parties. At the time that the juror was excused and the exception was saved, a remark was made by the judge which had a tendency to cast some discredit upon the action of counsel in saving the exception. There is a dispute between the attorneys for the respective parties in this court as to the regularity of the bill of exceptions and the accuracy of its contents. The remark which was excepted to was written in the bill apparently after its preparation by the stenographer, and it has since been crossed out by pencil so as to leave it uncertain whether legitimately it is a part of the record. This court will not assume the task of determining what the fact is, and weighing the evidence furnished by counsel pro and con upon the subject. If the appellant desired to predicate error upon that proposition, it was his duty, after the bill of exceptions exhibiting the erasure was filed in this court, to suggest a diminution of the record, and obtain leave to file a supplemental bill showing the action of the court in the premises. It cannot be expected that this court will determine matters which are not properly determinable from the record before it. It is perhaps proper to say, however, that, while the remark is of a slightly unjudicial character, it is not of the sort for which, under the showing made here, a case would be reversed. It is not every slight departure from the strictest judicial propriety which will warrant the setting aside of the finding of a jury. It must be clear, or reasonably so, at least, that the remark would probably tend to the prejudice of the party against whom it was made. That is not clear under the circumstances here, for there is no showing as to the number of jurors in the box who remained there to render the verdict after the remark was made, nor does the remark itself tend to indicate any predisposition of the court regarding the controversy. The instructions which were asked by appellant and refused were rightly denied. It is quite within the province of a nisi prius tribunal to reject the instructions in the form asked by counsel, and to express the law upon the subjects covered in their own fashion and in their own phraseology. The practice perhaps is more honored in the breach than in the observance, but wherever it is done, and the subjects embraced within the instructions asked by counsel are included in the court's own admonitions to the jury, there is no cause for complaint. In this case, the instructions, which it would have been error to refuse had they not been covered, were fully included within the court's statement of the law. As to the others, it may be said that the case lacks the evidence upon which they can be properly predicated. It is true that an inadequacy of price is always a matter for the consideration of the jury in determining the fairness of a sale, as between the purchaser and a failing debtor, but, to apply it to any given controversy, it is incumbent upon the contestant to make proof of the real value and the proper price of the goods that were sold. The only way in which that was done in this case was by comparing the price paid by the purchaser with the original cost of the goods. This is not such a determining of value as necessitates the giving of that instruction.

There is but one other error which need be considered, and this grows out of the overruling of a motion for a new trial, based upon an affidavit substantially setting forth that, during the trial, one of the jurors in the panel was accused of a grave crime, and that he employed one of the counsel for the other side to defend him against the charge. There was nothing in the proof offered upon this matter which tended to show that the juror was thereby rendered incompetent, or that he failed to give due and proper attention to the testimony as it was adduced, and to the arguments of counsel. Even under great strain and pressure of misfortune, or other circumstances, the mental operations may, for collateral purposes, be as clear and precise, and, possibly, more accurate, than when free from pressure. These facts are not of themselves enough to warrant setting aside a verdict which is abundantly sustained by the testimony. There are no other errors assigned which need consideration. The judgment should be affirmed.

BRAND v. MERRITT et al.

REAL-ESTATE BROKERS—ACTION FOR COMMISSIONS.

1. In an action for services rendered by real-estate brokers in procuring a purchaser for defendant's land, where there were no written pleadings in the trial court, and no testimony of any definite contract, evidence of the value of the services, based on the price for which the land sold, was properly admitted, and a judgment entered upon that basis was proper.

2. Where it is claimed in such action that the property had been sold by another agent prior to the negotiation of the sale by plaintiffs, and the evidence upon that point is somewhat conflicting, a finding that no such sale was made will not be disturbed, although upon the evidence the court might have reached a different conclusion, especially as defendant testified that he gave plaintiffs no notice of the pending sale, and permitted them to continue their efforts in his behalf.

BISSELL, C. Merritt & Grommon brought this suit in 1886 against George Brand, to recover a sum of money which they alleged to be due them for services rendered in the procurement of a purchaser for certain property which Brand had placed in their hands for sale. The case was tried without a jury in the superior court, to which it went on the appeal taken by them, and resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $125, to which the defendant excepted, and in regard to which he alleges error. There are not many questions raised and discussed by counsel for plaintiff in error, although everything of importance is considered in his brief. The errors on which he relies may be properly grouped in three divisions.

It is contended that the judgment cannot be maintained because it was rendered upon the basis of the value of the services rendered by the plaintiffs, computed upon the price for which the property was sold. It is said that as plaintiffs sued for a specific sum, and sought to recover upon a definite contract, they were limited to a recovery upon the contract as they averred it, and were debarred any relief upon the basis of the value of the services rendered. This contention might possibly be true, were it apparent from either the abstract or the record that the plaintiffs had declared upon a specific contract which they had failed to prove, or the evidence established the existence of such a contract. The trouble, however, is that there were no written pleadings in the justice's court, where the case originated, and none were filed in the superior court, where it was subsequently tried. It is therefore impossible to determine whether the suit was brought upon any such hypothesis, or whether the plaintiffs should be held entitled to recover only upon due proof of it. The record itself is equally barren of testimony establishing a contract upon which the plaintiffs could recover, unless they made proof of the value of their services as rendered. Under these circumstances, the evidence as to the value was properly admitted, and judgment upon that basis properly entered by the court.

The plaintiff in error likewise contends, by several errors assigned, that, in a suit by real-estate brokers to recover commissions earned by the procurement of a purchaser to whom the property is not ultimately sold, they are bound to make proof that the customer which they produced was both able and willing to take the property and pay the price put upon it by the owner, and to carry out a contract which, in terms, conforms to the conditions affixed by the owner when he put the property in their hands. The principle contended for is accurately stated by counsel, and it has been universally held to be true that such proof is absolutely indispensable to the broker's recovery of commissions. The accuracy of the statement does not determine its application to the case in hand. The evidence upon this proposition is not as full and satisfactory as it is ordinarily made in cases of this description. This is due perhaps to the suggestions of the court that further evidence upon the subject need not be produced. There was, however, enough testimony given upon this subject to warrant the court in reaching the conclusion at which he arrived. It is probably true that it was not offered in the form usually observed in giving testimony of this description, but no objection was taken to the method of its offer; nor upon the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case was a specific objection taken that they had failed sufficiently to prove this essential fact. In the absence of objections which properly raise a question of this sort, the findings of the court upon such a proposition of fact will not be disturbed.

The only other error which has been urged is that the case shows that the property had been sold by another agent prior to the time of the negotiation of the sale by the plaintiffs. It is contended that this fact debars the plaintiffs' recovery, upon the principle that where property is placed in the hands of several brokers for sale, to the knowledge of them all, any one of the brokers assumes the risk of having his claim to compensation defeated by a sale made by another broker before he procures a purchaser. It is wholly unnecessary to determine the accuracy of this legal proposition, for the court has found, as a matter of fact, that no such sale was made prior to the time the plaintiffs found a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase upon the specified terms, and notified the owner. The evidence upon this proposition is somewhat conflicting, and it is not easy to determine from the evidence produced the exact dates and times of the sales by the contending brokers. Upon the evidence, it would have been possible for the court to reach a different conclusion from that expressed in his judgment. The record, however, justifies the finding which he made. It has support in the equitable circumstances apparent in the case. According to the owner's evidence, the sale which he contends defeats the brokers' right to recover depended solely upon the purchaser's conclusions concerning the title. Notwithstanding this fact, he gave the plaintiffs no notice whatever of the pending sale, and permitted them to continue their efforts in his behalf. They were thus fully justified in believing the agency still to exist, and the owner will be held to the full responsibility of its continuance, unless he be able to demonstrate satisfactorily that the sale, which in law is to be held to terminate it, was in fact consummated before the brokers found a purchaser and earned the commission. Under these circumstances, the finding will not be disturbed. It is an universal rule in this court that the judgment of a visi prius tribunal will never be disturbed from any considerations of mere preponderance of testimony, and wherever there is evidence enough in the case to justify the judgment rendered it will be sustained, unless it is so manifestly against the weight of the testimony as to indicate prejudice or gross error. Ralph v. Weary, 7 Colo. 217, 3 Pac. Rep. 224; Smelting Co. v. Pless, 8 Colo. 87, 5 Pac. Rep. 650; Jackson v. Allen, 4 Colo. 263; Sieber v. Frink, 7 Colo. 148, 2 Pac. Rep. 901. There being no error manifest in the record, the judgment should be affirmed.

TRIAL—READING PLEADINGS TO JURY—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. Where the issue is clearly defined and thoroughly understood at the trial, a party is not entitled to read to the jury extracts from the pleadings, on the ground that his opponent, by failing to deny, admits a material allegation, which admission affects his credibility as a witness on his own behalf. The construction of such pleadings is for the court.

2. In an action to enforce a personal liability against the directors of a corporation, upon a note made by it, on the ground of their failure to record certificates of the amount of capital stock and the proportion paid in as required by statute, defendants set up an agreement whereby plaintiff, in consideration of a certain bill of sale, and the assignment of certain leases, released them from personal liability. Held, a charge that, unless the jury found that such an agreement was made, defendants were liable, because of their failure to file the certificates, was proper.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

E. P. Harman, for appellants. Isaac E. Barnum, for appellee.

RICHMOND, C. Elmer W. Merritt, plaintiff below and appellee herein, instituted his action in the county court to recover of the defendants the sum of $595, alleging in his complaint that John Cook, Jr., W. H. Conley, and B. F. Bush, on the 1st day of January, 1885, became the directors of a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Colorado, known as the "Denver Rink & Land Company," and so remained and continued directors until the 1st day of January, 1886; that on the 7th day of May, 1885, the corporation borrowed the sum of $1,000 of the plaintiff, for which it executed its promissory note; that on the 9th of November, 1885, the corporation desired to continue the loan aforesaid, increasing the amount to the sum of $1,300, which was done, and a promissory note executed therefor. A portion of this sum was paid, leaving a balance due to him from the corporation of $595, which sum he seeks to recover from the defendants, appellants herein, as directors of said company, alleging that the president and directors or trustees of said corporation had not recorded in the office of the secretary of state, or in the office of the recorder of deeds, in the county wherein the business of said company was carried on, any certificate stating the amount of capital of the company fixed and paid in; and, further, that the corporation did not within 60 days from the 1st day of January, 1885, or at any other time before or since, file or record in the office of the recorder of deeds, in said county of Arapahoe, that being the county wherein the business of said company was carried on, any report stating or showing the amount of capital of said company, or the proportion or amount of said capital stock that was paid in. Defendants answered by a general denial of all the allegations in the complaint, and for a third defense allege that, at the time of the giving of the note for the sum of $1,300, the Denver Rink & Land Company executed to the plaintiff a bill of sale of certain personal property, and that plaintiff at that time entered into a contract with the corporation through its officers to the effect that the company was to assign in writing to the plaintiff certain leases owned by said company, and that, in consideration of the written assignment of the leases by the company to plaintiff, plaintiff obligated himself to the company and the defendants Cook and Conley not to hold defendants or either of them liable as individuals, or in their official capacity as officers, directors, and trustees of the company, and to look only and solely to the company for the payment of the note of $1,300, and interest, and whatever rents he might have to pay for said company; that, in accordance with this contract, the company assigned in writing said leases to plaintiff. To this answer, plaintiff replies denying that he entered into any such contract or agreement. It is apparent from the pleadings, as well as from the testimony included in the record filed in this court, that the issue between the parties plaintiff and defendant was whether or not at the time of the execution of the last note plaintiff agreed to relieve defendants Cook and Conley of any responsibility individually, or as directors and officers of the company, for the payment of the sum due him. It is also apparent from the record that the various certificates referred to in the complaint, and required by the statute to be filed, were not filed, and that on account of the failure to file the certificates the defendants, as officers and directors, became under the law responsible to plaintiff, unless the plaintiff had agreed as set up in the third defense. The cause was tried in the county court, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff, whereupon it was appealed to the district court, and there tried to a jury, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $523. To reverse this judgment, appellants prosecute this appeal.

In support of their contention, it is claimed that the court erred in refusing defendants' counsel the right to read to the jury defendants' third defense and plaintiff's replication thereto, and that the court erred in its instruction to the jury, and in refusing to give instructions asked for by the defendants. The object, as averred in the argument of appellants' counsel, of reading the pleadings referred to to the jury, was to show that the replication did not deny all the allegations of the third defense; that, as a matter of fact, it admitted a very material allegation, which admission he claims goes to the credit of the plaintiff as a witness. This being the case, he insists the jury should have had the benefit of the admission. Pleadings are presumed to be statements, in legal form, of those facts constituting the charge or defense of the parties by means of which issues between the parties to be tried are defined, and are necessary to inform the court what issues are raised, and which are proper for trial in the case. It is not the province of the jury to construe and determine the effect of the pleadings. In section 260, 1 Thomp. Trials, the author uses the following language: "It should be kept in mind that matters concerning the pleadings are ordinarily addressed to the judge, whose duty it is to state the issues to the jury when he comes to deliver to them his instructions, and that comments on the pleadings to the jury are, in general, out of place, and sometimes unprofessional." In Tavis v. Hicks, 41 Cal. 123, it was held that "the question as to what facts are admitted by the pleadings is one for the court, and not for the jury, and the court should not submit such a question to the jury." In Missouri Coal & Oil Co. v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 35 Mo. 85, it was held that "an instruction by the court that all allegations and petitions not specifically denied in the answer are to be taken as true is erroneous. The issues should be specifically stated by the court." 1 Thomp. Trials, § 1027; Potter v. Wooster, 10 Iowa, 334.

It is not necessary for us to go so far as to say that under no circumstances may counsel be permitted to discuss or read to the jury the pleadings in a case, or extracts therefrom; but, in the case at bar, the issue was one clearly defined, thoroughly understood by court, counsel, and jury, and counsel sought to bring to the attention of the jury the fact that certain allegations of the defendants were admitted by failure to deny on the part of the plaintiff. That question certainly was not for the jury. It was for the court to determine, and it was the duty of counsel to call the court's attention to his position, and ask instructions. In refusing this permission to counsel, we see no error. The instructions asked for by the defendants and refused by the court, we think, were fully covered by the instruction given to the jury. The court instructed the jury as to the nature of the contract, and particularly enforced upon its attention the fact that if plaintiff had agreed with the defendants, Cook and Conley, by reason of the assignment of the leases, and the execution of the bill of sale, to relieve them of responsibility for the indebtedness of the company as directors and officers of the company, they should find for the defendants; but if, on the contrary, such a contract was not entered into, that, by reason of the failure of defendants as officers and directors of the corporation to file the certificates provided for by law, they became responsible to the plaintiff to the amount of his claim against the company. It is unnecessary for us to set forth the instructions asked and refused. Suffice it to say that a careful examination of the record warrants us in asserting that the issues between the parties plaintiff and defendant were thoroughly understood, and fairly tried. There is evidence to support the verdict, and the instructions of the court were sufficiently full and explicit upon the issues. We see no error, and therefore are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF DENVER v. DEVENISH.

BANKS AND BANKING—PAYMENT OF CHECK BY MISTAKE.

1. Plaintiff bank in the regular course of its business received checks drawn by C. upon defendant, a private banker, which were forwarded to F., its correspondent, for collection, and paid by draft, payment of which was afterwards stopped by defendant. In an action on the draft, defendant pleaded that it was executed under the mistaken belief that C. had sufficient funds on deposit to meet the checks. On the trial defendant testified that he drew the draft in reliance upon C.'s statement that a certain check left by him with defendant for collection would be paid, and that such check was not paid

Held, that the mistake attempted to be proved was not the one relied on in the pleading, and that neither of them was available as a defense.

2. A special defense that, after the execution of the draft, C. deposited large sums of money which defendant, relying upon the promise of F. to return the draft, paid out on other checks, was unavailing in view of defendant's own testimony showing that when the deposits were made he knew that the draft had been protested, and was being retained, and he was not relieved from responsibility thereon.

3. Defendant's agent testified that he gave the checks to F., and explained the circumstances, and that the latter took them, and said that he could not return the draft because it was in the post-office, but that the matter would be all right. In reply to a question by the court, the witness stated that he could not say exactly what F.'s language was, and that he did not think he said in express words, "I will have the draft returned." F. denied that he agreed to return the draft, or accept the checks in payment. Held, that no agreement by F. to rescind and return the draft was established.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

REED, C. Appellant is a national bank doing business in the city of Denver. In the year 1883, appellee was a private banker doing business at Tin Cup, in the county of Gunnison. Appellant, in the regular course of business, received checks amounting to $312, drawn by one C. F. Caldwell upon the bank of appellee, which were forwarded to its correspondent, one Freeman, at Tin Cup, for collection, and presented on the afternoon of December 27, 1883, at the bank of Devenish & Co., and paid by draft drawn upon the German National Bank of Denver, of which the following is a copy: "$312. Cochran & Devenish, Bankers, Tin Cup, Colo., Dec. 27, 1883. Pay to the order of S. N. Wood, cashier, three hundred and twelve dollars. S. G. DEVENISH & Co. To German Nat'l B'k, Denver, Colo." On the afternoon of the next day, (December 28th,) appellee returned the checks which had been paid and canceled on the day previous, to Freeman, and asked a return of the draft, claiming that the checks had been paid through mistake. The draft had been forwarded by Freeman to the appellant at Denver. Appellee, by telegram, stopped the payment of the draft. Appellant did not return the draft, and afterwards instituted this suit to recover the amount, the complaint being in the ordinary form of a bill of exchange.

The defendant in answer put in special pleas admitting the presentation and payment of the checks. "Believing that said Caldwell had on deposit with defendant funds to meet and pay said checks, and in that belief, the defendant made and delivered to said Freeman, agent of the plaintiff, the bill of exchange in the complaint herein described; but defendant avers that such bill of exchange was so executed and delivered as aforesaid, by defendant, under a mistake of fact, and that the said Caldwell did not then have, at the time of the making and delivery of said bill of exchange, in the hands of defendant, funds to pay the check for which said bill of exchange was given." That defendant discovered the mistake about 1 o'clock the next day, (December 28th,) when the checks were returned to Freeman, and he was requested to return the draft. That Freeman promised to return the draft, but neglected to do so. It is also pleaded, as a special defense, that on the 20th of January, 1884, Caldwell deposited with appellee large sums of money much in excess of the amount of the draft, but that appellee, relying upon the promise of Freeman to return the draft, failed to protect himself, and paid out such deposits on other checks of Caldwell. These special defenses were fully replied to by the plaintiff. The case was tried to the court, without a jury, and judgment found for the defendant, from which this appeal was taken.

The appellee relies in argument in support of the judgment upon two propositions: First. That the payment of the checks was made through such a mistake of fact as legally entitled him to recall it upon discovering the mistake. Second. Upon the supposed rescission of the transaction by delivery of the paid and canceled check to Freeman, the correspondent of appellant, and the demand for the return of the draft, and the supposed acceptance of the checks by Freeman and their detention by him. Caldwell was a customer of appellee,—kept his account with them. They were supposed to be informed of his financial standing, and certainly were supposed to know the condition of his account with them at the time of the presentation of the checks for payment. Banks are required, and for their own safety are compelled, to know at all times the balance to the credit of each individual customer, and they accept and pay checks at their own risk and peril. If, from negligence or inattention to their own affairs, banks improvidently pay when the account of the customer is not in a condition to warrant it, and if by mistake a check is paid when the drawer has no funds, the bank must look to the customer for rectification, not to the party to whom the check was paid. The supposed mistake relied upon in argument is stated in the pleadings as follows: "That such bill of exchange was so executed and delivered as aforesaid, by defendant, under a mistake of fact, and that the said Caldwell did not then have, at the time of the making and delivery of the said bill of exchange, in the hands of the defendant, funds to pay the checks for which said bill of exchange was given, and that defendant discovered said mistake at, to-wit the hour of 1 o'clock on the afternoon of the 28th day of December, 1883." The character of the supposed mistake, as stated in pleading and shown in evidence, was such as to preclude appellee from availing himself of it as a defense. It being the direct result of carelessness and inattention to his own affairs, there can be no relief at law, and, even in equity, courts will seldom if ever relieve a man from the result of a mistake attributable to negligence or want of diligence in his own affairs. Kerr, Frand & M. 407; Beaufort v. Neeld, 12 Clark & F. 248; Leuty v. Hillas, 2 De Gex & J. 110; Railroad Corp. v. Babcock, 6 Metc.

(Mass.) 346; Ferson v. Sanger, 1 Woodb. & M. 138; Wood v. Patterson, 4 Md. Ch. 335.

An examination of the evidence shows that it utterly failed to support the allegation in the answer in regard to a mistake. S. G. Devenish, in substance, testified that, at the time of the presentation of the Caldwell checks on December 27th, for which a draft was drawn, Caldwell was a customer of his bank; that he had no money to his credit in the bank; that prior to that date, on December 19th, Caldwell had left with the bank for collection a check on the First National Bank of Leadville for $150, which he represented would be paid; that, relying upon such assurances as to the check for $150, he accepted the checks of Caldwell on the 27th for $312, and drew the draft in controversy; that at 1 o'clock P. M. of the 28th, he found that the representations of Caldwell, in regard to the Leadville check of $150, were false, and the check unpaid; that he then caused the checks of Caldwell to be returned to Freeman, and requested a return of the draft. It is apparent at once that the supposed mistake attempted to be proved was not the one alleged in the pleading. It is perhaps needless to say that the supposed mistake established by the evidence is not such an one as to be cognizable at law as a ground for the rescission of an executed transaction between the parties to this suit. It was not a mutual mistake to which appellant was a party, or of which he was supposed to have any information. It seems at most, when explained, a case of misplaced confidence of appellee in the statements of a customer on the strength of which money was advanced to the customer and paid to appellant. Such mistakes are not such as are defined as mistakes in the books and remedied in courts.

We do not see how the last special defense, viz., that Caldwell afterwards deposited large sums of money which appellee, relying upon the promise of Freeman to return the draft, paid out on other checks, can aid him. Mr. Devenish testified that on the 2d or 3d day of January, 1884, about mid-day, he informed Freeman of his surprise at having received a notice of protest of the draft in question. Consequently he knew at that time that the draft was being retained by the appellant, and he held for its payment on refusal of the German National Bank to accept it; and, on the 20th day of January, he knew it had not been returned, nor he relieved from his responsibility on his outstanding draft. Why did he not protect himself when he had an opportunity and full knowledge of the facts? If appellee considered the transaction rescinded, and the checks of Caldwell unpaid by the draft, good faith required that he should have paid them from the deposited funds, knowing them to be outstanding and unpaid. His failure to protect himself when opportunity offered cannot well prevail as a defense in the action. The defense made is not tenable on the ground of mistake, and, if allowed to prevail, could only succeed upon full proof of the agency of Freeman, and his authority to bind appellant by an agreement to rescind, and proof that he did make the contract and promised to return the draft. The testimony fails to establish any such agency. It shows him to have been a merchant to whom appellant sent checks on the bank of appellee for collection, which he collected, and remitted the proceeds, generally in drafts drawn upon its correspondent, the German National Bank. Appellee did not attempt to prove anything further in regard to the scope of Freeman's agency. Freeman testified that that was the only agency or connection he had with appellant.

The testimony also fails to establish any agreement of Freeman to rescind and return the draft. The interview with Freeman was not by Devenish, as he was indisposed, but between Mr. Uhren, representing Devenish, with Mr. Freeman. Mr. Uhren testified as follows: "I took the checks, with that mark on the upper left-hand corner in pencil, and the signature had been canceled; that is, by drawing a line across it with a pen. Took them over to Mr. Freeman, and explained the circumstances to him, very shortly, as I was very busy. He took the checks. He said he could not give me the draft, because it was in the post-office, but that the matter would be all right. I left the store and went home, and heard no more about it until it was protested; and afterwards the suit was brought." "The Court. Did he say to you that he would make the matter all right? Answer. I understood the draft would be returned. He could not give it to me at that time because it was in the post-office. I do not think he said in express words, 'I will have the draft returned.' I cannot say exactly what his language was at this time." The testimony of Mr. Freeman was as follows: "I am under the impression that it was a couple of days after the defendant, Devenish, paid the Caldwell checks, that Mr. Uhren brought the said checks back and left them with me. I know it was one day, and I think it was two. I did not, at the time Mr. Uhren returned the Caldwell checks to me, or at any time afterwards, agree to return the draft in controversy to the defendant. I believe I said I would write down about it, which I afterwards did. I did not ever accept, for the plaintiff in this action, the said Caldwell checks from the defendant Devenish, or from Mr. Uhren as his agent. I told Mr. Uhren at the time he left the checks with me that I had sent the draft off. I did not, on the 2d or 3d of January, 1884, at the defendant's bank in Tin Cup, tell him that I was surprised that his draft had been protested, and that it would be all right as soon as the plaintiff received the letter, for at that time I had not written the plaintiff about the matter. It was about a week afterwards that I wrote. * * * I did not, as agent of the plaintiff, accept the Caldwell checks given for the draft in controversy. I had no authority from plaintiff to accept from defendant the said Caldwell checks for said plaintiff." For the reasons above given, we advise that the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded.

SHERIFFS—PROCEEDS OF ATTACHMENT SALE—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Code Colo. § 109, requires a sheriff to deliver over the attached property or the proceeds thereof remaining in his hands unapplied on the judgment to defendant. Held, that a sheriff has no power to deduct from a balance in his hands, arising from the sale of attached property, counsel fees for defending an action of trover brought against him by a third party for the conversion of the goods levied on under the attachment.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

Wolcott & Valle, for appellant. E. P. Harman, for appellees.

RICHMOND, C. The Kansas City Distilling Company brought suit in the district court of Arapahoe county against appellee upon a book-account, suing out a writ of attachment. The writ was placed in the hands of appellant, Frederick Cramer, who was the sheriff of Arapahoe county. He levied upon certain goods and chattels as the property of Brasher. One Marsh brought an action of trover against appellant, claiming that the goods and chattels so levied upon belonged to him, and that the same had been taken by appellant and converted to his own use. Appellant answers, averring that the goods and chattels were the property of Brasher, justifying the seizure under the writ of attachment, and also averring that the transfer of title by Brasher to Marsh was fraudulent as against creditors. The cause was tried upon this issue, and resulted in a judgment favorable to appellant. The case of the Kansas City Distilling Company was subsequently tried, and a judgment in its favor was rendered for $801.65, with costs. The attachment was sustained, and the property ordered sold for the purpose of paying said judgment. After paying the judgment of the distilling company, and the taxed costs in full, there remained in the hands of the appellant the sum of $214. Appellant employed counsel to defend the suit brought against him by Marsh, thereby incurring expenses for counsel fees in the action amounting to $150. He filed his petition in the case of the Kansas City Distilling Company v. Brasher, setting up these facts, and asking the court to take testimony as to the reasonableness of the fees charged by counsel, and prayed that he be allowed to pay the same, or such amount as the court should deem reasonable, out of the sum of $214 remaining in his hands. Brasher appeared, admitted the averments of the petition, but claimed that the petition did not state facts sufficient to authorize the allowance of anything to appellant. This was the conclusion of the court, and the petition of appellant was denied.

The only question presented for consideration is whether or not the court should have allowed the sheriff, Cramer, to deduct from the balance remaining in his hands a reasonable sum for counsel fees. Section 109, Code Civil Proc., is as follows: "If, after selling all the property attached by him remaining in his hands, and applying the proceeds, together with the proceeds of any debts or credits collected by him, deducting his fees, to the payment of the judgment, and any balance shall remain due, the sheriff shall proceed to collect such balance as upon an execution in other cases. Whenever the judgment shall have been paid, the sheriff, upon reasonable demand, shall deliver over to the defendant the attached property remaining in his hands and any proceeds of the property attached unapplied on the judgment." The last clause of this provision unmistakably provides for a disposition of the balance of any fund remaining in the hands of the sheriff, and distinctly commands the payment of such balance, after satisfaction of the judgment, to the defendant. By Gen. St. p. 273, § 90, it is provided that "no sheriff shall, directly or indirectly, ask, demand, or receive, for any service to be performed by him in the discharge of any of his official duties, any greater fees than are allowed by law, under penalty," etc. The above provision refers of course only to fees, and not to actual reasonable expenses incurred in caring for the property held by the sheriff under attachment, and this court in Bank v. Tucker, 7 Colo. 220, 3 Pac. Rep. 217, has determined that the sheriff is entitled to reimbursement for reasonable charges incurred in taking possession of, removing, and keeping property taken on a writ of attachment. We fail, however, to see the applicability of the conclusion of the court in this case to the question under discussion. The proceeding by Marsh was against the sheriff in trover for conversion. These two individuals were the only parties to that proceeding, and besides it has never been the practice to allow against the losing party, in ordinary actions at law, fees paid out by the successful party to counsel. The defense of the trover suit by the sheriff was for the benefit of the Kansas City Distilling Company, and any expense incurred by the sheriff in that proceeding, in our judgment, should have been paid by the company. It is true that the sheriff, in the performance of his duty in attaching property, or levying an execution upon it, assumes (in the language of another) a double-edged responsibility. The general rule is that the sheriff in the service of the execution writ or the attachment writ acts at his peril. While the property is not in the possession of the defendant, and it is not clear that it belongs to him, the sheriff is not bound to act without full and ample indemnity. Murfree, Sher. § 620; Crock, Sher. § 464. We think that in this case, before subjecting himself to an expense in defense of the title to the property in which the plaintiff in the attachment proceedings was directly and only interested he should have called upon the plaintiff, the Kansas City Distilling Company, and exacted of it either that it assume the responsibility of that defense or provide the means of employing counsel. In the absence of statute supporting the contention of appellant, we feel warranted in saying that the judgment should be affirmed.

REAL-ESTATE BROKERS—COMMISSIONS.

Where defendant placed land with plaintiffs for sale on commission, knowing that a portion thereof belonged to a railroad company, plaintiffs' right to their commissions upon procuring a purchaser ready and willing to pay the agreed price was not defeated by defendant's refusal to deed the land, unless he received pay for the portion owned by the company.

Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

Action for commissions for the sale of real estate. The complaint alleges the copartnership of appellees, Henry Apple and George A. Hamilton, plaintiffs below, as brokers and real-estate agents, under the firm name of Apple & Hamilton; that, in the year 1887, at the special instance and request of Samuel M. Cawker, defendant, plaintiffs sold certain real estate owned by him; that said sale was made in accordance with instructions given plaintiffs by defendant. A description of the premises is given, and it is alleged that the same contained 40 acres, less about 3 acres, occupied by the Union Pacific Railway Company with its right of way. It is further averred that the price of said land, so sold by plaintiffs, as aforesaid, was $5,735, and that the plaintiffs' services for and on account of said sale were and are reasonably worth 5 per cent. of said sum, or $286.17, of which amount no part had been paid. The defendant in his answer admits the copartnership and business of plaintiffs, as alleged. All other allegations in the complaint are denied. The case was tried to a jury in the court below, and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff in the sum of $261.25. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and judgment for plaintiffs entered upon the verdict. No question upon the amount of the judgment is presented upon this appeal, the sole controversy being as to whether or not any commissions had been earned.

W. W. Cook, for appellant. C. P. Butler, for appellees.

HAYT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The evidence in this case shows beyond controversy that appellant, Samuel M. Cawker, was the owner of a tract of land near the city of Denver, containing about 120 acres, and that he authorized appellees to sell the same, or a portion of it, at $155 per acre, less the usual commissions for making such sale, which were to be retained by appellees. It is also shown that this land was subdivided into 40-acre tracts, and that appellees procured a purchaser for one of said subdivisions, at the price and upon the terms fixed by appellant. It is further shown that about 3 acres of said subdivision belonged to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, leaving only 37 acres to which appellant could make title. Mr. R. W. Woodbury, the purchaser, procured by appellees, stood ready and willing to pay for this tract the sum of $5,735. This being at the rate of $155 per acre, he was acceptable to the owner. The consummation of the sale was prevented, however, by appellant's refusing to deed the tract, unless he received pay also for the land owned by the railroad company. Appellant knew at the time he placed the land with appellees for sale that the railroad company owned and occupied a portion thereof. He could not give the purchaser title to the lands so occupied, and was not entitled to pay therefor. Under the circumstances, we are satisfied that his demand is entirely without foundation, and doubtless made for the purpose of defeating the sale. Upon the facts, we think appellees were entitled to the commissions. In the case of Finerty v. Fritz, 5 Colo. 174, it is said: "But where an agent has produced a purchaser who is acceptable to the owner, and able and willing to purchase on terms satisfactory to the owner, he has performed his duty, and if, from any failure of the owner to enter into a binding contract, or to enforce a contract against the purchaser, the sale is not completed, the agent may recover his commissions."

The judgment is affirmed.

TABOR et al. v. CLARK.

INJUNCTION—LIABILITY ON BOND—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

T. brought suit against C. and others, alleging that an agreement by C. to sell certain land was assigned to a corporation in which T. was a stockholder; that such agreement was of great value to the company; that certain of the directors, for their personal advantage, and by collusion with C., canceled the agreement; that immediately thereafter said directors, as individuals, purchased the land from C., and executed a trust-deed thereon, to secure notes for the purchase price; and that C. was proceeding to sell the land under the trust-deed. The relief demanded was that the sale to the directors be set aside, and the contract with the company reinstated. An injunction was granted restraining C., pending the trial, from negotiating the notes, and proceeding with the sale. Defendants recovered judgment. In an action on the injunction bond, the only damages proved were attorney's fees. Held, that the recovery should have been limited to the fees for services rendered in connection with the injunction, and that it was error to allow the attorney's fees for the entire litigation.

Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

In 1886, Tabor brought suit against Clark and others, alleging in his complaint that Clark, being the owner of the premises therein described, entered into a written contract for the sale thereof to certain parties, which contract was afterwards, with the knowledge and consent of Clark, duly assigned to the Denver Circle

Real Estate Company; that this contract was of great value to the company; that plaintiff was a stockholder in said company; that two of the remaining co-defendant's, viz., Henry and Loveland, acting as directors of the corporation, fraudulently, without any consideration whatever, and for their own personal advancement, canceled and annulled the written contract between Clark and the corporation; that Clark had full notice and knowledge of the fraudulent conduct of said Henry and Loveland, and colluded with them in connection therewith; that, after such attempted cancellation of the contract, Henry and Loveland as individuals immediately purchased from Clark the land in question, executing to him their promissory notes for upwards of $60,000, the balance of the purchase money, and, to secure the same, gave a trust-deed upon the property; and that Loveland and Henry had defaulted in the payment of the notes thus given, and Clark was proceeding to advertise and sell the land in pursuance of the trust-deed. Plaintiff demanded that the sale to Loveland and Henry be set aside; that their trust-deed to Clark be canceled; and that the original contract with the corporation be restored, and given full force and effect. Plaintiff also sought to procure a temporary injunction restraining Clark, pending the trial, from negotiating the notes of Henry and Loveland, and from further proceeding with his sale of the property under the trust-deed; the trustees named in the deed being also made parties defendant to the suit. The temporary injunction asked for was granted, upon the filing of a bond conditioned according to law. A motion was made to dissolve, but was not separately considered or passed upon. The injunction remained in force until the final determination of the suit, when, the judgment on the merits being in favor of defendants, a dissolution necessarily took place. The present suit was instituted by Clark against Tabor and his surety, to recover damages upon the injunction bond thus given. The only damages claimed, or sought to be proved, were attorney's fees. The evidence offered covered these fees for the entire litigation, and the court charged the jury that, if they found for the plaintiff, they might allow as damages this total amount. A verdict was rendered for $1,250. From the judgment duly entered thereon, the present appeal was taken.

HELM, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The cause in which the injunction bond now sued on was given was not primarily injunctive in its nature. It was brought to secure the cancellation of the trust-deed given by Henry and Loveland upon the premises in question, and to procure a reinstatement of the original contract between Clark and the Denver Circle Real Estate Company, as assignee. This contract appears by the complaint to have been of great value to the company. The cancellation thereof by the two directors named is alleged to have been wholly without consideration and fraudulent, and Clark is connected by averment with the fraud. Were we to discard from consideration the injunctive feature of the proceeding, a full and complete cause of action would nevertheless appear in the pleading. The injunction was ancillary to the principal relief claimed. Its purpose was to render the ultimate decree in the main case, if given for plaintiff, effective. It simply inhibited Clark, pendente lite, from negotiating the notes, which would necessarily carry with them the security, and from selling the property in pursuance of the trust-deed to innocent third parties. It is needless to say that either of these steps would have proved seriously detrimental to plaintiff, had he recovered in the end. Under these circumstances, the charge of the court must be held erroneous. The injunction bond was given to protect appellee from injury by virtue of the issuance of the injunction. The attorney's fee should have been accordingly limited. Neither the principal nor the surety in that bond could by virtue of its provisions be held for the value of legal services rendered in the preparation and trial of the main case. 2 Suth. Dam. 68, and cases cited; High, Inj. §§ 973, 974. It was claimed in oral argument that the real and sole object of the suit in which the injunction issued, was to obtain a postponement of the sale under the trust-deed, and thus enable Henry and Loveland to avoid such sale by procuring the requisite sum of money, and taking up the notes. Tabor, so it was asserted, acted in the interest of those parties, and did not prosecute the suit in good faith for the purpose of securing the principal relief ostensibly claimed by the complaint. It is sufficient for us to say that, if these facts were satisfactorily demonstrated at that trial, nevertheless, we are not apprised thereof by the record now before us. Of course this record must govern the present decision, and we cannot, upon aught that appears therein, sustain the claim of counsel in this regard. We are aware of the fact that it may be difficult to apportion the value of legal services, under such circumstances as are here presented. Counsel, perhaps, cannot say exactly how much time and labor were consumed in resisting the ancillary injunctive part of the case; but it is no more difficult to separate the claims for service in connection with the principal case, and with the injunction, and to fairly approximate the sum due for the latter, than it is to estimate the amount to be recovered in many other cases upon which courts are called to adjudicate. Besides, the existence of this embarrassment does not furnish a legal reason why the parties to the injunction bond should be held for damages not in any way contemplated or provided for by their contract. For the reasons given, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

ELLIOTT, J., having presided at the trial below, did not participate in this decision.

LONDONER v. PEOPLE ex rel. BARTON.(Supreme Court of Colorado. Nov. 7, 1890.)APPEAL—FROM JUDGMENT OF OUSTER.

Under Code Colo. 1887, § 388, providing that appeals to the supreme court from the district, county, and superior courts shall be allowed in all cases where the judgment appealed from be final, and shall amount, exclusive of costs, to $100, or relate to a franchise or freehold, no appeal lies from a judgment of ouster entered by a district court in an action for the usurpation of a public office.

Upon motion to dismiss appeal.

HAYT, J. This is an action for the usurpation of the office of mayor of the city of Denver. In the district court, a judgment of ouster was entered against appellant, from which this appeal is prosecuted. The right to this appeal is claimed upon the following provision of the Civil Code: "Appeals to the supreme court from the district, county, and superior courts shall be allowed in all cases where the judgment or decree appealed from be final, and shall amount, exclusive of costs, to the sum of $100, or relate to a franchise or freehold," etc. Section 388, Code 1887. It is well settled that he who relies upon the right of appeal must be able to show some positive legislative authorization for such right. In the case at bar, no money judgment was entered in the court below, from which an appeal could be taken; the sole claim being that the judgment relates to a franchise, and is therefore appealable. It seems clear, however, that the judgment appealed from relates to a public office, and not to a franchise. The difference between a franchise and a public office is plainly recognized by the Code in several instances. Thus the title to chapter 27 is "Of actions for the usurpation of an office or franchise;" and the distinction between the two is plainly maintained throughout the body of the act. A franchise with us has been defined as a particular privilege conferred upon individuals by grant from the government. 3 Kent, Comm. 458. Franchises are usually conferred upon corporations for the purpose of enabling them to do certain things. The franchises are vested in the corporate entity, rather than in the officers. As the judgment in this case relates to a public office, and not to a franchise, the right of appeal finds no support in the statute. An examination of the opinion of the court, as delivered by Chief Justice HALLETT in the case of Pollock v. People, 1 Colo. 83, cited by counsel, will show the same to be in support of the conclusion we have reached in this case. In that case there were two statutes relating to appeals. The general statute providing for appeals where the judgment appealed from amounted to $20, exclusive of costs, or related to a franchise or freehold, and a special statute providing for appeals in cases of quo warranto, reads as follows: "Appeals may be taken from the decision of the district court upon such terms as the said district court shall prescribe." The judgment from which the appeal was taken in that case was entered upon an information in the nature of a quo warranto filed against appellants, charging them with having usurped and intruded into the corporate offices of the city of Central. It was not even claimed by counsel that an appeal would lie under the general provision allowing appeals from decisions relating to a franchise, but it was contended that the two provisions relating to appeals should be construed together, and the special act limited by the word "franchise" used in the general act; and, as the judgment did not relate to a franchise, it was claimed that the right to an appeal did not exist. The court decided against this claim, holding that the special statute enlarged the right to appeal in cases of quo warranto. From the language of the opinion, we think it evident that, had the right to appeal rested upon the provision in reference to appeals from judgments relating to a franchise, the appeal would not have been sustained. Since the decision in the case of Pollock v. People, the special act providing for appeals has been repealed. There is no judgment for damages in this case; and, as the judgment of the district court relates to a public office and not to a franchise, an appeal from such judgment will not lie under the general act. The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Gen. St. Colo. c. 51, § 8, providing that homesteads shall only be exempt while occupied as such by the owner thereof, or his or her family, does not require an actual personal occupation at all times and under all circumstances, so as to cause a forfeiture on account of a temporary absence from necessity or convenience.

Appellee, plaintiff in the action, brought his suit by filing the following complaint, which was verified: "Plaintiff complains of defendants, and states that on the 4th day of February, 1886, the plaintiff became, and ever since has been, and now is, the owner in fee of the following described real estate, situate in the county of Pitkin, and state of Colorado: A lot one hundred and fifty (150) feet by fifty (50) feet in size, situate about one hundred and fifty (150) feet west of the Ute Spring ditch, in that part of the city of Aspen commonly called 'Ute,' said property being the same real estate conveyed to plaintiff on said 4th day of February, 1886, by Philip Edwards and Frank Hartzn. That on the said 4th day of February, 1886, and before and ever since that date, plaintiff was and now is a householder, and the head of a family. The said family consisted and now consists of plaintiff and the wife and children of plaintiff. That on said 4th day of February, 1886, plaintiff and his family commenced to occupy said premises, and resided thereon, occupying the same as a homestead, and have at no time since said date had any other residence, and have not occupied any other premises since said date, except as hereinafter mentioned. That the deed of conveyance from said Edwards and Hartzin to plaintiff was filed for record in the office of the recorder of said Pitkin county on said 4th day of February, 1886, and the same is of record in Book 29, on page 42, of the records of said office. That said premises, together with the improvements situated thereon, have not been, at any time since the 4th day of February, 1886, and are not now, worth any more than the sum of seven hundred dollars. That on the — day of November, 1886, one of plaintiff's children was sick, and the wife of plaintiff went to the city of Denver in the state of Colorado, for the purpose of procuring medical treatment for said child, and, during the absence of plaintiff's wife, he, the plaintiff, occupied a room in the city of Aspen, and temporarily rented said property hereinbefore mentioned, but left in said property a portion of plaintiff's household goods; that before the return of the wife of plaintiff, and on the — day of December, 1886, plaintiff received a severe bodily injury, which caused him to be confined to his room for a period of — days, and that, upon plaintiff's recovery from his said bodily injury, he took steps to occupy the premises herein first described, and said premises were, on the 15th day of March, 1887, vacated by the person to whom plaintiff had rented the same. That thereupon plaintiff proceeded to have the house situated on said premises repainted, and otherwise refitted, and while so engaged, and while a portion of the household goods of plaintiff and of his family were contained in said house, and on the 24th day of March, 1887, and at 40 minutes after 9 o'clock on the morning of said day, plaintiff caused to be entered of record on the margin of his recorded deed from said Edwards and said Hartzin the word 'Homestead,' which said entry was then and there signed by plaintiff, and was then and there attested by the clerk and recorder of the county of Pitkin, and state of Colorado, who then and there stated in writing in said attestation the date and time of day upon which said marginal entry was made. That on the — day of April, 1887, plaintiff and his family again occupied said premises, and have ever since occupied the same continuously. That plaintiff has always occupied said premises as his home from the date he purchased the same, and has not since said date had, nor has his family had, any other home, and that he has never abandoned said homestead at any time, and that neither he nor his family have ever left said premises except temporarily, and that even at such times a portion of the household goods of plaintiff and of his family was kept upon said premises, and in the house situated thereon. That, at the time plaintiff caused said marginal entry to be made, he was indebted to the defendant Pierson in the sum of one hundred and seventy-four dollars and forty-six cents, for goods, wares, and merchandise purchased by plaintiff from defendant Pierson between the — day of January, 1886, and the 1st day of March, 1887. That on the 28th day of March, 1887, said Pierson instituted a suit in the honorable county court in and for the county of Pitkin, and state of Colorado, against plaintiff for the said sum, and on the same day a writ of attachment issued out of and under the seal of said county court, in said suit, and, on the same day, the defendant Hooper, a sheriff of the county of Pitkin in the state of Colorado, by his under-sheriff, levied upon the property hereinbefore described under said writ of attachment. That on the 14th day of April, 1887, judgment was duly given in favor of said Pierson and against plaintiff for the sum of one hundred and seventy-six dollars and sixty cents, and the costs of suit, by said county court in said cause, and thereafter an execution and order of sale issued out of and under the seal of said county court, in said cause, commanding the defendant Hooper, sheriff as aforesaid, to sell said described property to satisfy the judgment rendered in said cause, together with the interest and the costs. That, afterwards, the said Hooper, as sheriff, duly advertised said property for sale. (Notice of sheriff's sale omitted.) That said Hooper, as sheriff aforesaid, unless restrained by the order of the court, will sell the said property on the 5th day of August, 1887, and that said sale, if made, will be a cloud on the title of plaintiff to said property. Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment against defendants: (1) That said Hooper, his agents and deputies, be restrained by preliminary writ of injunction from selling said property under said execution and order of sale, and that, on the final hearing of this cause, said injunction be made perpetual. (2) That the certificate of levy in said suit in the complaint mentioned, on the property in the complaint described, be canceled. (3) For costs of suit. (4) For such other, further, and general relief as to the court may seem meet." To which a demurrer was filed: That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; that it is admitted in the complaint that when the attachment of defendant was levied upon the premises described in plaintiff's complaint, neither the plaintiff nor any of his family was in the occupation of the said premises as a homestead; that plaintiff has already had his day in court, and, having failed to contest the validity of the attachment within twenty days after the service thereof upon him, he cannot impeach the judgment levy sustained by the court for any of the causes alleged in plaintiff's complaint; that the portion of the judgment mentioned in plaintiff's complaint which sustained the plaintiff's (now defendant's) attachment upon the said premises was the decision of a court of competent jurisdiction upon the identical issues raised in the plaintiff's complaint, and that plaintiff is thereby estopped from litigating those issues again," which was overruled. Appellant elected to stand by his demurrer, and prosecuted this appeal.

REED, C., (after stating the facts as above.) The only question presented for review is the judgment of the court in overruling the demurrer. The allegations in the complaint, under the circumstances, are to be regarded as true; the only question being whether the matters alleged were sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief asked. By section 1, c. 51, Gen. St., a homestead not exceeding $2,000 in value is exempt from execution and attachment. By section 2 of the same chapter, the householder, in order to avail himself of such exemption, is required to cause the word "homestead" to be entered of record in the margin of his recorded title," etc. The ownership of the property is alleged, and a compliance with the requirement of section 2 by the proper entry prior to the levy of the attachment. Section 8 of same act provides: "Such homesteads shall only be exempt as provided in the first section of this act, while occupied as such by the owner thereof, or his or her family." It is alleged in the complaint "that plaintiff has always occupied said premises as his home from the date he purchased the same, and has not since said date had, nor has his family had, any other home, and that he has never abandoned said homestead at any time, and that neither he nor his family have ever left said premises except temporarily, and that even at such times a portion of the household goods of plaintiff and of his family was kept upon said premises and in the house situated thereon." This allegation is sufficiently full and definite. The temporary absences, as alleged, are not such as to preclude a party from claiming the benefits of the exemption. Temporary absence from necessity or convenience would not forfeit the right. The statute cannot be construed as requiring an actual personal occupation at all times, and under all circumstances. It is intended that the place shall be the only home of the family, and shall not be abandoned, and another occupied, with the intention of making such change permanent. It is urged in argument that the exemption, to be effective, should have been interposed in the suit by attachment. It would, without doubt, have been better practice; but the law having been, as shown in the complaint, complied with, and the exemption appearing of record, the levy of the attachment was wrongful, and the property was absolutely exempt from its operation. The sale of the property under execution would have been a further wrong against which the party had a right to provide, and we cannot say the court was not justified in entertaining the suit, and granting relief in the only way apparently available under the circumstances. If the allegations in the complaint could be successfully controverted by proof, they should have been traversed, and the issues of fact tried. If they could not be successfully controverted, the plaintiff was entitled to the protection of the court to retain his homestead under the statutory exemption. We advise that the judgment of the court below be affirmed.

RICHMOND and BISSELL, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

DILLON et al. v. RAND.

APPEARANCE BY ATTORNEY—AUTHORITY—DEFAULT —CERTIFICATION OF AFFIDAVITS.

1. The authority of an attorney to appear for a party to an action in a court of record may be controverted while the action is pending.

2. The question of such authority may be raised upon due notice by sworn petition, or by motion supported by affidavit; and, if an issue be made upon such petition or motion, the same may be tried and determined by or under direction of the court as other issues of fact.

3. Where parties have not been served with summons, it is irregular to grant default against them without first disposing of a motion on file to vacate an appearance by attorney in their behalf.

4. The Code provides for the taking and certification of affidavits "taken in another state or territory of the United States, to be used in this state;" and, when an affidavit is so taken and certified, it is to be regarded as prima facie authentic.

Error to Arapahoe county court.

George Rand, plaintiff below, brought suit against "Levi Dillon, Isaiah Dillon, M. F. Dillon, and other sons of said Levi Dillon and Isaiah Dillon, whose names are to plaintiff unknown, as Dillon Brothers, and William F. Marrs, George W. Middleton, Edward Hunter, partners as Marrs, Middleton & Hunter." The relief sought was by judgment in personam. None of the defendants appear to have been served with summons. The defendants Marrs, Middleton & Hunter, however, appeared by P. L. Palmer, Esq., their attorney, and filed their answer. Subsequently, Mr. Palmer also entered his appearance as attorney for the defendants Levi Dillon, Isaiah Dillon, M. F. Dillon, and Leo Dillon; and thereafter said defendants were ruled to answer the complaint. Before the expiration of said rule, George C. Norris, Esq., appeared specially as attorney for the Dillons, and filed a motion to vacate the appearance entered for them by Mr. Palmer, on the ground that Palmer had no authority to appear for them or either of them. Before disposing of the motion to vacate the appearance of Palmer for the Dillons, the court entered default against three of them. Leave was granted to plaintiff to file affidavits in answer thereto, but he did not do so. Upon this showing, the court below overruled the motion of the Dillons to vacate the appearance entered for them by Mr. Palmer as their attorney, and proceeded to the trial of the issue between the plaintiff and the defendants who had answered, and to the assessment of damages against the Dillons, upon the default entered against them. The Dillons bring the case to this court by writ of error. The motion to vacate was supported by two affidavits. The affidavit of Mr. Palmer himself states that he was the attorney for the defendants Marrs, Middleton & Hunter in this suit; that he entered his appearance for Dillon Bros., at the request of Mr. Hunter of said firm, and upon the assurance of Mr. Hunter that he (Hunter) had full authority to cause the appearance of Dillon Bros., to be entered; that he was not retained by Dillon Bros., but relied on the assurance of Hunter as aforesaid. The affidavit of M. F. Dillon states positively that he is a member of the firm of Dillon Bros.; that neither he nor any member of said firm ever in any way either directly or indirectly authorized any person to enter the appearance of said firm of Dillon Bros., or any of the members thereof, in any suit brought by the said George Rand in the state of Colorado or elsewhere; nor have they or either of said parties ever authorized the firm of Marrs, Middleton & Hunter, or any member of said firm, to employ counsel for them or either of them, or to enter their appearance in any such suit. The affidavit is subscribed and sworn to before the clerk of the county court of McLean county, Ill., and is attested by said clerk under the seal of said court.

Geo. C. Norris, for plaintiffs in error.
Browne & Putnam, for defendant in error.

ELLIOTT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) It is well settled that the authority of an attorney to appear for a party to an action in a court of record may be controverted while the action is pending, and probably at any time before the expiration of the period in which the court may grant relief under section 75 of the Code. The question of such authority may be raised upon due notice by sworn petition, or by motion supported by affidavit; and, if an issue be made upon such petition or motion, the same may be tried and determined by or under direction of the court as other issues of fact. Ordinarily, such issue may be tried and determined in a summary manner without difficulty. Code, §§ 173, 204; Williams v. Canal Co., 13 Colo. 469, 22 Pac. Rep. 806.

Neither of the Dillons had been served with summons. The question of Mr. Palmer's authority to appear for them had been properly raised by motion and affidavits. It was therefore irregular to grant the default against them without first disposing of the motion on file to vacate the appearance which had been entered for them by Mr. Palmer. The jurisdiction of the court over their persons depended upon the authority of the attorney to enter such appearance. Code, § 168; Railroad Co. v. Nicholls, 8 Colo. 188, 6 Pac. Rep. 512; Chivington v. Colorado Springs Co., 9 Colo. 597, 14 Pac. Rep. 212.

It is objected that the affidavit of M. F. Dillon is not authenticated as required by the act of congress, providing for the authentication of records and judicial proceedings of the courts of other states. The affidavit under consideration is not a judicial record. Our Code of Procedure, §§ 338-340, provides for the taking and certification of affidavits "taken in another state or territory of the United States, to be used in this state." From the Code provisions above referred to, it is clear that when an affidavit is taken before the clerk of a court of record having a seal, and is certified by the clerk under such seal, it is to be regarded as prima facie authentic.

From the records before us, no presumption can be indulged that Mr. Hunter was authorized to employ Mr. Palmer as attorney for the Dillons. If he was so authorized, plaintiff should have controverted the affidavits presented by defendants. No answer or response whatever was made to the affidavits denying Mr. Palmer's authority to appear for the Dillons. These affidavits showed positively and unequivocally that Mr. Palmer's appearance for them was wholly unauthorized. Hence, the entry of appearance for the Dillons should have been vacated, and all proceedings against them suspended, until the court should have acquired jurisdiction over them. The decision of the county court is reversed, and the cause remanded. From the record before us, we perceive no reason why plaintiff should not have judgment rendered upon the finding in his favor against Marrs, Middleton & Hunter. Reversed.

DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

It is reversible error for the trial court to sustain a demurrer to the evidence of the plaintiff, when there is some evidence tending to prove every material fact necessary for a recovery.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Pratt county; S. W. LESLIE, Judge.

John A. Oliphant, for plaintiff in error.
E. A. Austin, for defendants in error.

SIMPSON, C. On the 2d day of July, 1885, the plaintiff in error bought from one M. Sanders two frame buildings situate on lot 11, block 32, in the town of Saratoga, Pratt county. Sanders executed the following instrument in writing, and delivered it to the plaintiff in error: "Saratoga, Pratt County, Kansas, July 2d, 1885. This is to certify that I, M. Sanders, have this day sold and transferred to Martha Rainer, for the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the following buildings, to-wit: The two buildings now situated on lot No. eleven, (11,) in block thirty-two, (32,) Saratoga, Pratt county, Kansas, the same to be removed from said lot immediately. [Signed] M. SANDERS." On the 6th day of August, 1885, Sanders sold the lot to G. A. Sears, reserving the buildings for Mrs. Rainer. Sanders subsequently made an additional sale of the lot to the defendant in error H. P. Cooper. The exact date of this transaction is not given in the record, but Cooper did not comply with the conditions, and therefore never became the owner of the lot. The plaintiff in error, some time during the month of August, and probably on the 4th, attempted to remove one of the buildings to Pratt Center, but it was burned in the streets of Saratoga, who by, the record does not disclose. The same evening the other building was moved from the lot, and placed in the north-east part of the town of Saratoga, where it was occupied by one D. G. Gibbons. There is no evidence in the record tending to show directly by whom the removal of this building was made. In May, 1886, Martha Rainer, the plaintiff in error, commenced this action in the district court of Pratt county against M. Sanders, G. A. Sears, H. P. Cooper, W. F. Gibbons, and D. G. Gibbons. Her petition attempts to set up two causes of action. The first alleges her purchase of the buildings from Sanders, and that the defendants in the month of August, 1885, took forcible possession of the same, and appropriated it to their use and benefit, and that its value was $500. In her second cause of action she alleges that, at the time the defendants so took possession of the building and appropriated it to their own use, she had made an arrangement to have the said buildings removed to Pratt Center, at which place she had been given a valuable lot on Main street on which to place it; that said lot was of the value of $600; that said lot was given her upon the express condition that she would remove this building from Saratoga and place it upon said lot; that, by reason of the appropriation of said building by these defendants to their own use, she was unable to comply with the conditions, and she was damaged by reason thereof in the sum of $600. The defendants demurred to the petition, on the ground that it did not state a cause of action in the first or second count. The demurrer was sustained as to the second cause of action attempted to be stated in the petition, and overruled as to the first. Finally the action was dismissed as to all the defendants below except Cooper, and a judgment was rendered in his favor. He interposed a demurrer to the evidence of the plaintiff below that was sustained. The cause is brought here for review, and we are asked to reverse the judgment below, because the demurrer to the evidence of the plaintiff below was erroneously sustained, on the theory that, by the written contract of the purchase of the buildings in controversy by plaintiff of the defendant Sanders, the plaintiff was to remove the same immediately, and her failure to do so for the period of 35 days, and no excuse being given for such delay, prevents her from recovering against either of the defendants. It is claimed now that, by reason of Cooper failing to comply with the terms of his purchase of the lot, he never acquired any interest in the building; and, as Sanders did not insist or plead the delay in the removal of the building, Cooper alone cannot take any advantage of it. While all this may be sound, there was another reason given for sustaining the demurrer, and that was the fact that no cause of action was proved against either of the defendants,—that is to say, there was no evidence tending to show who removed the building from the lot. The fact that it was removed was established. The fact that one of the defendants was in possession of the building after removal was established. The fact that Cooper had made a contract for the purchase of the lot was established. Neither the plaintiff or her husband or any other witness that was introduced in her behalf made any statement as to the particular individuals who removed the building from the lot. The husband of Mrs. Rainer stated on the witness stand that Cooper said to him that he had sold the building to Gibbons, and this was only a few days after the removal of the building. This case was tried to the court without the intervention of the jury. From our stand-point, it seems that Cooper's purchase of the lot with the building thereon, and his sale of the house to Gibbons, and Gibbon's occupancy so soon after removal, was some evidence tending to show a conversion by Cooper, and that the demurrer to the evidence ought to have been overruled. It is recommended that the judgment be reversed, and a new trial granted.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

WESTERN UNION TEL. CO. v. COLLINS et al.

DEPOSITIONS—NEGLIGENCE OF TELEGRAPH COMPANY—EVIDENCE—DAMAGES.

1. Our statute requires the certificate of an officer, before whom a deposition has been taken, to show that the deponent was first sworn "to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." A certificate by such officer, which shows that the deponents were sworn "to testify the whole truth or their knowledge touching the matter in controversy," is defective, and it is error to overrule a motion, to suppress such deposition, alleging such defect as ground therefor. JOHNSTON, J., dissenting.

2. It is not error to permit the introduction in evidence of a copy of a telegraphic message properly identified as a correct copy of the original, fourteen months after its receipt for transmission by the company, where it is first shown by the manager of the company at the receiving office that the original message is not in his office, nor under his control, and that, by the rules of the company, original messages are retained in the office of the company where received for a period of six months, and are then sent to Chicago and destroyed.

3. Where a telegraph company neglects to deliver a message to a live-stock shipper as to the state of the market at a certain point, in consequence of which neglect the shipper sends his stock to the next nearest market, at which he receives 10 cents per 100 less than the market price for the same stock ranged at the first point on the same day, the shipper is entitled to recover from the telegraph company the difference between the market prices of the two points, with the difference in freight added.

4. The meaning of a telegraphic message from a live-stock broker to a shipper, couched in such terms as to be readily understood by the shipper, but which is ambiguous, and, to a certain extent, unintelligible to persons not engaged in the stock business as shippers, may be explained by the testimony of the broker who sent it.

5. A person, who has suffered loss by the neglect of a telegraph company to transmit and deliver a message, and who serves upon the agent of the company a written demand for damages, and, in so doing, gives the agent a copy of said writing, but keeps the original, and the agent accepts service in writing on said original, and proof is made of the loss of such original, may prove the contents thereof by parol.

Commissioners' decision. Error to district court, Atchison county; W. D. GIBBERT, Judge.

STRANG, C. Action for damages for failing to deliver a certain telegraphic message. The facts are as follows: The plaintiff was a telegraph company, doing business between St. Joseph, Mo., and Sabetha, Kan. The defendants were partners, doing business at the latter place, and engaged in shipping hogs. They had purchased of the farmers in the neighborhood of Sabetha a lot of hogs which they designed shipping to market, either at St. Joseph or Kansas City. The hogs were to be delivered at Sabetha, by the farmers, on the 12th of January, 1885. Prior to that date, the defendants had employed one E. P. Roher, a live-stock commission merchant, or broker, at St. Joseph, to send them a dispatch from that point on the 12th, informing them of the condition of the hog market at that place on that day. Roher delivered a message containing the desired information, addressed to the defendants at Sabetha, to the plaintiff company at its office in St. Joseph, in time to have reached the defendants, so that they might have shipped their hogs to St. Joseph. But the message was never transmitted, or, at least, never delivered to the defendants, although they called for it at the company's office at Sabetha four times on that day. Not hearing from Roher, and supposing on that account that the market was not good at that point, the defendants shipped their hogs to Kansas City, where they were sold at an average price of $4.20 per 100. Subsequently the defendants learned that if they had shipped to St. Joseph, on that day, they would have received $4.30 per 100 for their hogs, and saved the freight from St. Joseph to Kansas City; and that, therefore, they had suffered a loss of 10 cents per 100 on the gross weight of their hogs, and the difference in freight between St. Joseph and Kansas City, aggregating $225. Defendants claim that this loss was suffered by them because of the negligence of the plaintiff in failing to transmit and deliver to them, at Sabetha, the message delivered to it by Roher, at St. Joseph. The plaintiff denied negligence on the part of the company, and alleged negligence on the part of the defendants, which they, in turn, denied in their reply. A change of venue was taken, and the case sent from Nemaha county to Atchison county, where, on the 19th day of March, 1888, it was tried by the court without a jury. The court made findings of fact and of law, and entered judgment thereon, in favor of the defendants, for $222.90.

The plaintiff filed a motion for new trial, which was overruled, and it now comes here with its case made alleging numerous errors on the part of the court trying the cause, and asks that the case be reversed. The first error discussed by the plaintiff in its brief is the action of the court in overruling a motion to suppress a deposition. The grounds of the motion are: First, the deposition has not been duly certified as provided by law; second, the witnesses were not sworn according to law; third, the deposition was not taken, sealed up, and authenticated as provided by law.

deposition as a mere elaboration of the first, serving to point out the specific reason why the deposition is not properly certified. We will therefore treat these two grounds as constituting but one reason why the deposition ought to have been suppressed. This question involves a construction of our statute on this subject. Paragraph 4454, Gen. St. 1889, reads as follows: "The officer taking the deposition shall annex thereto a certificate showing the following facts: That the witness was first sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; that the deposition was reduced to writing by some proper person, naming him; that the deposition was written and subscribed in the presence of the officer certifying thereto; that the deposition was taken at the time and place specified in the notice." This is all the paragraph there is in our statutes relating to the character of the certificate to be annexed to a deposition by the officer taking the same. It will be seen, by an examination of this paragraph, that the language of the statute is that the certificate attached to the deposition by the officer taking it must show "that the witness was first sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." The language of the certificate attached to the deposition in this case is that the witnesses "were by me sworn to testify the whole truth of their knowledge touching the matter in controversy aforesaid." It is conceded that the certificate attached to the deposition by the officer taking the same must conform substantially to the requirements of the statute. The question on this assignment, then, is, are the words in the certificate, "sworn to testify the whole truth," substantially the same as the words, "sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," contained in the statute? Our first inclination upon examining this case was to say that, while the language of the certificate was not identical with that of the statute, it was substantially the same. But a more careful and analytical examination of the language of the statute satisfies us that it imports something more than the language of the certificate. To be sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, imposes upon the witness an obligation that is not imposed upon him when sworn to testify the whole truth. A witness, under examination, being asked if he could tell any more, in response said: "Yes, I could tell a good deal more, but that is all I know." It seems to us that this question and answer illustrate this case. What is there to prevent a witness who has already told all he knows—that is, the whole truth—from telling more that he does not know; that is, more that is not the truth? The statutory form requires him to tell nothing but the truth, while the form of the certificate does not obligate him to cease when he has told the whole truth. We, therefore, think the certificate in the deposition is insufficient. The authorities sustain this view of the case. In those states having statutes which prescribe the form of the certificate to be annexed thereto, by an officer taking a deposition, the great weight of authority requires a strict conformity to the statutory requirements. In the states which have no statute prescribing a form for the certificate, and in which depositions are taken under a commission, or rule of court, greater laxity prevails in relation to the mode of taking and certifying them. In Bacon v. Bacon, 33 Wis. 147, the court says: "Where the statutes prescribe a form of oath to be administered to a witness, whose deposition is taken out of the state, that form must be observed, or the deposition will be suppressed." In Baxter v. Payne, 1 Pin. 504, Judge MILLER, delivering the opinion, says: "The deposition of William Pyncheon was offered in evidence, which was objected to by the defendant, for the reason that the justice does not certify how the oath was administered to the witness. The authority to take testimony in this manner, being in derogation of the rules of the common law, has always been construed strictly; and therefore it is necessary to establish that all the requisites of the law have been complied with before such testimony is admissible. Before a deposition should be allowed to be read in evidence, every requisite of the statute must have been substantially and fully complied with. This deposition was taken at the instance of the plaintiff, for the reason that the witness resided more than 30 miles from the place of trial, in pursuance of a written agreement between the parties, and in their presence. In the commencement and body of the deposition, it is stated that the witness 'being duly sworn doth depose and say as follows.' The certificate of the justice sets forth that the witness 'was first sworn in the usual manner of taking depositions.' The statute requires that the deponent shall be sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. There was error in overruling the objection to the reading of this deposition." In Goodhue v. Grant, Id. 556, the same court says: "A deposition cannot be read in evidence, unless it plainly and satisfactorily appears from the certificate of the justice that all the requirements of the statute have been fully complied with, and no presumption will be indulged in to supply any defect." In pointing out what the certificate must show, the court says: "It must also state, according to sections 14 and 16 of the same act, that the deponent was sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. The legislature intended that every part or requisition of the rule should be equally important and binding; consequently the court cannot relax or change it." In House v. Elliott, 6 Ohio St. 498, the objection to the deposition was that the certificate annexed to the deposition did not show that the witness was first sworn. The court says: "This is a compliance with the form prescribed in Swan's Statutes of 1841, but does not meet the requirement of the Code. There must be a certificate annexed to the deposition, by the officer, that the witness was first sworn." The court in that case held that, where the caption of the deposition showed that the witness was first sworn, the certificate must be held sufficient, as the caption must be considered a part of the certificate. Although nothing is said about it in the brief in this case, attention may be called to the fact that the deposition does not, either in the certificate, or in the caption thereof, in terms, show that the witnesses were first sworn. In Malne, the statute requires that a deponent, before giving his deposition, should be sworn to "testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, relating to the cause or matter for which the deposition is to be taken;" and the court, in Brighton v. Walker, 35 Me. 182, held that "a caption, which certifies that the deponent was first sworn, according to law, to the deposition by him subscribed, does not show a compliance with the statute requirement." "A recital in the caption that the deponent was sworn 'to testify the truth, and nothing but the truth' is fatally defective. It should appear that the deponent was, at least, sworn according to law; and, if it does not so appear, it is fatal." Call v. Perkins, 68 Me. 158; Reed v. Boardman, 20 Pick. 441-444, there cited. In Lund v. Dawes, 41 Vt. 372, the court says: "It is very clear from the statute above cited, and from the decisions in this state, that the certificate of the authority taking the deposition must show that the person making the deposition made oath to it, as prescribed by statute." In accordance with the decision of this court in Brighton v. Walker, 35 Me. 182, cited above, as the certificate of the magistrate does not show that the oath required by statute has been administered, the deposition of Parsons must be regarded as having been improperly admitted. "It is to be regretted that a verdict should be set aside for an error of the magistrate, which might have been amended at the trial, but the requirements of the statute cannot be disregarded." Parsons v. Huff, 38 Me. 137. See, also, Fabian v. Adams, 15 N. H. 371; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351; U. S. v. Smith, 4 Day, 121; 2 Pet. Dig. 41. This case was pending in the trial court during several terms after the motion to suppress the deposition was filed. The depositions might have been withdrawn, with leave of court, and returned to the officer who took the same, and he might have corrected the form of the certificate, if the proper form of oath was really administered by him to the witness. Counsel for the defendants in error refer us to but one case upon this question,—State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. Rep. 318. An examination of that case throws no light upon this question. The question there decided is neither the same nor similar to the one presented here.

The third ground contained in the motion for the suppression of the deposition is that the deposition was not sealed up and authenticated, as required by law. There is nothing in the record showing how the deposition was sealed up and authenticated, and therefore we cannot consider this question.

The second assignment for error is that the court erred in permitting a copy of the message delivered by Roher to the plaintiff company for transmission to the defendants, to be read in evidence. The contention is that no proper foundation had been laid for its introduction. The copy offered was identified as a true copy of the original by Roher, by Lee, and, substantially, by Keneble, the book-keeper of the plaintiff company at St. Joseph. The evidence of A. F. Washington, who was manager of the office of the plaintiff company at St. Joseph, Mo., where the dispatch in question was delivered, shows that the original messages are kept in the office where received for six months, and are then sent to Chicago, and destroyed. The evidence of Jacob Levin, who succeeded Washington as manager of the plaintiff's office at St. Joseph, shows that the original message was not in the St. Joseph office, and not under his control; that original messages are kept in the office where received for transmission six months, and are, by the rules of the company, then sent to Chicago and destroyed. It is true, he says he did not see the original message in question in this case destroyed. But he says the rules of the company require them to be destroyed at the end of six months after received. The original message in this case was delivered to the company January 12, 1885, and the depositions of Roher and Lee, who identified the copy, and to which said copy was attached as an exhibit, were taken more than 14 months afterwards. We think the foundation for the admission of the copy was sufficiently established, and that the copy was properly admitted in evidence. The third point made by plaintiff in its brief is that the court erred in refusing to strike out of the deposition of Valentine W. Emmert his testimony that "the market value of good, average 300-pound hogs at St. Joseph, Mo., on the 12th and 13th days, respectively, of January, 1885, was $4.30 gross." The argument is that the evidence of the value of the hogs at St. Joseph was too remote, as fixing any basis upon which to determine the amount of damage that the plaintiff had sustained. The defendants lived at Sabetha, Kan. St. Joseph was the nearest market of any importance, for hogs, to Sabetha. The evidence shows that the defendants designed shipping their hogs there; had made arrangements, by which they were to be informed of the condition of the market there; and would have shipped there, if the defendant company had done its duty and transmitted the information contained in the message it failed to send to the defendants. And the evidence shows that, if they had shipped to St. Joseph at the time they shipped to Kansas City, they would have received 10 cents a hundred more for their hogs than they did receive at Kansas City, and would have saved the freight from St. Joseph to Kansas City. We think the measure of damages adopted by the trial court the correct one.

The plaintiff complains next that Roher was permitted to explain the meaning of the message received in evidence. While the language of the message was such as to be readily understood by one engaged in the shipment of hogs, it was couched in such terms as to render it ambiguous, and, to a certain extent, unintelligible to persons not engaged in such business. It was therefore entirely proper to permit its meaning to be explained to the jury by the person who sent it. The substance of the fifth assignment we think wholly immaterial, and therefore no error could be predicated thereon.

The sixth complaint is that the defendants, over the objection of the plaintiff, were permitted to prove what the hogs sold for in Kansas City, Mo., on the 14th of January, 1885. Kansas City, Mo., is the next nearest hog market to Sabetha after St. Joseph, and the market to which the defendants intended to ship their hogs, if they did not ship to St. Joseph, and the market to which they did ship them. The hogs were sold on the market there for the best price they would bring. The admission of this evidence was coupled with evidence showing that on the very day, January 14, 1885, on which the hogs were sold in Kansas City, they would have brought the price contended for by the defendants in St. Joseph, Mo. There can be no question, under the evidence, but that, if the plaintiff had done its duty, and transmitted and delivered the message received by it from Roher to the defendants, they would have shipped their hogs to St. Joseph, instead of Kansas City. It is equally certain, under the evidence, that if they had shipped to St. Joseph, and sold in the market either on the 13th or 14th days of January, 1885, they would have received 10 cents a hundred more for their hogs than they got for them in the Kansas City market. The defendants, therefore, suffered a loss, by shipping to the Kansas City market. Having suffered a loss, how is the amount of that loss to be ascertained? The law provides a measurement for loss or damages in cases of this kind, and resort must be had to the measurement so provided. The only difficulty there is in the matter is in selecting the proper measure by which to gauge the loss or damages. The plaintiff claims that the difference in price of the two markets, St. Joseph and Kansas City, is no proper measure of the damages suffered by defendants, and say that they could as well have sold them in the London or San Francisco market, and made the difference in price between either of those markets and St. Joseph the measure of damages. We do not think so. We will not speculate upon what might or might not be the proper measure of damages if the defendants had shipped their hogs to so remote a market as either of those named; but will content ourselves by examining the actual surroundings of the case, as disclosed by the evidence, and search for the proper measure of damages in that neighborhood. Looking over the real case in hand, we think the measure of damages approved and adopted by the trial court the simple, natural, and proximate measure for damages in cases of this kind, and therefore the proper measure to have applied in estimating the damages in this case. The shrinkage in the weight of the hogs, in transit, and the difference in the price of feed in Kansas City and St. Joseph, in relation to which some evidence was introduced, and of which plaintiff complains, were not made a part of the judgment by the court below; hence no injury to the plaintiff flowed from that evidence. The plaintiff complains that the defendants were permitted to make oral proof of the contents of a written demand which was served upon the agent of the defendant company. It is alleged that there was no proper foundation laid for the proof so made. The plaintiff treats the copy of the written demand delivered to the agent as the original. But the evidence shows that, while a copy of the demand was delivered to the agent, he accepted service, in writing, upon the original, which was kept by the defendant serving the same. This original demand was then sent by the defendants to their attorneys, who received it, and had it about their office until it became lost; that they made search for it in their office among their papers where it was kept, and could not find it. The court, upon this showing, permitted parol proof of its contents. We see no error in this. We are compelled, however, to recommend a reversal of this case, because of error in overruling the motion to suppress depositions.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered.

HORTON, C. J., and VALENTINE, J., con cur.

JOHNSTON, J. I am satisfied with all the conclusions stated, except the one which holds it to be prejudicial error not to have suppressed the depositions which were read. The statutory requirement in regard to swearing the witnesses should be substantially followed, and the fact of the swearing should be certified to by the officer taking the deposition. The record in this case not only recites that the witnesses were sworn at the beginning of their depositions, but the officer who took them certifies that the deponents were sworn "to testify the whole truth of their knowledge touching the matter in controversy." While this is not a strict literal compliance with the statute, the deviation is so slight and immaterial that the oath may be regarded as a substantial compliance with that required in the statute. As a substantial compliance is sufficient, I think the depositions were properly admitted in evidence, and, further, that the judgment of the district court should be affirmed. Welborn v. Swain, 22 Ind. 194.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Coffey county; CHARLES B. GRAVES, Judge.

GREEN, C. This was an action commenced by the defendant in error in the district court of Coffey county to recover a balance claimed to be due him in consideration of the execution of a certain note and mortgage to plaintiff in error. The plaintiff below alleged that on the 1st day of October, 1886, he executed a note and mortgage to the defendant below for the sum of $2,500; that the note and mortgage were received, and the mortgage placed on record by the loan and trust company, and it had failed and neglected to pay the sum expressed therein, except $2,000; that it retained $500, and refused to pay that sum to plaintiff. The loan company answered that the loan was made upon a written application which set out various terms and conditions; that $400 might be retained out of the proceeds of the loan until the frame of a dwelling intended to be erected was put up, and the insurance on the building assigned as part security for the loan; that the loan company paid the sum of $2,500 to J. W. Parker, as agent of the plaintiff below, with instructions to retain $400 until the building was up, and the insurance effected; that Love afterwards requested the loan company to recall the money from Parker, which was done; that the sum of $300 was held by it, and it was willing to pay said sum to the plaintiff on the performance of the conditions mentioned, but claimed that said conditions had not been complied with. The sum of $125 was claimed as a commission for negotiating the loan. The reply to this answer was a general denial, with a specific denial of the agency of Parker, which was properly verified. The case was tried to a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff below for $325. The loan company brings the case here for review.

The plaintiff below made an application to J. W. Parker, a loan agent in Burlington, for a loan of $3,000 on his farm. Parker had in his possession blank applications for loans, furnished by the Kansas Loan & Trust Company, one of which he caused to be filled out. In answer to the usual interrogatories, among other things, it was stated that the applicant wanted to build a home with the money to be obtained. The loan was to bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum, and the borrower was to pay 6 per cent. as a commission. This application was signed by the defendant in error. On the same day, Parker, the loan agent, made a report to the loan company, recommending the loan, and stating, among other things, that the applicant intended to use part of the money to build a house, and that $400 could be retained until the frame was up. This application was forwarded to the company's office, at Topeka, and considered, but the company declined to make the loan on the security offered. It proposed, however, to make the loan for $2,500, on the same security, at 7 per cent. interest, and 5 per cent. commission. This proposition was accepted, the loan negotiated, and $2,000 paid to the plaintiff below. The real controversy in this case is whether or not the plaintiff ever authorized the retention of any portion of the loan until the frame of a proposed dwelling was up, and certain insurance was effected, for the benefit of the mortgagee, and this matter depends largely upon the question of Parker's agency. The plaintiff below contended that Parker was not his agent, and had no authority to make the statement he did in regard to the retention of a portion of the loan until certain conditions were complied with. The loan company, on the other hand, insisted that Parker was not its agent, but was the agent of the applicant for the loan; that after the money in controversy had been in Parker's hands some time, plaintiff requested the company to recall it; and that it held the sum of $300, which it was willing to pay upon the performance of the conditions mentioned. The evidence disclosed the fact that there was but one person in the loan office, besides Parker and the applicant, when the application was signed, the clerk who filled out the same, a young lady by the name of Gilman. In the course of the examination of this witness, this question was asked by the attorney for the defendant below: "What did Mr. Love agree to, if anything, as to the retention of part of that loan?" This question was objected to on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that the writing itself was the best evidence, and the objection was sustained by the trial court. This, it is claimed, is reversible error; that the loan company should have been permitted to show by this witness just what the plaintiff below did agree to. The evidence was certainly material, as the whole question at issue depended upon the authority of Parker in the premises; and we think it was competent. The objection that the writing was the best evidence was not good, because that was the very matter in dispute. The plaintiff below claimed that he had never signed any agreement that a portion of the money should be retained, and it was certainly a vital question as to what the contract was between the parties. It is not claimed that the application which was signed by the defendant in error authorized the loan company to withhold any portion of the money, so that threw no light upon the question; and the other statement signed by Parker, he claimed, was not his writing, and hence not the best evidence. We think the evidence should have been admitted. It is unnecessary to discuss the other errors as to the instructions requested and refused, as they are substantially covered in the general charge of the court. We recommend a reversal of the judgment.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

NEW TRIAL—SEPARATION OF JURY.

Where a jury, after a cause is submitted to them, separate and go to supper, and again separate and go to breakfast, and also separate and go to dinner, without having been admonished by the court, as required by law, before either of said separations, and no showing is made that the substantial rights of the parties against whom they find were not prejudiced by such separations, it is error to overrule a motion for new trial alleging such separations as ground therefor.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Marion county; FRANK DOSTER, Judge.

STRANG, C. On the 26th day of September, 1887, the plaintiff commenced two cases against the defendant before a justice of the peace. Afterwards, the cases were, by agreement, taken to the district court, and there consolidated, and tried together November 16, 1887, to a jury. At the trial, the defendant gave evidence of a set-off greater in amount than the plaintiff's claim, and the jury returned a verdict for the defendant for $405.70. This verdict received the approval of the court, and judgment was entered thereon. The plaintiff in error relies on the following alleged errors for the reversal of the case: "First. Misconduct and utter disregard of the law by the court in allowing and directing the officer in charge to allow, the jury to separate without being admonished as required by the statute. Second. The plaintiff should have had a new trial on account of after-discovered evidence on the part of the plaintiff. Third. The claim of the defendant is barred by the statute of limitations."

The record shows that the case was submitted to the jury, and they retired some time during the afternoon session of the court. That they had not agreed when the court adjourned for the day, and, after the court had adjourned, and the judge had left the court-house and was out on the walk, he directed the officer having the jury in charge to allow them to separate, and go to supper, returning to the jury-room afterwards. That at breakfast-time the next morning, the officer again permitted the jury to separate and go to breakfast, and at the dinner hour, not having yet agreed, they were again permitted by the officer to separate and go to dinner. The record shows that at each of these separations the jurors mingled with other persons going to and returning from their meals. At none of these separations was the jury first admonished by the court as required by the statute. Was it error for the court to refuse to set aside the verdict of the jury under such circumstances, and grant a new trial? We think it was. Paragraph 4874, Gen. St. 1889, reads as follows: "If the jury are permitted to separate, either during the trial or after the case is submitted to them, they shall be admonished by the court that it is their duty not to converse with, or suffer themselves to be addressed by, any other person on any subject of the trial, and that it is their duty not to form or to express an opinion thereon until the case is finally submitted to them." The provision that the jury shall be admonished if they are permitted to separate is imperative. And it is required after the case is submitted to them the same as during the trial. We cannot say that this provision may be ignored by the courts. It was incorporated into the Code to guard trials by jury from improper influences. We think it a wholesome provision. Persons who have had but little experience in courts and upon juries are not likely to be mindful, without their attention called thereto, of the necessity of refraining from talking, or listening to the conversation of others, upon the subject of the trial, if allowed to separate,—commingle with the crowd. Some admonition is necessary to attract and fix their attention upon this matter. It frequently happens in trial courts that, with proper instruction by the court upon this subject, some one or more of the jurors heedlessly disregard the admonition. It was the necessity of something of this kind to protect jury trials that induced the legislature to enact this provision into law. In the Criminal Code, where, in favor of life and liberty, still greater importance is attached to guards thrown around trials by jury to prevent any improper influences creeping into the jury-room to affect the deliberations of the jury, the legislature has still further enacted into formal law the idea that it is improper for juries to separate after a case is submitted to them by including among the causes for which a new trial may be granted the separation of the jury, after retiring to consider the cause, without leave of court. This court said in State v. Snyder, 20 Kan. 306: "It is the duty of the court to enforce a rigid and vigilant observance of the provisions of the statute designed to preserve inviolate the right of trials by jury, and the purity of such trials." In Wright v. Burchfield, 3 Ohio, 55, in reviewing a case in which the jury had separated, after finding a verdict, before returning into court with it, the court says: "It has never been thought safe that juries should be permitted to converse with strangers before the verdict was given, or that the jury should separate before they were agreed." In Sutliff v. Gilbert, 8 Ohio, 409, in discussing a case where the jury, after finding a verdict, and sealing the same, separated before returning into court with their verdict, and such separation was alleged as ground for a new trial, the court uses the following language: "As a general rule, the jury shall not be permitted to separate, after retiring from the bar of the court, until they have agreed upon their verdict. Still there may be peculiar circumstances which would, to some extent, justify a separation. But should a jury, of their own pleasure, having been put in charge of a case, leave the room, and mingle with the people of the town or vicinity, and afterwards return to their room and agree upon a verdict, it would be a good ground for a motion to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial." In the case of Perkins v. Ermel, 2 Kan. 326, the separation of one of the jurors from his fellows was explained by affidavit, showing that the separation was the result of misapprehension, and that nothing had occurred to prejudice his mind touching the case. In this case no showing is made. The jury separates three times without having been admonished by the court at either of said separations. They meet and converse with the people about the court-house, and in town, and no showing is made, or attempted to be made, that during said separations nothing occurred to prejudice their minds in relation to the case. If nothing had occurred, it would have been an easy matter to have shown the fact. There is always more or less talk among the people who are attending the court about the cases that are being tried, and juries are so liable to hear something that is likely to prejudice them if allowed to separate at all that we think it the safer rule to hold that they may not be permitted to separate without the statutory provision in relation to admonition be complied with by the court; and that, having done so, it is error for which a new trial should be granted, unless there is a showing made that satisfies the trial court that nothing occurred during the separation which could prejudice the substantial rights of the party against whom they find.

We have examined the second assignment, and are satisfied that the court committed no error in refusing a new trial on that ground. While there was evidence of surprise on the part of the plaintiff, there was also evidence in the affidavits produced by the defendant on the hearing of the motion which showed that the plaintiff was not surprised; that he knew of the defendant's claim for the engine long before the commencement of the suit. And, so far as the newly-discovered evidence was concerned, it was cumulative, and tended to prove that plaintiff did not purchase the engine, while the defendant showed by affidavits of at least two new witnesses that plaintiff had admitted that he had purchased the engine. It seems to us that, upon the showing made in that regard, the best view that could be taken of the evidence, so far as the interest of the plaintiff was concerned, it was a stand-off. The evidence being conflicting upon the subject, the conclusion of the trial court thereon is conclusive.

The third matter assigned for error on part of the trial court involves a question of the effect of the statute of limitations. As the case is reversed in the first error assigned, we do not consider it necessary to discuss the question raised on the statute of limitations. It is recommended that the case be reversed, and sent back for a new trial.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

EHRHARD v. McKEE.

TRIAL—SEPARATION OF JURY.

1. Where a jury in a civil action separate and mingle with the public after they had retired to consider of their verdict, without permission of the court, and without having been duly admonished, as the statute requires, a presumption against their verdict arises that will vitiate it, unless it affirmatively appears that no prejudice was suffered by the losing party.

2. When it is shown that a jury separated without having been duly admonished, the burden is shifted to the prevailing party, and it will devolve on him to show that the jury was not subjected to any improper influence, and that no injury resulted to the unsuccessful party.

8. The admission of the statements of strangers to the action, not made in the presence of the party against whom they were offered, in respect to attempts made to prevent adverse witnesses from testifying in the action against such party, and to improperly influence other witnesses to testify in his favor, was prejudicial error.

Error from district court, Clay county ;
E. HUTCHINSON, Judge.

Harkness & Godard, for plaintiff in error.
J. S. Walker and T. B. Dawes, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This action was instituted by Adolph Ehrhard before a justice of the peace, to recover from Michael Jones $99 as damages, alleged to have been sustained by reason of the stock of Jones trespassing upon plaintiff's land and destroying his crops. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff, and Jones appealed to the district court, where a trial with a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of Jones, and the plaintiff brings the case here, alleging error. Since the proceeding was instituted in this court, Jones has deceased, and the action has been revived in the name of his personal representative. Two of the errors alleged require attention, and their determination will compel a reversal of the judgment. One of the witnesses called in behalf of the defendant was permitted to testify, over objection, to statements purporting to have been made by a son of the plaintiff, and not in the presence of the plaintiff, to the effect that his son endeavored to induce the witness to testify in the interest of plaintiff in this action, and had asked to be allowed to train the witness "how to swear." Another witness for defendant was permitted, over objection, to give conversations had with strangers to the action, at which the plaintiff was not present, to the effect that a certain party had been hired to leave, so that the defendant could not obtain his testimony. These parties were strangers to the action, and the statements were clearly incompetent, and of a very prejudicial character, and not admissible in this action against the plaintiff upon the theory of conspiracy nor upon any other theory.

A new trial was asked because of the misconduct of the jury. The case was submitted to the jury on September 26, 1887, when they retired in charge of an officer, and remained in session until September 28th, when they reported to the officer in charge that they had agreed upon a verdict. The court not being in session at that time, they sealed up the verdict, and delivered the same to the officer, and thereupon were allowed to separate. At the convening of the court on the following day, the jury was brought in and asked if they had agreed upon a verdict, and the foreman responded that they had, and the sealed verdict was thereupon opened and read by the clerk, which was a finding in favor of the defendant, but that each party should pay one half of the costs of the action. The record shows that the following proceedings were then had: "Whereupon the court reprimanded the jury for separating and going at large upon the pretense of having agreed upon a verdict which they must have known could not be received, and thereupon directed the jury to retire to their jury-room to consider of their verdict. To which action of the court, in directing the jury to retire after having been separated during the previous day and night, plaintiff objected, and asked that the jury be discharged for misconduct." The objection was overruled, and an exception taken. The jury again retired, in accordance with the direction of the court, and, failing to agree at an earlier time, they were kept by the officer continuously until the 3d day of October, 1887, when they agreed upon a verdict in favor of the defendant. The reprimand which the court administered to the jury was fully justified, and the natural tendency of their misconduct was to disqualify them for the proper performance of their duty. The result which they sealed up and delivered as a verdict finding in favor of both parties was plainly inconsistent and improper. The plaintiff contends that it was a feigned verdict, given in order to gain the privilege of separating. They may have been honestly mistaken as to their course, but, whatever may have been their motive, their action resulted in a separation without the permission or admonition of the court. They were permitted to mingle with the public, and, for aught we know, may have conversed with many others about the facts in the case, and may have received impressions concerning it other than those received during the progress of the trial. The result first returned is vastly different from the verdict finally rendered, as the record discloses that the great amount of costs incurred is probably now the most important consideration in the controversy. At any rate, it was necessary to hold the jury continuously together about five days afterwards to secure an agreement in favor of the defendant, relieving him from the payment of half the costs. No testimony was offered on the motion for a new trial to show that the misconduct did not influence the jury to the prejudice of the unsuccessful party. The statute provides that, when a case is finally submitted to the jury, they must be kept together, under charge of an officer of the court, and not allowed to separate or mingle with the public, except with the permission of the court, and after they have been duly admonished as to their conduct during the separation. Civil Code, §§ 278, 279. In the recently decided case of Pracht v. Whitridge, 44 Kan. —, ante, 192, it was held that a violation of these statutory provisions, by the separation of a jury without having been duly admonished by the court, creates a presumption against the verdict; and, if no showing is made that the substantial rights of the unsuccessful party were not prejudiced, it will be sufficient ground for a new trial. This was the rule established in the case of Madden v. State, 1 Kan. 340; and the civil case of Morrow v. Commissioners, 21 Kan. 516, which has been referred to, decides nothing to the contrary. In the latter case, there was some discussion with reference to the effect of a separation, but no decision was in fact made for the reason that the record did not show that there had actually been a separation. The violation of the statutory provisions, with reference to separation and admonition, gives rise to a prejudice, which will vitiate the verdict unless it affirmatively appears that no prejudice was suffered by the losing party. When such misconduct is shown, the burden is shifted to the prevailing party, and if he can, by the affidavit of the jurors or other testimony, make it appear that the jury were not subjected to any improper influence, and that no injury resulted to the losing party, the verdict should stand.

If it appears from the showing made that nothing transpired to affect the integrity of the verdict, it should not be disturbed; but where there is a plain violation of statutory requirement enacted for the preservation of the purity of the verdict, such as the one we are considering, it devolves upon the prevailing party to show that the improper conduct did not prejudice the substantial rights of his opponent. In the absence of such a showing by the defendant in error, a new trial should have been granted. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial. All the justices concurring.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. Dec. 6, 1890.)

EXECUTION—SALE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—
DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS.

1. Where mortgaged personal property is sold on execution, and the mortgagee, who is not the defendant in the execution, or his legal representative, purchases the same, the court from which the execution was issued may, in any proper proceeding with all the interested parties before it, make an order that any surplus moneys remaining after the satisfaction of the execution, with interest and costs, shall be paid to the party or parties having the paramount right thereto, and if it be shown that the mortgagee has the paramount right thereto, the court should order that the surplus moneys should be paid to him.

2. And in such a case where there is no lien upon the property sold, except the execution lien, and the mortgage lien, the mortgagee will have the paramount right to the surplus moneys, although the officer selling the property may, after the sale, and prior to the payment of the purchase price, accept orders from the defendant in the execution to pay such surplus moneys to certain creditors of the defendant in the execution.

Error from district court, Crawford county; GEORGE CHANDLER, Judge.

John T. Voss and James T. Bridgens, for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. This case has once before been in this court. Walker v. Braden, 34 Kan. 660, 9 Pac. Rep. 613. It appears that the defendant in error W. H. Braden, as sheriff of Crawford county, had three executions in his hands, issued from the district court of said county against the property of McFarland & Moore, under which executions he levied upon certain personal property known as the "Anchor Mill," seizing the same as the property of McFarland & Moore. The executions, with interest and costs, amounted in the aggregate to $596.42. The property levied upon was worth $1,500. The plaintiff in error, A. B. Walker, had a valid chattel mortgage upon the property for the sum of $1,200, and interest. The sheriff, Braden, sold the property at public sale, and Walker bid upon it and purchased the same for $1,600; afterwards, Walker refused to pay the amount of his bid, and the sheriff, Braden, sued him therefor in said district court, and obtained a judgment for the same, which judgment was afterwards affirmed by the supreme court. But the supreme court, however, in affirming the judgment used the following, among other, language: "The debt for which the property was sold is only $535.42, and if the mortgage of the plaintiff in error is valid and subsisting, he may by appropriate action reach the surplus fund derived from the sale of the property, and have it applied upon his debt, and thus be partially relieved from the effect of his blunder, and the hardship of which he complains." 34 Kan. 669, 670, 9 Pac. Rep. 617. After such affirmation, Walker paid and satisfied the aforesaid executions, and the judgments upon which they were issued, which, in the aggregate, with interest and costs, then amounted to the sum of $664.52, leaving a surplus of $935.48, on Walker's bid, and he then instituted this proceeding in the said district court to obtain relief, making every person a party thereto who claimed to have any interest in the surplus fund, or in any of the matters in controversy. The various parties answered. The principal matters alleged in the answers were that McFarland & Moore owed several of such parties, and that they had received orders from McFarland & Moore on the sheriff, Braden, to pay over to them severally a sufficient amount of the surplus fund to satisfy their respective claims, which orders Braden had accepted; but it was not claimed that any one of the parties answering, except Braden, had any lien upon the property sold on the executions, or even that he had reduced his claim to a judgment. The case was tried on April 14, 15, 1887, before the court and a jury, and judgment was rendered against the plaintiff in error, Walker, and he now brings the case to this court for review.

We think the court below erred. "When there are surplus moneys arising from the sale of lands on execution, those having liens upon the lands sold have the same liens upon the surplus moneys which they had upon the lands previous to such sale." Crock. Sher. § 507. See, also, Mitchell v. Milhoan, 11 Kan. 617; Butler v. Craig, 29 Kan. 205-207, and cases there cited;

Averill v. Loucks, 6 Barb. 470; Van Nest v. Yeomans, 1 Wend. 88. This same rule we think applies to personal property. Ordinarily, when a sheriff sells property on execution, he should, after satisfying the execution with interest and costs, pay any surplus of the proceeds of the sale remaining in his hands to the defendant in the execution, or to his legal representatives. Whether he might in any case, upon his own volition and choice, pay such surplus to some other person, who might have the paramount right thereto, we need not now determine; but we do determine that where some other person than the defendant in the execution, or his legal representative, has the paramount right thereto, the court from which the execution was issued may, in any proper proceeding instituted before it for that purpose, with all the interested parties before it, make an order that the surplus moneys shall be paid to the party or parties having the paramount right thereto. In other words, when the property sold is the mortgaged personal property of the defendant in the execution, and there are no other liens upon the property than the execution lien and the mortgage lien, the court may and should, in any proper proceeding instituted for the purpose, order that the sheriff, after satisfying the execution with interest and costs, should pay the surplus moneys to the mortgagee. In this present case, we suppose that Walker's mortgage lien was in the first instance prior and paramount to Braden's execution lien, but Walker waived his priority of lien to the extent of the execution claims by bidding upon and purchasing the property. He, however, did not waive his priority of lien and rights to any greater extent, nor as to claims which were not liens in any sense upon the property. As to such claims his rights were still prior and paramount. Walker is entitled to the surplus. The judgment of the court below will be reversed. All the justices concurring.

POWER OF PARTNER TO BIND FIRM.

1. A partner in a non-trading firm has no implied power to bind the firm by the execution of commercial paper in the name of the firm.

2. Where one member of a partnership of occupation and employment executes a note in the firm name to a bank, without the knowledge of the other member, and, in direct violation of the articles of copartnership, the payment of such note cannot be enforced against the firm.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Bourbon county; C. O. FRENCH, Judge.

A. A. Harris, for plaintiff in error. Hill & Chenault, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. Suit was brought by the First National Bank of Ft. Scott against Golden and Lee on the following promissory note: "Fort Scott, Kansas, Oct. 7, 1887. Ninety days after date we promise to pay to the order of the First National Bank of Fort Scott, Kansas, the sum of three hundred dollars, value received, payable at the First National Bank, Fort Scott, Kansas, with interest from maturity, at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum. Interest payable quarterly, and, if not paid when due, to bear the same rate of interest as the principal. The drawers and indorsers hereof severally waive demand of payment, protest, and notice of non-payment. $300. G. S. GOLDEN & Co." Golden made no defense, but Lee pleaded a denial of the partnership, and that he had never executed the note, nor was it executed for him by any one acting by his authority, or under his direction, and that said note was not his obligation. There was a trial by the court at which these facts were developed: Golden and Lee formed a partnership some time in August, 1887, to carry on the real-estate, loan, and insurance business on commission at Ft. Scott. Lee did not know of the existence or execution of this note until after its maturity. The bank at the time of the making of the note did not know who composed the firm of J. S. Golden & Co., and required Golden to make a statement as to who composed the firm, and this he did in writing on the back of the note. It is claimed on this state of facts that this was merely a partnership of occupation or employment, and not a commercial or trading one, and that there was no authority, actual or implied, for the making of commercial paper in the firm name by one member thereof. The bank introduced the evidence of several real-estate agents at Ft. Scott, to show that it was customary for those in that business at Ft. Scott to borrow money from the banks. The primary question is whether or not the execution of this note was within the scope of the partnership. The test of the character of the partnership is buying and selling. If it buys and sells, it is commercial or trading. If it does not buy or sell, it is one of employment or occupation. Winship v. Bank, 5 Pet. 529; Kimbrow v. Bullitt, 22 How. 256; 1 Bates, Partn. § 327.

In partnerships of occupation, when one member executes a note in the firm name, the holder must show express or implied authority from the firm to make the note, before a recovery can be had. Smith v. Sloan, 37 Wis. 285; Judge v. Braswell, 13 Bush. 67; Horn v. Bank, 32 Kan. 518, 4 Pac. Rep. 1022. In commercial partnerships a note executed by one member in the firm name is prima facie the obligation of the firm, and if one of the parties seeks to avoid its payment, the burden of proof lies upon him to show that the note was given in a matter not relating to the partnership business, and that also with the knowledge of the holder of the note. Deitz v. Regnier, 27 Kan. 94. In Bays v. Conner, 105 Ind. 415, 5 N. E. Rep. 18, and in Smith v. Sloan, 37 Wis. 285, it is held that notwithstanding the fact that the proceeds of the note were applied to the payment of the debts of the firm, one member of a non-trading partnership cannot bind the other by the execution of a note in the firm name. This, for the reason that there is a want of power, and the application of the proceeds is not controlling or decisive of the question of authority. The case of Deardorf v. Thacher, 78 Mo. 128, is one in which a member of a partnership of three persons who were engaged in the real-estate, loan, and insurance business, purchased of a lumber dealer quantities of lumber on the credit of the firm. The lumber was delivered by the dealer, without any knowledge on his part that it was not being bought for or applied to partnership business, and that he took the note in good faith according to the credit extended. The lumber dealer brought an action on the firm note that was executed by the member of the partnership who purchased the lumber. The other members of the firm denied, under oath, the execution of the note. The court held that they were not liable. The syllabus of the case is to the effect that "the members of a firm engaged in the insurance, real estate, and collecting business, have no implied power to bind each other by commercial paper in the name of the firm." The same rule has been applied to partnerships in mining in some English cases; in milling, (Lanier v. McCabe, 2 Fla. 32;) in establishing and carrying on water-works, (Broughton v. Water-Works, 3 Barn. & Ald. 1;) in gas-works, (Bramah v. Roberts, 3 Bing. N. C. 963;) in publishing, (Pooley v. Whitmore, 10 Hesk. 629;) in planting, (Prince v. Crawford, 50 Miss. 344; Benton v. Roberts, 4 La. Ann. 216;) in farming, (Green-slade v. Dower, 7 Barn. & C. 635;) in sugar refining, (Livingston v. Roosevelt, 4 Johns. 251;) in keeping a tavern, (Cocke v. Bank, 3 Ala. 175;) in owning a ship, (Williams v. Thomas, 6 Esp. 18;) in digging tunnels, (Gray v. Ward, 18 Ill. 32;) in carrying on a laundry, (Neale v. Turton, 4 Bing. 149;) in practicing law, (Hedley v. Bainbridge, 3 Q. B. 316; Garland v. Jacomb, L. R. 8 Exch. 216; Levy v. Pyne, 1 Car. & M. 453; Breckinridge v. Shrieve, 4 Dana, 375;) in practicing medicine or surgery, (Cros-thwait v. Ross, 1 Humph. 23; Lewis v. Reilly, 1 Q. B. 349;) and in keeping a store and rope-walk, (Wagnon v. Clay, 1 A. K. Marsh. 257.) In addition to all this, it is expressly stated in the articles of copartnership that it is formed for the purpose of carrying on the real-estate, loan, and insurance business on commission. It is also agreed in the articles of copartnership that neither of the said partners shall subscribe a bond, sign or indorse any note of hand, accept or indorse any draft or bill of exchange, or assume any other liability in the name of the firm, without the written consent of the other. These conditions embodied in the articles make it clear beyond all dispute that this was a partnership of occupation and employment, and not a trading or commercial one. It is said, however, on behalf of the bank, that it could not be bound by these unpublished restrictions; but, if we are right in the determination of the character of this partnership, then the plain duty of the bank, when one of the partners applied to it for a loan in the firm name, was to investigate his authority, and if investigation had taken place, knowledge of the restrictions would have followed. It is recommended that the judgment be reversed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

STATE INS. CO. v. GRAY.

INSURANCE—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—APPLICATION.

1. An agent, authorized to take applications for insurance, should be regarded to be acting within the scope of his authority where he fills up the blank application of insurance; and if, by his fault or negligence, it contains a misstatement not authorized by the instructions of the party who signed it, the wrong should be imputed to the company and not to the assured.

2. When the agent thus authorized by his company to take applications for insurance, without the knowledge of the applicant, writes false answers to questions contained in the application, contrary to the directions of the applicant, who makes true answers to such questions, the company will be estopped by the answers thus written by its agent. Insurance Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533; Insurance Co. v. Pearce, 89 Kan. 396, 18 Pac. Rep. 291.

Error from district court, Wilson county; L. STILLWELL, Judge.

HORTON, C. J. On August 9, 1886, J. W. Jones, the agent or solicitor of the State Insurance Company of Des Moines, residing in Neodasha, in this state, called upon Absalom Gray at his residence near that city, and solicited insurance upon his house and household goods, and succeeded in taking his application for $850 of insurance upon his property. Gray being unable to read or write, signed the application with his mark. On the 27th day of August, 1886, the insurance company issued to Gray a policy of insurance upon his property for the amount of his application. On the 17th day of February, 1887, the property insured was destroyed by fire without any fault of Gray. Subsequently, the insurance company refusing to pay any of the insurance upon the policy issued to him, he brought his action and recovered a judgment against the company for $488.62, together with all of his costs. The insurance company excepted to the rulings and judgment of the district court and brings the case here.

The application signed by Gray with his mark contained the following: "It is understood by the assured that the company will not be bound by any representations of the assured or promises of the agent not contained herein. * * * The above statements shall be the sole basis of the contract between the said company and myself, and are hereby made a part of the same. Having read the foregoing application and fully understanding its contents, I warrant it to contain a full and true description and statement of the condition, situation, value, occupancy and title of the property hereby proposed to be insured in the State Insurance Company of Des Moines; and I warrant the answers to each of the foregoing questions to be true, and I agree that this insurance shall not be binding upon the company until accepted by them." This application was taken and forwarded to the company by its solicitor, J. W. Jones, whose authority was "to solicit applications for insurance in said company." Among other things, the policy contained this statement: "It is expressly understood and agreed by the parties hereto that application and survey No. 243,392 c. made by the assured is hereby made a part of this policy, and a warranty on the part of the assured, and that this policy is issued on the faith of the statement in said application and survey, as they thus appear in writing therein only." The premium on the policy was paid by a note signed by the assured with his mark, which had not, by its terms, become due at the time of the fire. Before the maturity of the note, it had been placed in bank for collection by the insurance company. Gray deposited in the bank the money to pay the same, but on account of the fire the company refused it and never accepted the same. Question 24 of the application was as follows: "Is the title to the land on which the property to be insured is situated, in your own name; what kind of title have you? Explain fully." And the answer thereto, as the same appears in writing in the application, is: "The land is in my own name. I hold a warranty deed." On the trial, it was conceded that the title, instead of being in the name of Gray alone, was in the name of himself and his wife jointly. Question 25 of the application was as follows: "Is there any other insurance on this property; if so, how much, and in what company?" And the answer thereto, as the same appears in writing in the application, is: "No." On the trial, it was conceded that at the time of taking the application there were two policies of insurance on the property, amounting to $500. Question 26 of the application was as follows: "Are you the sole and undisputed owner of the property to be insured?" And the answer thereto, as the same appears in writing, is: "Yes." Upon the trial, with consent of the parties, the court submitted certain questions of fact to the jury, but reserved the other questions for its own determination. The questions of fact submitted to the jury, and their answers are as follows: "(1) When J. W. Jones asked question No. 25 in the application,—'Is there any other insurance on this property; if so, how much and in what company?'—who answered the question for the plaintiff? Answer. His wife. (2) What was the actual answer made to the question? State the same fully. A. There was five hundred dollars in Springfield Company. Did not know whether it was Springfield, Mo., or Ill. (3) Did Jones write in said application the actual answer that was made to said question, or did he write an answer not made? A. He wrote an answer that was not made. (4) After Jones had inserted the answers to the questions in the application as they now appear, did he read the same over to plaintiff or his wife, or to both? A. He did not. (5) Question 24, in the application, is in these words: 'Is the title to the land on which the property to be insured is situated, in your own name? What kind of a title have you? Explain fully.' Did Jones read the question to the plaintiff or his wife or both? A. He did not. (6) Question No. 26, in the application, is in these words: 'Are you the sole and undisputed owner of the property to be insured?' Did Jones read the question to the plaintiff or his wife or both? State what the fact is? A. He did not. (7) Had the real estate on which the insured property was situated been purchased by the plaintiff with his own money? A. Yes. (8) Had Mary Gray, the wife, any actual interest in the real estate except such interest as she might have had by virtue of being the plaintiff's wife, and her name appearing in the deed as one of the grantees? A. She did not."

The principal contention is that the trial court committed error in admitting the evidence which showed that the statements written in the application were not those of Gray, the applicant, although signed by him, with his mark, and in ruling that the insurance company was estopped by the answers falsely or improperly written by its agent or solicitor, when he filled up the blank application. Since this action was tried in the court below, the opinion of Insurance Co. v. Pearce has been handed down by this court. See 39 Kan. 396, 18 Pac. Rep. 291. That case is so recent, and so fully in point, that further discussion upon the principal question involved in this case is unnecessary. This court ruled in that case that "if, after hearing a full and truthful statement of the condition of the property insured from the owner, an agent of an insurance company fills the blanks in a printed form of application furnished him by the company with misrepresentations and false statements, and the insured signs the same without knowing its contents and without other fault than that he relied upon the agent to write down his statement correctly, and pays the premium, obtains a policy, and sustains a loss, held, that the company is estopped from denying its liability under the policy, and, further, held, that the signing of the application under such circumstances will not prevent a recovery by the insured, as the transcribing such statement will be deemed to be the act of the company by its agent, and not that of the insured. Where an agent of an insurance company soliciting insurance, in describing the property insured, falsely and without the knowledge of the insured, fills the blanks in the printed forms of application of the company, he is the agent of the company in taking such application, and not of the insured, although there is a stipulation on the face of such application that the description of the property is made by the owner, or by his authority. Where it is provided in a policy that the statements in an application are warranties, and, if any of them are false, the policy shall be void. It is not forfeited when its own agent makes all the false statements contained in the application, and there was no fraud or attempt to deceive on the part of the assured." See, also, Insurance Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533; Insurance Co. v. Mahone, 21

Wall. 152; Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222; Insurance Co. v. Baker, 94 U. S. 610; Pickel v. Insurance Co., 119 Ind. 291, 21 N. E. Rep. 898.

As both Mr. and Mrs. Gray were old, feeble, and illiterate, and as Gray, who signed the application and premium note with his marks, and afterwards retained in his possession the policy, could not read or write, the cases of Furneau v. Esterly, 36 Kan. 539, 13 Pac. Rep. 824; Johnson v. Insurance Co., 45 N. W. Rep. 799; and Insurance Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, have but little force. It ought not to be held that a person, not able to read or write, by merely holding a policy in his possession, which contains his application signed with his mark, thereby approves the action of the agent or solicitor in falsely or improperly taking his application and becomes, by holding such policy, a participant in the fraud committed by the agent or solicitor. As the evidence of Mrs. Gray tended to show that she was the agent of her husband, there was no error committed in admitting it. She may have been the agent of her husband, and acting for him, even when he was personally present. His age, feebleness, and illiteracy must be considered in connection with her statement of agency. The conversation between Gray and Jones, after Jones ceased to be the company's agent, was offered only to lay the foundation for impeachment; therefore, this evidence was not incompetent. The insurance company is in no condition to complain of the failure of the jury to return a general verdict; and therefore the instructions prayed for, which would have been competent, if it had been intended that the jury should render such a verdict, need not be considered. Before any evidence was submitted to the jury the parties agreed to submit certain questions of fact to the jury. The other questions were to be reserved and decided by the trial court. The court acted upon the stipulation of the parties, and no objection was taken by the defendant to the reception of the special verdict. By the agreement of its counsel, and its action when the special verdict of the jury was returned, the defendant waived a general verdict. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed; all the justices concurring.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—EVIDENCE OF INTENT.

Upon a question of fact as to whether a sale of personal property was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of the seller, it is competent for the seller, as a witness, to testify directly as to whether he in fact intended by the sale to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Morris county; M. B. NICHOLSON, Judge.

J. K. Owens, G. N. Elliott, and J. T. Bradley, for plaintiffs in error. E. S. Bertram, for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought in the district court of Morris county, on February 17, 1888, by B. F. Woodward, F. A. Faxon, and J. C. Horton, partners, doing business under the firm name of Woodward, Faxon & Co., against F. A. Gardom, to recover the sum of $794.25, on an account. At the same time an order of attachment was procured in the case upon the following grounds, as alleged in plaintiffs' affidavit therefor, to-wit: "That said defendant is about to convert his property, or a part thereof, into money, for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors, and has property and rights in action which he conceals, has assigned and is about to dispose of his property, or a part thereof, with the intent to defraud, hinder, and delay his creditors." The order of attachment was levied upon certain personal property as the property of Gardom, valued by the appraisers at $1,650.36. On April 9, 1888, Gardom filed a motion to discharge the attachment upon the ground, among others, that the grounds set forth in the plaintiffs' affidavit for the attachment were not true. On the same day John A. McQuistan, with leave of the court, and under the provisions of chapter 137 of the Laws of 1877, (Gen. St. 1889, par. 4123,) filed an interplea, claiming that the personal property attached belonged to him. The plaintiffs replied to this interplea. On April 23, 1888, by consent of the parties and the court, a trial was had before the court, without a jury, upon both the motion and the interplea upon the same evidence. The decision of the court below was in favor of the plaintiffs and against Gardom and McQuistan, and they, as plaintiffs in error, bring the case to this court for review. It appears that the attached property once belonged to the defendant Gardom, but that, prior to the levying of the attachment, and on January 5, 1888, McQuistan purchased the same from Gardom for the sum of $1,234.45, that amount being the amount of a promissory note, with interest, which McQuistan at the time held against Gardom. The plaintiffs claim that this sale was a sham made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding the creditors of Gardom; but Gardom and McQuistan claim that the sale was made in the best of faith. Whether the sale was a sham or not, or whether it was made in good faith, was about the only material question presented to the court below for its determination. If it was a sham sale, then, as to the plaintiffs, the property belonged to Gardom, and the plaintiffs were entitled to their attachment; but, if it was an honest and bona fide sale, then the property belonged to McQuistan, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to their attachment. During the trial the defendant Gardom was examined as a witness on the part of himself and McQuistan, and he was asked the following, among other questions: "I wish to ask you about these matters. There are three charges made against you. One is that you were about to convert your property, or a part thereof, into money, for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of your creditors. I wish you to state to the court whether or not you were about, at the time of the attachment, at or before or about that time,—if you were about to convert your property, or a part thereof, into money, for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of your creditors." The plaintiffs objected to the question upon the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and called for a legal conclusion; and the court below sustained the objection, to which Gardom and McQuistan excepted. The witness was also asked the following question, to-wit: "He charges you with having assigned your property, or a part thereof, with the intent to hinder, defraud, and delay your creditors. Is that true? Did you have any such intent?" To which the plaintiffs objected "as incompetent, and as involving a question of law," which objection was sustained by the court, and the ruling duly excepted to. It will be perceived that these questions were not objected to on the ground of their form, or that they were leading, but upon the grounds, in substance, that the evidence to be elicited by them would be incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, a legal conclusion, and a question of law. We think the court below committed error. A vital question involved in the case was whether the aforesaid sale was made in good faith, or was a mere sham, and made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding Gardom's creditors. Whether the sale was in good faith or not depended upon the state or condition of Gardom and McQuistan's minds, their thoughts, intentions, motives; and the aforesaid questions were asked for the purpose of eliciting evidence tending to show what the condition of Gardom's mind in particular was, his intentions, and motives. Dr. Wharton, in his work on the law of Evidence, (section 508,) uses the following language: "A witness, also, is not to be permitted to testify as to the motives by which another person is or has been actuated. Motives are eminently inferences from conduct. The facts from which the inferences are to be drawn are to be detailed by the witnesses; for the jury the work of inference is to be reserved. Yet, where a party is examined as to his own conduct, he may be asked as to his motives, his testimony to such motive being based not on inference, but on consciousness." See, also, Whart. Ev. §§ 482, 955. In an article in the Albany Law Journal of December, 1876, the following, among other language, is used: "Upon the review of all the cases, it would appear that in cases arising under a statute where the statute makes the intent of the one doing an act involved in the issue essential, it is competent to inquire of him, as a witness, what his intent was, and his testimony goes to the jury with the other evidence contradicting or corroborating it." Volume 14, p. 387. In the case of Com. v. Woodward, 102 Mass. 155, 161, the following language is used: "The criminal purpose or intent must always be proved. It is usually inferred from the character and circumstances of the offense, or proved by preceding threats, accompanying declarations, or subsequent conduct or admissions. Now that the defendant himself is admitted as a witness, it must be competent for him to testify directly to that which is always a subject of proof or disproof by indirect evidence." In the case of Seymour v. Wilson, 14 N. Y. 567, the following is decided: "On an issue of fact as to whether an assignment or transfer of property was made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, it is competent, where the assignor is a witness, to inquire of him whether, in making the assignment or transfer, he intended to delay or defraud his creditors." See, also, the following additional authorities: Wheelden v. Wilson, 44 Me. 11; Snow v. Paine, 114 Mass. 520; Fisk v. Inhabitants, 8 Gray, 506; Lombard v. Oliver, 7 Allen, 155; *Perseus v. The condition of a man's mind with reference to what he thinks, feels, believes, intends, and his motives, is always a fact, and it is a fact which is often required to be ascertained both in civil and in criminal cases; and only one person in the world has any actual knowledge concerning that fact, and that person is the one whose condition of mind is in question; and where he is a competent witness to prove such condition he may testify to the same directly. Other witnesses can testify only to extraneous facts tending to prove this condition. He may also testify to such extraneous facts, but he may testify directly as to what the condition of his own mind is or was at any particular time or on any particular occasion. The court below held otherwise. The court below held that such direct testimony of the witness himself, as to the condition of his own mind, was worthless. If this testimony of the witness had been admitted, the finding of the court below might perhaps have been different from what it was. Indeed, it is probable that the finding of the court below, without this testimony, is erroneous, at least, as to McQuistan. The order and judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings. All the justices concurring.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Where an owner of real estate, consisting of three lots composing one tract, sells a portion of the same to B., pointing out and designating that portion of the tract which he claims and believes he is selling, and puts B. into the possession thereof, and B. immediately builds a dwelling-house thereon, and resides upon the property, claiming to own the same, for more than 15 years, he has obtained a good title thereto, under the 15-years statute of limitations, (Civil Code, § 16, subd. 4,) as against subsequent purchasers of the property, although, in fact, it was supposed by both the parties to the purchase and sale, at the time of the sale and afterwards, that it was the north lot that was being sold, while in fact it was a part of the middle and south lots that was pointed out and designated, and into the possession of which the purchaser was placed, and although the deed from the vendor designated the north lot, and the purchaser paid the taxes on that lot, and the vendor and his subsequent grantees paid the taxes on the other property.

Error to district court, Bourbon county;
C. O. FRENCH, Judge.

Dillard & Padgett, for plaintiffs in error.
Bawden & Coon, for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action in the nature of ejectment, brought in the district court of Bourbon county, on July 27, 1886, by H. C. Moore and Al. Popkess, against William Banks, to recover the possession of the south half of lot No. 3, in block No. 17, in the city of Ft. Scott. After the first trial, and on May 16, 1887, the plaintiffs, with leave of the court, amended their petition, and prayed not only for the recovery of the south half of said lot No. 3, but also for the recovery of the north half of lot No. 5, in said block. The defendant answered alleging that he had been in the actual and continued possession of the property described in the plaintiffs' amended petition for more than 15 years last past before the commencement of the action, under a deed duly recorded, claiming to be the owner of the property, and that, during all that time, he had resided upon the property, and paid all the taxes assessed against it, and had put valuable improvements thereon of the value of $1,000. The plaintiffs replied, denying generally all the allegations of the defendant's answer. On September 12, 1887, the case was tried before the court without a jury, and the court found generally in favor of the defendant, and against the plaintiffs, and rendered judgment accordingly; and the plaintiffs, as plaintiffs in error, brought the case to this court for review. Since the case was brought to this court, the defendant William Banks died, and the case has been revived against his heirs at law as the defendants in error, to-wit, Jesse E. Wiley, Luella Wiley, Edward Banks, and Henry Banks.

The facts of this case, as they appear from the evidence, are substantially as follows: In February, 1870, and prior thereto, Joe Emmert owned lots numbered 1, 3, and 5, in block No. 17, in Ft. Scott. These lots so adjoined each other as to constitute one tract of land, and they constituted the west half of the block, and were each 50 feet wide north and south, by 150 feet long east and west. Lot No. 1 was the north lot; lot No. 3 was the middle one; and lot No. 5 was the south one. This block was bounded on the west by Little street, and on the south by Sycamore street. Some time in February, 1870, or before that time, Emmert sold lot No. 1 to Banks, and lot No. 5 to John Aikens; they intending at some time in the future to purchase the middle lot and divide it between them. Emmert, at the time, pointed out and designated to each of the purchasers the property which he claimed and believed he was selling to them, and each immediately took the possession of that portion which he thought he was purchasing; but they were all mistaken as to the location of the property. Banks in fact took the possession of the south half of lot No. 3, and the north half of lot No. 5, the property which is now in controversy; while Aikens in fact took the possession of a part of Sycamore street. The mistake arose from an inaccurate or erroneous survey. Banks immediately built a dwelling-house upon the property now in controversy, and continuously resided therein until since this case was brought to this court, when he died. Some time after the purchase of this property by Banks, the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Company, by proper condemnation proceedings, took, as a part of their right of way, about one-half of lot No. 1, being that portion of the lot which would lie north-west of a line drawn from the north-east corner of the lot to the south-west corner thereof; but Banks had no notice of the condemnation proceedings, and has not received any portion of the condemnation money. As before stated, Banks resided in the house which he built upon the property in controversy in 1870, and had the actual and continuous possession of the property from the time of his first occupation thereof, in February, 1870, until after the trial of this case in the court below, believing all the time, until within about a year before the trial, that he occupied lot No. 1, and only that lot; and, during all that period of time, he paid the taxes assessed or levied upon that lot. In the mean time Emmert sold lot No. 3 to Hugh C. Custer, and by the deed from Emmert to Custer, and other deeds, the record title to the property in controversy has been transferred to the plaintiffs in this action, by whom, and their grantors, all the taxes levied upon the property have been paid. The plaintiffs claim under a warranty deed executed by their immediate grantor to them on February 3, 1886.

We think the judgment of the court below must be affirmed. As the court below found generally in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs, it must now be assumed that all its findings, conclusions, and inferences from the evidence, so far as there was any evidence to support them, were in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiffs; and such findings, conclusions, and inferences must, in this court, be held to be conclusive, so far as the evidence will at all warrant or justify the same. This is the view upon which we shall decide this case, and upon this view we might properly take the facts to be even more favorable to Banks than we have stated them. We shall take the facts to be that Emmert sold to Banks the very identical property of which Banks took the possession, and upon which he built his house, and made his improvements; for, at the time of the purchase and sale, Emmert owned all the property, the property in controversy, as well as lot No. 1, and had the right to sell the same, and he pointed out and designated to Banks the very property of which Banks took the possession as the property which he, Emmert, was selling, and Banks purchasing, and Emmert put Banks into the possession thereof. This was in February, 1870. The deed was not executed until in October of that year; and when it was executed it did not convey the property pointed out and designated by Emmert, but conveyed other property. Prior to that time, Banks had built his house, and at that time he was residing upon the property, and perhaps in equity he could have compelled Emmert to convey to him the identical property which Emmert pointed out and designated to him as the property which he (Emmert) was selling. All the parties were mistaken. Both Banks and Emmert believed that Emmert, by the deed, was conveying the identical property which he had previously pointed out, designated, and sold to Banks. The facts would then seem to be that Banks purchased, took possession of, made valuable improvements and resided upon, one piece of property, and obtained a deed for another piece of property under the mistaken belief that the property which he purchased and resided upon was lot No. 1, when in fact it was parts of lots Nos. 3 and 5. He believed he occupied lot No. 1, and that he obtained a deed for the property which he occupied; and he continuously paid the taxes levied upon lot No. 1, and did not pay the taxes levied upon the property which he actually occupied. This property he occupied in the manner aforesaid for more than 15 years before this action was commenced, and therefore we would think that the 15-year statute of limitations (Civil Code, §16, subd. 4) would bar any action brought by any person holding the record title to recover the property from him. This is not a mere question concerning disputed boundary lines between adjoining proprietors, as was the case in the case of Winn v. Abeles, 35 Kan. 85, 10 Pac. Rep. 443. In this case the party claiming the property, partly, at least, under the statute of limitations, was a purchaser thereof, and he was put into the possession thereof by his vendor, who prior to the sale was the owner thereof. Nor is this a case of doubtful or questionable possession and claim of ownership, as against an owner or subsequent purchaser without actual knowledge of his possession or claim. Banks had the actual, absolute, open, and visible possession of the property. He was actually residing upon the same, and his possession was vastly superior to the possession held by any one of the parties claiming under the statute of limitations, as against the owner or innocent purchaser in the following cases: Sheldon v. Atkinson, 38 Kan. 14, 16 Pac. Rep. 68; Sanford v. Weeks, 38 Kan. 320, 16 Pac. Rep. 465; Gildehaus v. Whiting, 39 Kan. 706, 18 Pac. Rep. 916. Emmert had full knowledge in this case, and the parties subsequently purchasing the property could not have avoided knowing that Banks had the possession thereof, and that he was claiming to be the owner of the same, if they had looked at the property, and made proper inquiry. Banks had such a possession and claim of ownership as will satisfy all the authorities with regard to obtaining title, or quieting title or possession under the statute of limitations. Sedg. & W. Tr. Tit. Land, §§ 729, 730, 735-740. The judgment of the court below will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE.

1. In an action to recover the value of a tract of land appropriated by a railway company for right of way, which, at the time of its condemnation, was not platted as a part of a city but was in use as farming land, it is erroneous to permit witnesses to testify to the value of lots on the principal business street of a city near by. The value of such lots furnishes no proper measure by which to ascertain the value of the land taken.

2. In such a case, it is also error to permit a witness to testify to the size of lots upon said business street, the number of such lots contained in an acre, and the value of such lots.

3. The jury are to value the land appropriated as a whole, in the condition it was immediately before it was condemned, and are not to consider what it would bring if divided into lots and blocks, and made a part of the city.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge.

M. A. Low, W. F. Evans, and Hutchings & Keplinger, for plaintiff in error. Benton, Rush & Hale, for defendants in error.

STRANG, C. Appeal from the report of commissioners assessing damages for land taken by the plaintiff for right of way. Amount of damages assessed, $32,760. Trial had on the appeal in the district court, before a jury, March 29, 1888, resulting in a verdict and judgment for the defendants in the sum of $49,101.93. The plaintiff presented a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and it brings the case to this court, and alleges that several errors occurred in the trial of the case below, for which it should be reversed.

The first error complained of is the admission of the following evidence of the witnesses Thomas Orr and E. W. Anderson: "Thomas Orr: Question. What was property down there on Eleventh and Kansas avenue, and from there out to Twelfth, and back to Tenth,—what was that worth? Answer. Worth just as much as it is now. By Mr. Hutchings. Wait; we object to the question, upon the ground it is not the property in controversy. Those are town lots, situated upon streets, while the property in controversy is unoccupied land. It is irrelevant to the inquiry here. By the Court. The question asked the witness is as to what this land on the corner of Eleventh and Kansas avenue was worth last fall, and he may answer that question by stating what he thinks it was worth at that time. (To which ruling of the court the defendant duly excepted.) A. I considered it worth just as much then as it is now. Q. What is it worth now? (Objected to by the defendant; same as last objection. Objection overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) A. I paid at the rate of $5.500 an acre, without improvements. By Mr.

Hutchings. We object to that. By the Court. This last answer is stricken out. Q. State what, in your opinion, it was worth at that time. Never mind what you paid, just give an opinion what land along there was worth? By Mr. Hutchings. We object to the question as to what property on Kansas avenue or Eleventh street was worth last fall, or any other time, because it is irrelevant. It is not the property in controversy, nor situated in the same manner. (Objection overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) A. What is the question now? Q. What was the property along Kansas avenue, there along Tenth or Twelfth streets, worth last fall? A. Not what I paid now? Q. No, not of any special piece; but what would you generally regard it worth an acre or an acre property? (Objected to by defendant, same as last objection made, and for the additional reason that the question does not call for the market value. Objection overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) Q. Tell us the market value of it last fall, in your opinion? A. I think about two hundred dollars a foot. By Mr. Hutchings. We move to strike out that testimony, upon the ground it is irrelevant to any inquiry involved in this case. (Motion overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) E. W. Anderson: Q. What was the market value of property along Kansas avenue, at that point, last fall, during October and November, immediately south of the Splitlog tract? (Objected to by defendant's counsel, because no sufficient foundation has been laid for the question, and is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Objection overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) A. It was worth at the corner of Sixteenth and Kansas avenue a hundred dollars a foot,—is what it sold for. By Mr. Hutchings. We move to strike that out as irrelevant and immaterial, and not responsive to the question. (Motion overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.)

The objection to this evidence is that it does not relate to the land in controversy, which is unoccupied land, but relates to town lots situate upon streets, and surrounded by improvements, and is therefore irrelevant. This objection goes to the competency of the evidence. While there is a want of harmony in the authorities, we think the weight of authority holds that where expert witnesses are called to testify as to values in damage cases, or where, under the exception to the general rule that none but experts may give opinions, non-expert witnesses, familiar with the subject of the controversy, are permitted to give opinions as to values, such evidence—that is, such opinions as to values—should be confined to the market value of the property in controversy in all cases where witnesses can be obtained who are familiar therewith. In the case at bar, it matters not, however, whether we are confined to such rule, or go further and permit witnesses to give their opinions of the market value of other property of like kind, similarly situated, as under either rule the evidence complained of under the first assignment of error should have been excluded. The witness was not asked to give his opinion of the market value of the land in controversy, nor was his opinion sought in relation to the market value of like property, similarly situated. He was asked, "what was property along Kansas avenue, there along Tenth or Twelfth streets, worth last fall?" This property, thus inquired about, consisted of lots on the most important business street in the city of Armourdale, surrounded by or adjacent to lots with buildings and other improvements thereon, while the land appropriated by the plaintiff was a part of a tract of farming land, in use as such when condemned and taken by the railroad company. It had never been platted into blocks or lots as a part of any city, nor was it adjacent to any land which had been so platted, but was bounded on the north by the Union Pacific Railroad; on the west by 20th street; on the east by 16th street; and on the south, the side nearest to Kansas avenue, by unplatted lands of Mary Orr, and the Kaw Valley T. S. and B. Co. This land, and the lots, the value of which was proved by the witnesses, are entirely dissimilar. They are unlike in location. The lots are on a business street in the city, while the land appropriated is from 600 to 800 feet back of said street, and separated therefrom by two other tracts of land of like character, owned by other persons, neither of which is yet platted as an addition to the city. The property on Kansas avenue are business lots, while the land in controversy, if platted, would be at least two streets back of said avenue, and would not be available for business lots in a long time, if ever. The value of a lot on the principal business street of a city furnishes no criterion for estimating the value of a lot of like size on another street, even one block away from such business center, and much less for the value of farming land, not yet platted as a part of the city and cut off from the city by other lands not yet platted. The evidence complained of in this assignment is so palpably erroneous that we do not care to pursue the subject further. In a city like Armourdale, where real-estate agents, and dealers in real estate on their own account, are not scarce, it would seem that no difficulty should be experienced in finding witnesses who could testify as to the value of the property in controversy, and thus keep within the rule. The plaintiff objected to the following evidence of Thomas Orr: "Thomas Orr: Question. How many feet are there in a lot? (Objected to by the defendant as immaterial and irrelevant. Objection overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) Answer. Lots in the locality of these corners are generally twenty-two feet five and six inches wide, while inside lots are twenty-five feet front. Q. About how many lots does that give to the acre? (Objected to as immaterial and irrelevant. Objection overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) A. The corner lots would make eleven to the acre, while the twenty-five feet would be ten lots to the acre. Q. That would be at the rate of $5,000 a lot, then? (Objected to by the defendant's counsel on grounds last stated. Objections overruled by the court. Defendant duly excepted.) A. Yes, sir."

In cases like this, where the damages are limited to the value of the land appropriated, the proper inquiry is what was the market value of such land, for any present use, in the condition in which it was immediately prior to its condemnation by the company. Witnesses testifying as to the value of such land may consider any use to which the ground may be presently put in forming their opinions as to its value, and its surroundings may be shown to the jury, its nearness to or distance from a town, village, or city, or other improvements that tend to affect its value; but the jury are to value the land as a whole in the condition in which it was when taken. They have nothing to do with its subdivision into lots or blocks. They may consider its location, and the effect its location has upon its value as a whole; but the evidence as to how many lots it would make, and what they would sell for after the subdivision, is wholly improper. If an illustration was wanted to show the impropriety of such evidence, we do not know where we could find a stronger or more apt one than the evidence this witness furnishes. The witness is asked the size of lots on Kansas avenue, the value of such lots, and how many such lots an acre would make, and then it drops out that an acre of such lots are worth $55,000, without improvements; that the witness paid at that rate per acre. Such evidence is certainly highly improper. It furnishes no proper measure of value, so far as the land appropriated is concerned, with which alone the jury has to do, and is well calculated to mislead the jury by furnishing a false and fanciful measure of damages. Without going further into this record, for the reasons given in connection with these, the first and third assignments, it is recommended that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and the case remanded for new trial.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

MERTEN et ux. v. NEWFORTH.

EXTENSION OF TIME TO PLEAD.

Where the demurrer of the defendant has been overruled, and time given him to answer, and he does not present or file his answer in time, his application for leave for further time to answer must be addressed to the discretion of the trial court. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Barton county; ANSEL R. CLARK, Judge.

G. W. Nimocks & Bro., for plaintiffs in error. Maher & Osmond, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. On the 1st day of March, 1887, Philip Newforth commenced his action against R. Merten and Mary Merten for a specific performance of the conveyance of real estate upon a written bond or agreement given by the Mertens to Martin Gutzwiller on the 12th of March, 1877, and assigned to the Mertens by Martin Gutzwiller and wife on the 7th day of May, 1884. On the 28th of March, 1887, the defendants filed a demurrer to the petition, alleging that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Upon the hearing, the demurrer was overruled by the trial court, and the defendants were given 30 days in which to file an answer. They did not answer within the 30 days, but a long time thereafter, and on the 5th day of October, 1887, filed two affidavits for permission to file an answer. The affidavit of R. Merten was to the effect that before answering in the case it was necessary for him to furnish to his attorney all the contracts and assignments that were outstanding concerning the title to the land; that he did all he could by request to secure these papers; but that they did not reach his attorney until the 5th of October, 1887. The affidavit further stated the general nature of his defense, among other things, that Martin Gutzwiller did not comply with the terms of the bond or agreement; that he abandoned the land and allowed it to go to tax-sale. The affidavit of his attorney was also to the effect that he did not secure, until the morning of the 5th of October, 1887, the papers necessary to enable him to make an answer in the case. No answer, however, was then presented. On the 7th day of October, 1887, the case was heard and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants. Subsequently, the defendants filed a motion for a new trial, and this motion was overruled. It does not appear that the motion for a new trial was filed in time. They excepted, and bring the case here.

The permission to file an answer out of time is largely in the discretion of the trial court. Where the demurrer of the defendant has been overruled, and time given him to answer, and he does not present or file his answer in time, his application for leave for further time to answer must be addressed to the discretion of the trial court. If sufficient diligence is not shown on his part, the court will not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the answer to be filed out of time. It may be, in the absence of further showing, that the trial court thought that the filing of the answer was asked simply for delay. It looks as though the demurrer had been filed for delay, because it was not well taken. It may be said to have been frivolous. Sprattly v. Insurance Co., 5 Kan. 155; Neitzel v. Hunter, 19 Kan. 221; Swerdsfeger v. State, 21 Kan. 475. No sufficient diligence was shown in the affidavits, in obtaining the papers alleged to have been needed to prepare the answer, and no answer was presented to the trial court before the case was heard and disposed of. The demurrer was properly overruled. We have not considered the affidavits nor the answer filed after the 7th day of October, that being the day upon which the judgment was rendered. Under the circumstances of this case, the showing for permission to file an answer should have been made, and the answer itself presented before the trial. We perceive no abuse of the discretion of the court. Pemberton v. Hoosier, 1 Kan. 108; Butcher v. Bank, 2 Kan. 70; Haight v. Schuck, 6 Kan. 192; McPherson v. Kingsbaker, 22 Kan. 646; Tefft v. Firey, Id. 753; White v. Treon, 25 Kan. 484; Bank v. Wentworth, 28 Kan. 183; Railway Co. v. Linson, 39 Kan. 416, 18 Pac. Rep. 498; *Stith v. DEVER v. CLARK.

LIBEL—PLEADING.

1. The defendant, in a civil action against him for libel, may, where the alleged libel is specific, merely answer that the charge is true, but where the charge is in general terms the answer must allege the facts upon which he relies to make out the charge.
2. The pleadings in this case examined, and the allegations in the petition and answer held to show that the alleged libelous matters were so clearly and specifically stated as to authorize the defendant to introduce evidence in justification thereof.

Error from district court, Geary county; NICHOLSON, Judge.

On the 9th day of July, 1887, Thomas Dever commenced his action against George A. Clark to recover damages for the publication of two alleged libels. The first publication was as follows: "A raid was made on the Clay Center joint last Tuesday, and 97 cases of beer and 12 jugs of bug juice seized. Tom Keefe was arrested, but Tom says he does not own the place, and that it has been closed since May 1st. The beer and juice was transferred to the police court room. His honor now has more cases before him than ever, but it is a matter of some doubt whether each case contains $2.50 for a certain limb of the law or not. Keefe says the authorities left the place open, and that about 4,000 cigars were stolen Tuesday night. Of course, here is cause for action for damages, but, so long as the city is represented by such ponderous brain and legal talent, the community will not suffer defeat in the courts. We understand a telegram was received Wednesday to the effect that the beer belonged to outside parties, and was only stored here for a time. This must be true, for we have noticed an unusual number of Clay Center people about the depot during the past two weeks. Between Tom Dever and Clay Center, Junction City's reputation is bound to go to the wall if some action in self-defense is not soon taken." The second publication was as follows: "The party organ seems to be very bitter against the city attorney for pulling the beer. What is the matter? It is rumored on the street that the attorney has a libel suit in soak."—[Union. The 'party organ' is 'bitter' against no one. So long as a person works for the interests of the city, the Republican will heartily indorse anything they may do, but when it comes to throwing the city into costs just for the sake of letting a certain limb of the law make $2.50 per case, whether he wins the case or not, it is getting rather gauzy. The individual in controversy has no more right to the claim of being an attorney than the devil has to a seat in heaven. The Republican has no axe to grind in this matter further than it does not intend to remain silent and see the city filched without some return. The position which this paper has always taken on the prohibition question is too well known to require space in this article. It is very different from the course pursued by the Union. The Republican has stood up for the temperance cause when the editor of the Union winked at and illegally licensed the sale and barter of whisky and beer. While the Union has heaped all manner of abuse on the W. C. T. U., the Republican has defended these ladies in their effort to suppress the sale of the damnable stuff, and now that victory has been won, it does not intend to remain quiet and see a jack-legged lawyer prostitute the noble cause, and run the city into hundreds of dollars in costs for the sake of a paltry $2.50 fee. A lawyer who has no more sense than to appeal a city case from the police court to the district court is legally too transparent for an intelligent community to tolerate. This same lawyer, according to the last statement of the city clerk, stuck the city for costs to the amount of $46.10 in city cases which he appealed to the district court, and which were thrown out of said court. Upon a close examination of the clerk's statement, we find $18.50 is the amount collected in the police court during the past quarter. During the same time the city paid its city attorney $54.10. And for what? Was it for the cases he lost before the police court? We recapitulate:

Paid same attorney during quarter.....	54 10
	$100 80
Received from police court.....	18 50

We find that the city is loser to the tune of $82.30 for taking the advice of one who knows nothing about law. Of course the tax-payers will have to stand this. The citizens of Junction City can stand legitimate expenses, but, when it comes to paying for the blunders of an incompetent individual, it is time to raise a kick, and the Republican is not afraid to head that kick. If it is necessary for the city to employ a lawyer, it will be cheaper to get one who has brains and ability enough to represent it intelligently, and protect its interests. We like to see a man busy, but not at the expense of the community. The Republican has no war to make on any officials so long as they perform the duties of their offices intelligently and faithfully, and protect the interests of the people; but it does not intend to remain quiet and see the city systematically flied and run into debt by a shyster who knows more about sawing wood than hedoes about the rudiments and the practice of law. If Mr. Dever has a libel suit in soak we would suggest that he remove it and substitute his head. If necessary, a very interesting chapter, backed by affidavits, can be furnished next week." On July 26, 1887, the defendant filed his answer as follows, omitting caption: "(1) In answer to plaintiff's first cause of action, the defendant says he admits the publication of the matter alleged, but he denies that the matters therein contained mean, or were intended to convey the meaning represented and set forth by the plaintiff in his petition; and for further answer defendant avers that the matters and things contained in said publication are and were true, and were published of and concerning the official conduct of the plaintiff as a public officer. (2) In answer to the second cause of action of the plaintiff, defendant says that he admits the publication of the matter alleged to contain the supposed libel, but he denies that the matters and things contained therein mean, or were intended to convey the meaning attributed to them as alleged in said petition. The defendant further says that the matters and things contained in said publication were true, and the same were published of and concerning the official conduct of the plaintiff as a public officer. (3) Except so far as hereinbefore admitted, defendant denies each and every allegation contained in plaintiff's petition." On August 20, 1887, the plaintiff filed the following motion, omitting caption: "Comes now said plaintiff and asks the court to require said defendant to file with and attach to his answer filed herein a bill of particulars, specifically setting out the matters and things contained in the articles published by said defendant, and which said defendant justifies in his said answer, by plea that said matters and things are and were true." On the 21st of September, 1887, this motion was heard, and the court made the following order thereon: "That said answer specifically set up all matters pleaded as true in justification or mitigation; and further, that each of said matters be specifically set out by a statement of the facts in relation thereto, and also that said defendant separately state and number each of his several defenses. The defendant asks and is by the court given 90 days from the rising of the court to file amended answer, and the plaintiff is allowed 20 days thereafter to plead thereto; and case continued until the next term of this court." On the 24th of December, 1887, the defendant filed the following amended answer or bill of particulars, omitting caption: "That in the following statement cited in plaintiff's petition, (the second cause of action thereof,) and contained in Exhibit B, attached to said petition, to-wit: 'A lawyer who has no more sense than to appeal a city case from the police court to the district court is legally too transparent for an intelligent community to tolerate,'—reference was made by the defendant to the case of the city of Junction City against W. D. Grant, and the two cases of Junction City, Plaintiff, v. Ida C. Blue, Defendant, attempted to be taken by said plaintiff as attorney of said city from the police court of said city to the district court of Davis county, Kan., filed in the office of the clerk of said court, and there numbered, respectively, 1750, 1748, and 1749. And defendant further says that the other matters published by defendant, and complained of in said petition of plaintiff, do not, in their nature, admit of particularization further than appears in the context of said publication." On December 30, 1887, the plaintiff filed the following motion, omitting caption: "Comes now said plaintiff and asks the court to strike out and render for naught the amended answer of the defendant herein filed, for the reason that said amended answer is not in accordance with the order of this court heretofore made in this cause, in which order said defendant was required and ordered 'to make his answer more definite and certain in that, to-wit, that said answer specifically set up all matters pleaded as true in justification or mitigation; and further, that each of said matters be specifically set out by a statement of the facts in relation thereto;' and also the further order 'that said defendant separately state and number each of his several defenses.'" On the 29th of March, 1888, the court overruled the motion to strike out the amended answer, and plaintiff excepted. The case then came on in its regular order for trial, and the plaintiff objected to going to trial upon the ground that a sufficient amended answer or bill of particulars had not been filed. This was overruled by the court. The plaintiff also objected to going to trial upon the merits and the pleadings as made up, which objection was overruled by the trial court, and the plaintiff excepted. The case was heard before the court with a jury, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff. Subsequently, the plaintiff filed his motion for a new trial, which was overruled. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, and against the plaintiff and for costs. The plaintiff excepted, and brings the case here.

Thomas Dever, for plaintiff in error. J. V. Humphrey, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The principal contention in this case is that the defendant's answer was insufficient as a plea of justification; therefore, that the trial court committed error in permitting the defendant to offer any testimony in the case under his answer or amended answer. Section 125 of the Civil Code reads: "In an action for libel or slander, it shall be sufficient to state, generally, that the defamatory matter was published or spoken of the plaintiff; and, if the allegation be denied, the plaintiff must prove, on the trial, the facts showing that the defamatory matter was published or spoken of him." Section 126 of the Civil Code provides: "In the action mentioned in the last section, the defendant may allege the truth of the matter charged as defamatory, and may prove the same, and any mitigating circumstances, to reduce the amount of damages; or he may prove either." The requisites of an answer in an action for libel for justification depends upon whether the charge is general or specific. Where the charge is specific, it is sufficient to state that the supposed defamatory words or libelous publication set forth in the petition are true. Where the charge is in general terms, the answer must state the facts which show the defamatory words or libelous publication to be true. It is not sufficient merely to allege that the charge is true. Bliss states the rule as follows: "When the defamatory words, as set out, are sufficient of themselves to describe the offense, then a general affirmation of their truth has been held to be sufficient; but otherwise the plea or answer of justification must show the facts that constitute the offense with the same particularity as an indictment for the same offense. The plaintiff is, in fact, put on trial, and the defendant can only sustain himself by stating and proving the commission of a specific offense which would warrant the charge; and if there is a variance, or if the quasi indictment is less broad than the charge, or, if it omits an element necessary to constitute the offense charged, it is no justification. In regard to justification by showing that the publication was privileged, the Code has made no change. The facts that will thus shield the defendant are, as they always were, new matter to be pleaded." Section 361, Code Pl.; Stith v. Fullinwider, 40 Kan. 73, 19 Pac. Rep. 314; Townsh. Sland. & L. §§ 212, 355, 382; Van Derveer v. Sutphin, 5 Ohio St. 293; Castle v. Houston, 19 Kan. 426; Thompson v. Press Co., 33 N. W. Rep. 856; Sunman v. Brewin, 52 Ind. 140. If the charge be that the plaintiff is a swindler or a thief, or a perjurer, or a murderer, or that he stole a watch, or certified a lie, or was of intemperate habits, or received a bribe, or perverted the law, it is not sufficient merely to allege that the charge is true. The plea of justification must set up the facts upon which the defendant relies to make out a charge. Townsh. Sland. & L. § 355; Newell, Defam. c. 21, §§ 68-84. In this case, considering the allegations of the petition and the answer as amended, we think the alleged libelous charges were so specific as to permit the defendant to offer proof in justification. These charges are fully set forth in the statement of the case, and need not be repeated here.

From the petition and answer, the court was clearly able to determine that the alleged charges were libelous, and we think the plaintiff must have been fully prepared, from the allegations of the petition and answer, to meet the proof of the defendant. Complaint is also made that the defendant was permitted, without a sufficient plea therefor, to prove mitigating circumstances. The record recites "that the defendant, to maintain the issues upon his part, offered his proof, and the plaintiff thereupon objected to the introduction of any testimony in justification or mitigation under the defendant's answer, and the court overruled the objection and permitted the introduction of such testimony, to which ruling and the introduction of such testimony the plaintiff at the time excepted." There is no testimony contained in the record, and, as the jury found in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, it is apparent that this verdict was rendered upon the plea of justification, and not on account of any mitigating circumstances; therefore, we cannot say, from the record, that any material error was committed in the ruling of the trial court. The same may also be said of the instructions given and refused, as none of the testimony is preserved. Plaintiff insists that the instructions could not be applicable to the case under any state of facts, and especially criticised one of the instructions that the jury might consider, in assessing the amount of damages, whether or no the alleged libelous charges were maliciously made. This instruction should be construed with the others given to the jury. In this light, the instructions might all have been applicable. Among other things, the court instructed the jury as follows: "(1) Libel is defined by our statute, so far as applicable to this case, as the malicious defamation of a person made public by any printing or writing tending to provoke him to wrath, or expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse. (2) Both of the articles complained of by the plaintiff in his petition, copies of which articles are attached to said petition, are libelous in themselves, and unless the defendant proves them to be true, by a preponderance of the evidence, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover such damages as he has sustained by the publication of said articles. (3) The defendant, as already stated, pleads as a defense that the matters published by him and complained of by the plaintiff are true, and it devolves upon him to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, the truth of said matter; and if he has succeeded in establishing the truth of the matter charged as defamatory in the plaintiff's petition, by a preponderance of the testimony, then your verdict must be for the defendant. (4) And this is true, no matter what the motives of the defendant may have been in the publication thereof. It is no concern of yours. It is no concern of the plaintiff, or of anybody else, what the defendant's motives in such publication may have been. It is a complete defense to this action, if he has succeeded in establishing the truth of the matters published by him concerning the plaintiff. (5) Although the plaintiff alleges in his petition that he has, on account of the publications complained of, sustained a damage of one thousand dollars on account of each of said publications, it is not necessary for him to prove any specific damage; for the law presumes the reputation of the plaintiff to be good, as also it presumes that his official duties as a public officer were honestly performed, and his professional obligations properly discharged, and an article which tends to hold him up to the public view as an unskilled lawyer and an incompetent officer is libelous per se, ('per se' meaning 'of itself,') and entitles the plaintiff to damages, unless the defendant establishes the truth of said publication by a preponderance of the evidence." These instructions were clearly applicable under the statement made by the plaintiff in his brief, and intelligently presented the issues to the jury under the plea of justification. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

ACTION ON NOTE—PLEADING—JURY TRIAL.

In an action upon a promissory note against the makers and the payee, who is also an indorser, and against M., a subsequent holder and indorser, in which action the plaintiff sets forth in his petition among other things that he is the owner, holder, and the indorsee from M. of the promissory note, and he commences his action in the county in which M. resides, and gets service of summons upon him in that county, and upon the other defendants in other counties in which they reside, and the other defendants claim that the plaintiff in the action is not the owner of the note, but that M. is, and that the note was indorsed by M. to the plaintiff merely for the purpose that the plaintiff might commence the action in the county in which M. resides, held, that the question as to whether the plaintiff is the owner of the note or not can be raised only by an answer, and not by a motion, and that any one of the parties has the right to have such question tried by a jury.

Error from district court, Cloud county; E. HUTCHINSON, Judge.

Kennett & Peck, for plaintiff in error. A. H. Ellis, E. S. Ellis, and F. T. Burnham, for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action brought in the district court of Cloud county by Edward Linney, as the owner, holder, and indorsee of a promissory note for $1,250, against A. A. Thompson, and 18 others, as the makers, and C. W. Culp, as the payee and indorser, and C. W. McDonald, as a prior holder and an indorser. Service of summons was obtained upon McDonald in Cloud county, and upon the other defendants in Mitchell and Jewell counties. The defendant Culp demurred to the plaintiff's petition, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which demurrer was overruled, and then he filed an answer. The other defendants, except McDonald, filed a motion to set aside the summons, and the service of the same upon them, and to dismiss the plaintiff's action for the following reasons: "(1) That none of these defendants, nor any of the real defendants in this action, reside in the county of Cloud, nor were any of these defendants summoned in this action in said county of Cloud. (2) Because the alleged note sued on in this action is the property and is owned by the defendant C. W. McDonald, and the plaintiff in this action has no right, title, or interest therein. (3) Because the defendant C. W. McDonald is not a real party to this action; is not liable to the plaintiff upon the pretended indorsement of the note sued on; and because said defendant C. W. Culp does not reside in the county of Cloud, and was not summoned in this action within said county. (4) Because this action is not prosecuted in the name of the real plaintiff, party in interest, but is only prosecuted in the name of the plaintiff in furtherance of a conspiracy between plaintiff and the defendant C. W. McDonald, whereby it is agreed between said parties that the defendant McDonald should, without consideration, deliver the note sued on in this action to the plaintiff, and that plaintiff should bring this action in Cloud county against the said McDonald, said Culp, and these defendants solely for the purpose of enabling said McDonald to, in effect, bring suit in this action against these defendants, who neither reside nor can be summoned in Cloud county." The plaintiff then moved to dismiss the above motion, and for judgment upon his petition as upon default, all the defendants except Culp being in fact in default for want of an answer. The plaintiff's motion was overruled, and the defendants' motion was then heard over the objections and exceptions of the plaintiff, he all the time claiming that the defendants had made a general appearance in the action, Culp actually, and the other defendants by their motion, and that the questions sought to be raised by the motion could not be tried in any manner except upon a trial upon the merits of the action. The motion was to be heard, and we suppose was heard, upon affidavits and other evidence, and was sustained by the court, and the plaintiff's action as to these defendants was dismissed, and judgment was then rendered against him, and in their favor, for costs. The plaintiff then moved to set aside and vacate the aforesaid order, decision, and judgment for various reasons, which motion the court overruled; and the plaintiff then, as plaintiff in error, brought the case to this court for review.

It would seem that the main and principal question presented in the court below was whether the plaintiff, Linney, was the real owner and holder of the promissory note sued on. If he was not, then of course he could not maintain the action in

Cloud county, nor in any other county; but, if he was such owner and holder, then he had the right to maintain his action just as he brought it, in the county in which he brought it, and upon the service of summons which was actually made in the case. The defendants claim that Linney was not the owner of the note, and that McDonald was, and that they conspired together to bring the action just as it was brought for the purpose that it might be litigated in Cloud county, and they further claim that this was an abuse of judicial process authorizing the decision of the court below, and they cite such cases as Van Horn v. Manufacturing Co., 37 Kan. 523, 15 Pac. Rep. 562, as authority. On the other hand, the plaintiff claims that the question as to whether he was the owner of the note or not was one going to the merits of the action; that it could not be determined except at a trial upon the merits, and upon such evidence only as might properly be introduced upon a trial of the case upon its merits, and could be determined only by a jury, unless both parties should choose to waive a jury; and he cites among others the case of Drea v. Carrington, 32 Ohio St. 595, as authority therefor. Several Kansas cases are also cited by the parties as follows: Hendrix v. Fuller, 7 Kan. 331; Brenner v. Egly, 23 Kan. 123; Rullman v. Hulise, 32 Kan. 598, 5 Pac. Rep. 176; on rehearing, 33 Kan. 670, 7 Pac. Rep. 210; Van Horn v. Manufacturing Co., 37 Kan. 523, 15 Pac. Rep. 562. We do not think that any one of the Kansas cases is precisely in point. In none of the Kansas cases, except the Brenner Case, was the question to be heard and decided a vital question involved in the merits of the case, as in the present case, and the Brenner Case was tried upon its merits. In the Van Horn Case, the question was whether one of the defendants had been by fraud and deceit inveigled into a jurisdiction, other than the one in which he resided, for the purpose of suing him in the foreign jurisdiction. In the Rullman Case, the question was whether an attachment should be dissolved or not. See particularly this case on rehearing. In the case of Hendrix v. Fuller, all the defendants were non-residents of the county where the action was brought, but service of summons was accepted by counsel for one of the defendants before the other defendant was served with summons; while in the present case the voluntary appearance of Culp was not made, and his demurrer and answer were not filed, until after the service of the summons upon the other defendants was made. We think, however, that the case of Drea v. Carrington, 32 Ohio St. 595, is applicable to this case, and we are inclined to follow it. That case was decided under statutes almost precisely identical with the statutes of this state applicable in such cases. Section 55, art. 5, and section 60, art. 6, of the Civil Code, read as follows: "Sec. 55. Every other action must be brought in the county in which the defendant, or some one of the defendants, reside or may be summoned." "Sec. 60. Where the action is rightfully brought in any county, according to the provisions of article five, a summons shall be issued to any other county against any one or more of the defendants, at the plaintiff's request."

In order that the district court of Cloud county should obtain jurisdiction by summons over the parties residing in Jewell and Mitchell counties, it was necessary, under the foregoing sections of the statutes, that the present case should have been "rightly brought" in Cloud county as against McDonald, and whether it was "rightly brought" in that county or not, as against any one of the defendants, depended solely upon the question whether Linney was the owner of the note sued on or not. If he was the owner of the note, then the suit was rightly brought in Cloud county; but, if he was not the owner of the note, then he could not have rightly brought an action on the note in any county. Under the allegations of the plaintiff's petition, he was the owner of the note. Therefore, the question whether the action was rightly brought in Cloud county or not depended solely upon the truth of the allegations of the plaintiff's petition; and in all such cases the supreme court of Ohio decides that the question must be raised by an answer, and not by a motion, and if the action is one for the recovery of money only, as this action is, then either party has a right to have the question tried by a jury. See, also, our Civil Code, § 266. The question whether the plaintiff was the owner of the note sued on or not is not only a question which should not be heard upon a motion merely, upon the hearing of which affidavits may be used, but it could hardly be heard and determined upon a pure plea in abatement. A decision sustaining a plea in abatement usually does nothing more than to abate the action, leaving all the questions involved in the merits of the action open to be subsequently litigated and determined in some other form, or at some other time, or in some other court or jurisdiction. But a decision of the present question in favor of the defendants would be a determination against the plaintiff upon the merits of his action. It would be a determination that he had no cause of action to be litigated or enforced against any person, at any time, in any form, or in any court or jurisdiction. It would be a decision that the allegations of his petition setting forth his cause of action were not true; and, if the allegations of his petition setting forth his cause of action were not true, he could not go to Jewell county, or to Mitchell county, or anywhere else, and maintain an action upon the note against the defendant, or against any one else. The judgment of the court below will be reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings. All the justices concurring.

OBJECTIONS TO INSTRUCTIONS—FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

1. A general objection to the charge of the court, without specifying wherein it is objectionable, is unavailing to the plaintiff in error, and will not be examined.

2. The testimony in the case examined, and held to be sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment that were given.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Cherokee county; GEORGE CHANDLER, Judge.

Cowley & Wiswell, for plaintiff in error. Ritter & Skidmore, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This was replevin for a small stock of groceries and drugs. The goods were formerly owned by J. S. Patton, who was largely indebted to several creditors, and, while so indebted, transferred the goods to O. L. Young. The judgment creditors of Patton sued out executions, and placed them in the hands of S. I. Youngman, a constable, who seized the stock of goods as the property of Patton. Young then prosecuted this action for the recovery of the stock, but the verdict is that he was not the owner of the property, and that the defendant did not wrongfully detain the same from his possession.

Plaintiff complains that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, but from an examination of a large volume of testimony taken with reference to the good faith of the transfer, we cannot say that the conclusion reached by the jury is not correct. After the sale, the goods remained in Patton's house, who still remained in control, claiming to be acting as the clerk of the plaintiff at a salary of $25 per month. The plaintiff devoted very little time or attention to the business, and, taking the testimony of the plaintiff, the statements of the parties, with respect to what had been paid for the goods, were not harmonious or satisfactory. The case presented is one of conflicting testimony, and, in that state of the testimony, we cannot disturb the verdict or judgment. There is a general complaint as to the charge of the court, but no specific objection is pointed out, and we will not undertake to search for errors that are not specifically assigned and pointed out. Wheeler v. Joy, 15 Kan. 389. Judgment affirmed. All the justices concurring.

EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE.

1. In the trial of a case, upon appeal from an award of damages in condemnation proceedings, the court permitted the plaintiff, as a witness, to answer the question, "How much less was the farm worth immediately after the railroad went through, per acre, than it was before?" Held, that it was error, as it involved substantially the subject-matter the jury were called upon to determine. JOHNSTON, J., dissenting.

2. Where a witness is asked, upon cross-examination, a question as to his knowledge of values, and volunteers the following statement: "A neighbor of mine right north of me has one hundred and twenty acres, and was offered six thousand dollars,"—and the court refused the request of the defendant to withdraw such statement from the jury, held error.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Sedgwick county; T. B. WALL, Judge.

George R. Peck, A. A. Hurd, and Robert Dunlap, for plaintiff in error. Sluss & Stanley, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. George Muller owns the N. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 28, township 29 S., range 2, in Sedgwick county. The plaintiff in error condemned a right of way for a railroad over said land, and 5 12-100 acres were taken, for which the commissioners allowed \$439.40. The defendant in error appealed from this award to the district court, and a jury assessed his damages at \$800, and a judgment was rendered accordingly. The railroad company excepted and brings the case here.

1. The first error alleged is in the admission of evidence. The plaintiff was asked how much less the land was worth immediately after the railroad went through, per acre, than it was before. An objection to this question, on the ground that it called for a conclusion, was overruled, and the witness was permitted to answer: "Five dollars less an acre." This, with similar evidence, it is claimed, is clearly prejudicial, because it is a statement of the judgment and conclusion which the jury should reach and not the witness; that it was improper to permit the witness to usurp the province of the jury and give his own opinions and conclusions. In the case of Railroad Co. v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 675, 17 Pac. Rep. 322, the following question and answer were held to be erroneous: "Question. How much less, in your opinion, is this farm worth after the railroad company had established its track through it, irrespective of any benefits from any improvement proposed by the railroad company to be derived from said track, taking into consideration all incidental loss, inconveniences, and damages, present and prospective, which may reasonably be expected or shown to exist from the maintaining of said railroad track, to be continued permanently? Answer. About $2,100." The court said, with reference to this evidence: "The court below certainly should not have permitted this evidence to be introduced. It involved substantially everything that the jury were called upon to determine, and left nothing for the jury to decide. It invaded the province of the jury. It really amounted to letting the witness himself determine by his own opinion what the plaintiff's damages were, and the amount which the plaintiff should recover in the action. It had no reference particularly to the market value of the land, either before or after the right of way was taken; nor any reference to any specific fact which might tend to show what such market value was, or to increase or diminish the same; but it involved all these things, and a great deal more. Upon the questions involved in this case we would refer generally to the following authorities: 3 Suth. Dam. c. 16; Stock-Yard Co. v. Moore, 5 Amer. & Eng. R. Cas. 352, note, and cases there cited; McReynolds v. Railway Co., 14 Amer. & Eng. R. Cas. 175, note, and cases there cited; Neilson v. Railway Co., Id. 244, note, 17 N. W. Rep. 310, and cases there cited; Railroad Co. v. Foreman, 20 Amer. & Eng. R. Cas. 225, note, and cases there cited." We can see no very great distinction between the two questions. Each calls for the opinion and conclusion of the witness, and, upon the authority of the case supra, it was error to permit the question and answer. Railroad Co. v. Hall, 14 S. W. Rep. 259; Elliott, Roads & S. 198; Mills, Em. Dom. § 165; Railway Co. v. Nickless, 71 Ind. 271; Dalzell v. Davenport, 12 Iowa, 437; Hosher v. Railroad Co., 60 Mo. 329; Tingley v. Providence, 8 R. I. 493; Railroad Co. v. McKinley, 64 Ill. 338; Railroad Co. v. Burkett, 42 Ala. 83; Railroad Co. v. Ball, 5 Ohio St. 568; City of Omaha v. Kramer, 25 Neb. 489, 41 N. W. Rep. 295.

2. In the cross-examination of the plaintiff, the question was asked as to what sales had been made in the neighborhood, upon which he based his judgment as to values, and, without being asked, he volunteered this statement: "A neighbor of mine right north of me has one hundred and twenty acres, and was offered six thousand dollars." The defendant in error moved that this statement of the witness be stricken out. The request was denied, and a proper exception made. This, we think, was error, and the court should have withdrawn the statement from the jury. The plaintiff in error complains of certain instructions given and refused, but we see nothing prejudicial in these. While the thirteenth instruction, in relation to damages for the accidental setting out of fires, or the accidental killing of stock, may not have been applicable and supported by the evidence, the defendant below was not prejudiced thereby, as the jury allowed nothing for such injuries. For the reason indicated, as to the admission of evidence, we recommend a reversal of the judgment.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered.

HORTON, C. J., and VALENTINE, J., concur.

JOHNSTON, J. I agree that there must be a reversal, but I base my conclusion solely on the second ground of error stated in the commissioner's opinion.

NAILL et al. v. KANSAS FARMERS' FIRE INS. CO.

EXECUTION—LIEN—GENERAL AND SPECIAL ASSETS.

1. Where a general judgment is rendered against a mutual fire insurance company and its property generally, but the insurance company was doing two kinds of business, a first-class and a second-class, and the policy upon which the judgment was rendered belonged to the second-class business only, and the company at the time had no second-class assets, the judgment and a general execution issued thereon and following the judgment are valid, and may be enforced as to any property belonging to the insurance company.

2. While a void execution or an execution issued upon a void judgment may be questioned in any court or anywhere, yet a valid execution following a valid judgment, though irregular, or issued upon an irregular judgment, cannot be questioned except in the court from which it was issued.

Stambaugh, Hurd & Dewey, for the Kansas Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. J. N. Davis and F. A. Waddle, for D. W. Naill and Lydia A. Amick.

VALENTINE, J. In the present controversy two petitions in error are presented to us for our consideration, one from Franklin county, in which "the Kansas Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Abilene, Kansas," is the plaintiff in error, and Lydia A. Amick is the defendant in error; and the other from Dickinson county, in which D. W. Naill and Lydia A. Amick are the plaintiffs in error, and "the Kansas Farmers' Fire Insurance Company," is the defendant in error. The facts with respect to this controversy, stated briefly, are substantially as follows: On March 3, 1882, the above-mentioned insurance company was organized as a corporation, a mutual fire insurance company, under the name of "The Kansas Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Abilene." On November 7, 1883, this company issued a fire insurance policy to Lydia A. Amick on property situated in Franklin county, and belonging to the second class, as defined by section 1, c. 111, Laws 1875. On December 27, 1883, a fire occurred which destroyed the insured property. On January 25, 1884, the insurance company passed a resolution to reinsure all second-class business, if satisfactory terms could be made, and to quit the second-class business. But of course they never reinsured Mrs. Amick's property, for it had already been destroyed by fire. On December 23, 1884, Mrs. Amick commenced an action in the district court of Franklin county on said insurance policy against the insurance company to recover for her loss occasioned by the aforesaid fire. Early in 1885 the insurance company, under chapter 130 of the Laws of 1885, created a guaranty fund of $50,000. On October 7, 1885, a general judgment was rendered in the aforesaid action in Franklin county in favor of Mrs. Amick, and against the insurance company, for $1,326, and costs, and no reference was made in such judgment, or in any of the proceedings either to a first-class or to a second-class business. On January 14, 1886, the insurance company changed its name to "The Kansas Farmers' Fire Insurance Company." On July 9, 1887, upon proper proceedings previously instituted by the insurance company in the supreme court, such court affirmed the aforesaid judgment of Mrs. Amick against the insurance company. Insurance Co. v. Amick, 37 Kan. 73, 14 Pac. Rep. 454. On July 27, 1887, an execution was issued from the Franklin county district court upon such judgment, and was returned not satisfied. On March 21, 1888, proceedings were instituted by Mrs. Amick in the district court of Franklin county on motion in aid of execution, and for the appointment of a receiver. See Civil Code, § 254, subd. 4. On April 2, 1888, this motion was heard, and on the hearing thereof it was shown that the insurance company had no assets belonging to its second-class business; but what had become of such assets has not been shown. It seems to be admitted that it had assets belonging to its first-class business. On August 13, 1888, said motion was decided, and D. W. Naill, the sheriff of Dickinson county, was appointed receiver, and on September 20, 1888, the insurance company, for the purpose of having the aforesaid order of the district court of Franklin county appointing such receiver reversed, brought the case to this court on petition in error; and that is the first petition in error above mentioned. On November 20, 1888, the company filed a supersedeas bond, but that bond provided merely that the obligors should pay all the damages that Mrs. Amick might sustain by reason of the proceedings in error from the order of the district court appointing the receiver, provided such order should be affirmed in whole or in part. On May 22, 1889, a general execution in favor of Mrs. Amick, and against the property generally of the insurance company, was issued from the Franklin county district court to D. W. Naill, the sheriff of Dickinson county. The insurance company was described in the execution as "the Kansas Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, alias the Kansas Farmers' Fire Insurance Company." The sheriff was about to levy upon property of the company when on June 25, 1889, proceedings were commenced by the insurance company in the Dickinson county district court against the sheriff and Mrs. Amick to perpetually enjoin them from levying that execution, or any other execution issued upon the aforesaid judgment, upon any property of the insurance company belonging to its first-class business, or upon its guaranty fund. A temporary injunction was granted at the time by the district judge, and a proper undertaking was given by the insurance company. On July 24, 1889, Mrs. Amick filed an answer setting up the Franklin county judgment and her interests and rights thereunder. On July 27, 1889, the insurance company replied by filing a general denial. On April 4, 1890, Mrs. Amick filed a motion to vacate the aforesaid temporary injunction, and the motion was heard on the same day. On June 10, 1890, a trial was had upon the merits of the action before the court, without a jury, and a perpetual injunction was granted restraining and enjoining the defendants in that action, Naill and Mrs. Amick, from interfering with any of the assets or property of the insurance company, except such as pertained exclusively to its second-class business; and also from interfering with the insurance company's guaranty fund. It was shown at the trial that the insurance company had no assets or property belonging to its second-class business, but what it had done with the same was not then or at any other time shown. The defendants in that action then filed a motion for a new trial upon various grounds, which motion was overruled; and on September 2, 1890, they brought the case to this court for review on petition in error; and this is the second petition in error above mentioned.

We think the order of the district court of Franklin county, appointing the receiver, must be affirmed, and the judgment of the district court of Dickinson county granting the perpetual injunction must be reversed. The judgment sought to be enforced by Mrs. Amick was a general judgment in her favor, and against the insurance company and its property generally, and the execution followed the judgment. The judgment reads as follows: "It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that the said plaintiff, Lydia A. Amick, have and recover of and from the said The Kansas Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, defendant, the sum of thirteen hundred and twenty-six dollars, so as aforesaid found to be due from the said defendant to the said plaintiff, together with the costs of this action taxed at $104.30, and that execution issue." If this judgment should be applied only to the second-class assets or property of the insurance company, it should have been so rendered; but it was not so rendered, and it must now be held to be valid and binding and conclusive, precisely as it was rendered. It is now nearly seven years since the fire occurred. It is nearly six years since the action to recover for the loss was commenced. The action was contested, but a general judgment was nevertheless rendered in favor of Mrs. Amick and against the insurance company, and it is now more than five years since such judgment was rendered, and certainly the validity or regularity of the judgment cannot now be questioned; neither can the execution issued upon the judgment and following the judgment be questioned.

A void execution or an execution issued upon a void judgment, may be questioned in any court, or anywhere; but a valid execution following a valid judgment cannot be questioned anywhere, except as follows: If the execution were valid, but irregular, or issued upon an irregular judgment, it might be questioned in the court from which it was issued; but it could not properly be questioned anywhere else. The order of the district court of Franklin county will be affirmed, and the judgment of the district court of Dickinson county will be reversed. All the justices concurring.

MAYER V. WATERS.

FIXTURES—BUILDINGS ON GOVERNMENT RESERVATION—USE AND OCCUPATION.

1. Buildings erected on a military reservation by a post trader, under authority from the war department, for the purposes of trade, do not become a part of the realty, and the owner, when he ceases to be post trader, may remove and dispose of the same as his own property.

2. The military authorities are invested with power to prescribe rules and regulations for the erection, maintenance, and removal of buildings erected by a post trader on a reservation, but such rules and regulations when made are subject to waiver and modification.

3. A formal regulation was made that as owner could not sublet such buildings to another without permission of the military authorities, and one who was an owner of buildings that had been erected by a post trader on a military reservation leased the same to a trader for a stipulated rental, without express permission, but with the knowledge and acquiescence of the military authorities, and the trader occupied the same and paid rent to the owner for about four years, when an order was made by the commanding officer that the owner should remove the buildings within a reasonable time. The order was not enforced, but the trader, with the knowledge of the officers, was permitted to use the building as before. On account of this order, the trader declined to pay rent to the owner, although he continued in the uninterrupted possession of the buildings, with full knowledge that the owner demanded the payment of rent. Held, that the action of the officers did not relieve the trader from liability to the owner for the use and occupation of the buildings.

J. R. McClure, for Mayer. J. V. Humphreys, for Waters.

JOHNSTON, J. Charles E. Mayer brought this action against Moses Waters to recover $1,770, alleged to be due for the use and occupation of certain buildings owned by the plaintiff and situate on the Ft. Riley Military Reservation, consisting of a store building, a club-house, and a residence. On November 25, 1879, Moses Waters, who was then, and since then has been, the duly-appointed post trader at the Ft. Riley Military Reservation, entered into a written lease with Charles E. Mayer, the owner of the buildings, for a term of one year from April 1, 1880, at a rental of $30 per month, payable in quarterly installments. Waters took possession under this agreement, and, although no written lease was afterwards executed, he continued to occupy and use the buildings as post trader until the commencement of this action, and paid rent for the same until February 1, 1883. After that time, he declined to make any further payment, claiming that certain military orders and proceedings which had been had, relieved him of liability to Mayer for the use of his buildings. In June, 1883, he applied to the post council of administration at Ft. Riley for the appointment of a board of officers to appraise the value of the buildings occupied and used by him, stating that they were in need of repairs, and that unless he could purchase them at a fair price he must request that the owner be directed to remove them, so that he could erect in their places such buildings as his business required. The application was forwarded by the post commander to the head-quarters of the department of the Missouri, and Gen. Pope, who was in command, returned the same, with an indorsement directing the commanding officer at Ft. Riley to cause the owner of the buildings to remove them from the reservation within a reasonable time, and that he could not be allowed to rent them. Moses Waters was informed by the post commander of this decision, and that Mayer would have a reasonable time to remove the buildings, but that Waters would be allowed to occupy the same until further orders. Mayer had no notice of this application or of the proceedings thereon until after the same had been taken, nor until September 20, 1883. The case was submitted to the court, without a jury, on oral and documentary evidence, and the court found that Mayer was entitled to recover rent for the use of his premises from February 1, 1883, to September 20, 1883, (when he received notice of the military proceedings aforesaid,) at the rate of $30 per month, but that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for the use of the premises after receiving notice of the proceedings had by the military authorities. Each of the parties excepted to the findings and judgment of the court, and both are here alleging error.

It is insisted on behalf of Waters that, under an act of congress and certain military regulations, Mayer was without authority over the buildings, or to collect rent for the same, and, as he could not lawfully collect rent, Waters was not legally liable for their use and occupation. Congress has enacted "that every military post may have one trader, to be appointed by the secretary of war, on the recommendation of the council of administration, approved by the commanding officer, who shall be subject in all respects to the rules and regulations for the government of the army." 19 U. S. St. at Large, 100. Among the rules and regulations for the government of the army are found the following: "Post traders will actually carry on the business themselves, and will habitually reside at the station to which they are appointed. They will not farm out, sublet, transfer, sell, or assign their business to others." "Post traders will be permitted to erect buildings for the purpose of carrying on their business upon such part of the military reservation or post where they are assigned as the commanding officer may direct. Such buildings will be in convenient reach of the garrison." "When a trader is removed from his post, he has a right to remove and dispose of the material of the buildings erected by him as his own property. He cannot lease or sell his buildings to another post trader without the permission of the military authorities; but such permission would have the same force as a license to a new post trader to erect such a building at that spot." It is urged that Mayer had leased the buildings when he was not a post trader, and also without license from the military authorities; and, this being in violation of the regulations, he had no right to collect rent from Waters or any one else. It is true that Mayer was not a post trader when the original lease was executed, nor has he held that position since that time, and it is also true that he never received from the military authorities express permission to rent the buildings. It appears that the buildings were originally erected by Robert Wilson, a post trader at Ft. Riley, under due license from the war department. He sold them to Henry F. Mayer, who was also post trader at the same place, and Henry F. Mayer, in turn, sold them to his son, the plaintiff, in 1876; but the plaintiff was not then, and never has been, a post trader at Ft. Riley, although he was the partner of one McGonegal, who was the post trader for the years 1871 and 1872. We think that Waters was liable to the plaintiff for the use and occupation of the buildings, both before and after the military proceedings hereinbefore referred to. This is not a controversy between the United States and the plaintiff, and no step taken has divested the plaintiff of the ownership of the buildings occupied and used by Waters.

The military authorities have full power to regulate the erection, maintenance, and removal of buildings used for carrying on the business of a post trader, and to prohibit the assignment and subletting of the business to another; but the strict observance of the rules may be waived by the government, and the failure of the owner of the buildings to conform to these rules and regulations does not change the ownership of the buildings, or relieve a party who has taken possession of the same, under a lease from the owner, from paying for their use. It does not appear that direct permission was given for the lease or transfer of the buildings from the original owner to the several parties through whose hands they passed; but it does appear that the transfers were made with the knowledge and acquiescence of the military authorities, and it is conceded that the plaintiff never knew there was any objection to his renting these buildings until he received notice of the proceedings that were taken in reference to the removal of the same. These proceedings were had at the instance of Waters, and without any notice to the plaintiff. The officers of the department are not vested with power to appropriate such property for the use of the government, and the proceedings taken did not change the relation existing between Mayer and Waters. The buildings were personal property when they were erected, and remained such until this action was begun. It has been held by the attorney general of the United States that "buildings erected by post traders on a military reserve, in conformity to this order, are erected for the mutual benefit of the government and the trader, and are not to be regarded as buildings would be if erected by trespassers, or even by tenants under leases in which no provision is made therefor. They are erected under a license from the government, and for the mutual benefit of both parties. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that, by the proper construction of the license, these buildings were not intended to become a part of the realty after their erection, but were to continue the property of the traders, and therefore, when a trader is removed from his post, I have no doubt that he has a right to remove the building from the place where it was erected, and, when removed, he can dispose of the materials as his own property." 14 Op. Attys. Gen. 125. It was held in the same opinion that such license did not authorize a lease or conveyance of the buildings to others for their occupation and use, without the permission of the military authorities; that the right was confined solely to the removing of the buildings from the premises.

The officers had full authority to order the removal of the buildings, and to enforce such order; but so long as they permitted the buildings to remain upon the reservation, they were without authority to relieve the trader from paying for their use and occupation. The order made was that Mayer should remove the buildings from the reservation within a reasonable time; but, instead of enforcing the regulation or the order, the officers permitted the buildings to remain until the commencement of this action. The buildings have been used continuously for the business of the post trader, and it does not appear that there was any necessity for their vacation, or that the trader was using them for any improper purpose. This continued use, with full knowledge of the ownership and rights of the plaintiff, must be regarded as a waiver of the regulation, and a sufficient permission for the leasing of the buildings to Waters. This seems to have been the view of the war department, as the adjutant general, in response to a letter addressed to him with reference to the occupancy of these buildings, said: "If the trader occupies buildings belonging to you, without being willing to purchase them, or pay rent to you as you demand, you should seek a remedy in the civil courts." As late as January 24, 1888, the commanding officer at Ft. Riley, in response to an application for a military order to compel the post trader to pay for the use of the buildings, stated: "It is not understood why Mr. Mayer does not have recourse to process of civil law to adjust his rights in this case. He should be informed that there is a special reason for this, in view of the control of the civil authorities on the reservation at Fort Riley." In this case, Waters first entered into a written lease for the property, and continued to pay rent thereon to plaintiff for about four years, thereby recognizing the title and ownership of plaintiff, and that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between them. He has remained in undisturbed possession of the buildings ever since, with full knowledge that compensation for their use was demanded by plaintiff, and he cannot now be permitted to deny the title of the landlord, or repudiate his implied liability for the use and occupation of the buildings. The fact that he has latterly refused to pay rent for the use of Mayer's property will not terminate his relation as tenant, or relieve him from liability for the use and occupation of the property. Thompson v. Sanborn, 52 Mich. 141, 17 N. W. Rep. 730; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. c. 13, § 3.

We are asked to render such judgment in the case as the court below should have rendered in case of a reversal; but as the case was submitted upon testimony which is not harmonious, and as the condition of the buildings and the amount of the repairs that have been expended have not been stated or agreed upon, we are unable to direct the judgment that should be entered. The judgment of the court below will therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. All the justices concurring.

MERRILL v. HUTCHINSON.

EFFECT OF QUITCLAIM DEED.

A quitclaim deed, duly recorded, taken by the purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, will prevail over a prior unrecorded deed, where the subsequent purchaser had no notice of the former deed, and could not have discovered its existence by an investigation of the public records, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence in making proper examinations and inquiries.

Error from district court, Reno county; L. HOUK, Judge.

JOHNSTON, J. George Merrill brought this action in the district court of Reno county to recover two lots situate in the city of Hutchinson. Henry King was the fee-simple owner of the lots for several years prior to May 10, 1877, at which time he executed a conveyance of the same to the plaintiff, but the deed was not recorded until more than 10 years had elapsed. Merrill now claims title and right of recovery under this conveyance. Hutchinson, the defendant, claims title through certain tax proceedings and a conveyance made to him by Henry King and wife on July 16, 1885. It appears that King paid the taxes on the lots until 1877, and, not being paid for that year, the lots were sold for taxes, and were bid in by the county. No taxes thereon were afterwards paid by any one until January, 1883, when the tax certificate was assigned to L. A. Bigger, and a tax-deed was executed to him on January 16, 1884, which was recorded on the same day. Bigger paid taxes thereon up to 1885, and about that time he sold the property to Isaac A. Kitzmiller, but the deed was not executed until March 17, 1886, and it was recorded on March 24, 1886. On April 12, 1886, Kitzmiller and wife conveyed the lots to William E. Hutchinson, and on July 16, 1885, Henry King and wife executed a quitclaim deed, purporting to convey the property to Hutchinson, which instrument was recorded on July 17, 1885. The plaintiff contends that the tax proceedings were irregular in two respects, and this is not denied by the defendant; and hence, we may assume that the tax proceedings alone will not sustain the defendant's claim of title. It is said by the defendant that the court below held against the validity of the tax proceedings; but it also held that the quitclaim deed of Hutchinson was obtained from King after making diligent inquiry to ascertain the condition of the title, and without notice of the unrecorded deed of plaintiff, and therefore adjudged the quitclaim deed to be superior to the prior unrecorded deed of plaintiff. This is the only question in the case.

It appears that, when King conveyed the lots to Hutchinson, he had forgotten the previous conveyance to Merrill, and he supposed that he still held the original title to the lots, and the complete title except as it was affected by the tax-title which had been taken and which had then passed to Hutchinson. Before purchasing the lots from King, Hutchinson searched the records, and in good faith made diligent inquiry and examination as to the condition of the title, and found nothing indicating the prior conveyance, or that Merrill had or claimed any interest in the property. Kitzmiller had taken possession of the lots, and made permanent improvements thereon, before the purchase of the same by Hutchinson. None of the parties connected with the tax proceedings, or who paid the taxes, or who took possession and made improvements on the property, knew anything of the prior deed, and Merrill did not disclose the fact until long after the tax-deed and subsequent conveyance had been placed on record, nor for a long time after the permanent improvements had been made. The plaintiff urges that the defendant cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser, and cites Johnson v. Williams, 37 Kan. 179, 14 Pac. Rep. 537. It was there held that, where the grantor gives only a quitclaim deed, the purchaser is put upon inquiry; but it was not decided that the mere taking of such a deed deprived him from being considered a bona fide purchaser under all circumstances. It was said that "a person who holds real estate by virtue of a quitclaim deed only from his immediate grantor, whether he is a purchaser or not, is not a bona fide purchaser with respect to outstanding and adverse equities and interests shown by the records, or which are discoverable by the exercise of reasonable diligence in making proper examinations and inquiries." In deciding the case, however, it was remarked that "it may be that, with reference to some equities or interests in real estate, the purchaser who holds only under a quitclaim deed may be deemed to be a bona fide purchaser; for equities and interests in real estate may sometimes be latent, hidden, secret, and concealed, and not only unknown to the purchaser, but undiscoverable by the exercise of any ordinary or reasonable degree of diligence. It is possible also that a purchaser taking a quitclaim deed may, under the registry laws, be considered a bona fide purchaser with reference to a prior unrecorded deed with respect to which he has no notice, nor any reasonable means of obtaining notice." The facts of the present case bring it within the suggestion made in the cited case, and we think the rule suggested should be adopted for the determination of this controversy. See authorities cited in Johnson v. Williams, supra. The form of the deed alone did not conclude Hutchinson, nor prevent him from becoming a purchaser in good faith. It simply operated as a warning to him, and put him upon inquiry. It was his duty, then, to look further, and ascertain why the deed was made without covenants of warranty; and he took it loaded with such outstanding equities or interests as he might have discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence. As we have seen, he examined the records, inquired of those in possession, and who paid taxes thereon, and of every one who had any apparent interest in the property, and could not learn from any of them that

Merrill had any claim upon the property; and King, the owner of the record title, to whom Hutchinson applied for a deed, had forgotten the conveyance to Merrill, so that it could not be learned from that source. The reason why King gave, and Hutchinson took, a deed without covenants of warranty was the outstanding tax-title, under which parties had taken possession and made improvements; and these circumstances justify the making of a quitclaim deed, and would naturally set at rest any doubts which might arise in the mind of Hutchinson on account of the form of the deed. He paid a fair consideration for the lots, and, although his conduct has been criticised, we find nothing in it to impeach his good faith. It may be remarked that the deed from King purported to convey the property, and did not in terms limit the conveyance to the mere interests of the grantors, nor did it contain any express restriction upon an absolute conveyance. King evidently intended to convey a complete title to the property, except that which had been acquired through tax proceedings, and Hutchinson supposed, and had a right to suppose, that having acquired the rights of the tax-title purchaser, and a conveyance from King, he was vested with a complete and perfect title. The interest of Merrill was so concealed as to be undiscoversable by any reasonable search, and his conduct in the premises does not appeal strongly to the equitable consideration of the court. He purchased the property when it was of little value, and withheld the deed from record for about 10 years. During this time he paid no taxes and made no improvements thereon, and did nothing to disclose his ownership. With an unrecorded deed in his pocket, he stood by while others who had obtained deeds placed them on record, erected buildings and other improvements on the lots, and paid accumulated taxes thereon, never intimating that he held an interest in the property. After the value of the property had been greatly enhanced by the improvements made, and by the growth and general prosperity of the city, he uncovers a deed and asserts title. The act relating to conveyances provides for the recording of all instruments conveying real estate, or whereby any real estate may be affected; and that, from the time of filing the same with the register of deeds, they shall impart notice to all persons of the contents of the instruments; and that all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees shall be deemed to purchase with notice. It then provides that "no such instrument in writing shall be valid except between the parties thereto, and such as have actual notice thereof, until the same shall be deposited with the register of deeds for record." Gen. St. 1889, pars. 1128-1130. The duty of placing the deed on record was enjoined by the statute, and required by public policy; but the plaintiff ignored both, and it is now too late for him to assert his title against one who purchased in good faith and without notice of the outstanding interest. Even a purchaser at sheriff's sale, other than a judgment creditor, who has parted with value on the strength of the record, and that there is no outstanding equities or titles which are discoverable by ordinary diligence, is entitled to the protection of the recording act. As to him, it has been said: "If the record shows the title clear in a party, and the purchaser has no notice of any outstanding equities or titles, he may, as a rule, safely purchase from such party, and the holder of the unrecorded title is estopped to set up his title as against one who purchasing has parted with value on the strength of the record; and this is true, whether the purchaser obtains title from the apparent owner by voluntary conveyance, or purchase at a sheriff's sale." Lee v. Birmingham, 30 Kan. 312, 1 Pac. Rep. 73. In the same case it is remarked that "every claimant of title owes a duty of notice to the public. Generally speaking, the record is the means of information, and the spirit of our laws is to encourage reliance upon the record. Where that fails, and the claimant knows of the failure, he owes to the public the duty of in some way making good the omission; and, if he is derelict in this duty, he may be estopped from afterwards setting up his title against one who has purchased and parted with value on the strength of the record." In Lewis v. Kirk, 28 Kan. 505, it is said that "a purchaser in good faith of real estate is never bound to take notice of secret equities, liens, interests, trusts, or incumbrances, which cannot be discovered from an inspection of the public records, or cannot be ascertained by inquiries from the parties in possession. He may always rely upon the public records, and such inquiries as they suggest, and such inquiries as are proper of the parties in possession; and if, from all these, the title appears to be clear, he will then obtain a good title, although there may be some outstanding equity or lien in favor of some other person." The defendant acted in good faith, and was not derelict in examining the record, or in making inquiries of those in possession, or of those likely to know of outstanding equities or titles. The plaintiff, on the other hand, was at fault in failing to give the notice which the law and fair dealing with the public requires. In consequence of his fault, the property was purchased for a valuable consideration, taxes were paid, and improvements made thereon, and he who is in fault should suffer the loss which his conduct has occasioned. We think the title of the defendant under the quitclaim deed is paramount to that of the plaintiff, and the ruling of the district court must be upheld. The judgment will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

DISCHARGE OF ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT—APPEAL.

1. An order of the district court discharging an order of attachment is reviewable in this court before there is a final disposition of the case in the court below. The case of Snively v. Buggy Co., 36 Kan. 106, 12 Pac. Rep. 522, followed.

2. Affidavits in support of, or in opposition to, a motion to discharge an order of attachment, ought to be confined to the truth or falsity of the causes set forth in the affidavit for attachment. The material facts involving the merits of the action are rarely, if ever, involved in an inquiry as to whether or not the order of attachment was wrongfully issued.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Barton county; ANSEL R. CLARK, Judge.

G. W. Nimocks & Bro., for defendants in error.

SIMPSON, C. In this case the plaintiffs in error complain of an order of the district court of Barton county discharging an attachment. In this court a motion is made to dismiss the petition in error, for the reason that it is not shown in the record that the case has been finally disposed of in the district court. The theory of the motion is that an order of the district court discharging an attachment is not subject to review in this court until after the final disposition of the case by the court in which it originated. This is not the law. Such an order is reviewable in this court, even if there has not been a final judgment rendered below; but, if the district court had refused to discharge the attachment, such refusal could not have been reviewed in this court until after final judgment below. The case of Snively v. Baggy Co., 36 Kan. 106, 12 Pac. Rep. 522, contains an elaborate discussion of this question, and is decisive of this motion. The motion should be overruled.

The motion to discharge was supported and opposed by elaborate affidavits on both sides, and, as there were no witnesses examined orally on the hearing, we must pass upon the questions of fact as if we had original jurisdiction. Keith v. Stetter, 25 Kan. 100. The material facts are that Mrs. J. W. Chappell and her daughter Floy were the owners of a stock of millinery goods at Great Bend; that Mrs. H. G. Comins, through her agent, one Moore, traded a lot in some addition to the city of Chicago for the stock of goods, the husband and father of Mrs. Chappell and her daughter acting as their agent, Mrs. Comins assuming to pay an indebtedness of $800 that was owing on the stock. This indebtedness not being paid when it became due, this action was commenced against Mrs. H. G. Comins & Co. to recover the amount of that indebtedness. Mrs. Comins, subsequent to the purchase, had taken into partnership the wife of Moore, who made the trade as the agent of Mrs. Comins. An attachment was obtained and levied on the stock of merchandise. The causes for attachment alleged in the affidavit are, first, that the defendants are about to remove their property, or a part thereof, out of the jurisdiction of the court, with the intent to defraud their creditors; and are about to convert their property, or a part thereof, into money, for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of their creditors; and have property and rights in action which they conceal; and are about to assign, remove, and dispose of their property, or a part thereof, with the intent to defraud, hinder, and delay their creditors; and have assigned, removed, and disposed of their property, or a part thereof, with the intent to defraud, hinder, and delay their creditors; and fraudulently contracted the debt and incurred the obligation for which the above-named suit has been brought. The causes for attachment, as alleged, were each and all denied under oath. In the affidavits filed in support of the attachment, there is absolutely no evidence to support, or that tends remotely to support, the truth of any of the alleged causes for attachment. The issues of fact made by the affidavits on both sides are as to the value of the Chicago lot, and as to whether Moore made false representations as to its value, location, and surroundings, and as to whether Mrs. Moore, when she went into partnership with Mrs. Comins, assumed the payment of $800 as a debt of the new firm. These questions of fact are to be determined at the trial of the case, and do not control the order of attachment. Suit was brought against the defendants in error because they failed, neglected, and refused to pay the $800 that it is alleged they assumed to pay. There was no evidence that they fraudulently contracted this debt. They did not contract it; it was contracted by the plaintiffs in error, and they would not certainly claim that the defendants in error fraudulently assumed to pay it. There is no evidence to sustain the attachment. We recommend that the order be affirmed.

MULVANE v. CITY OF SOUTH TOPEKA.

EXCAVATION IN STREET—DANGER SIGNALS.

A city is under no legal obligation to provide danger signals along an excavation, in a public street, as to one traveling outside of the street, or except at the crossings or intersections of such street, by other streets or highways; and when a person, in driving over a vacant lot or tract of ground, is precipitated over an embankment into the street and injured, the city is not liable in damages for such injury.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Shawnee county; JOHN GUTHRIE, Judge.

Welch & Welch, for plaintiff in error. S. B. Isenhardt, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. The plaintiff in error instituted this suit in the district court of Shawnee county, to recover damages from the city of Topeka for a failure to place danger signals at a point where a well-traveled way, which had been used, as he claimed, for more than 15 years by the traveling public, although not a regularly laid-out road, intersected a street of such city, which had been excavated a distance of some four or five feet below the surface, across such traveled way. The case was tried to a jury, and resulted in favor of the city. The plaintiff below brings the case here, and assigns error in the giving of the sixth instruction, and the refusal of an instruction requested by him. These assignments we shall consider together, as they raise substantially the same question. In the sixth instruction, the court said to the jury: "I further instruct you that, before you can find for the plaintiff, you must find from the evidence that, at the time of the alleged accident and injuries complained of, plaintiff was in a public street or public highway in the city of South Topeka. If the plaintiff was not in a public street or public highway when he was precipitated over the bank into the excavation on Kansas avenue, then he cannot recover. Therefore, if you find that the defendant city excavated the avenue up to the west line of the avenue,—that is, up to the private land belonging to Ritchie or other land-owner,—and that plaintiff approached Kansas avenue across the open private land of Ritchie or other person, and was not in a public street or public highway when the plaintiff and his carriage were precipitated over the bank into the excavation, then the plaintiff cannot recover. The city was not required to put up danger signals at any point along the excavation in the avenue, except at the crossing or intersection of the avenue by public streets or public highways; and, unless the plaintiff approached the avenue by a public street or public highway, where it was the duty of the city to put up danger signals, then he cannot recover in this action." The evidence is not preserved in the record, and we shall assume that the facts authorized the giving of this instruction, which we think is a correct statement of the law. It is stated in the petition that the plaintiff was passing on said by-road entering Kansas avenue, and was wholly ignorant of the excavation in said Kansas avenue, and was not aware of any danger, and, while attempting to drive on to said avenue about 9 o'clock at night, was accidentally precipitated into said excavation, with his team and carriage, whereby he was injured; that the accident occurred by and through the negligence of the defendant city, in leaving said excavation on Kansas avenue, where the by-road entered the same, wholly unguarded in the night-time by lights or otherwise. Was this such an omission, upon the part of the city, as made it chargeable with negligence, and was the law as laid down by the trial court correct? We must resolve these questions in favor of the city. There was no obligation resting upon the city to provide a way over private property to its public streets and avenues; and the fact that the ground over which the plaintiff passed had been used by the public for a number of years would not cast upon the city any duty to erect barriers, or place danger signals, upon such ground, unless the city had full and complete control over the same as a part of the public streets of the city. There was nothing to indicate that this ground had ever been dedicated to the public in such a way as to render the city liable, or give the plaintiff any right to use it as a traveled way. It is not the duty of a city to provide means of access from private property to its streets, nor is it liable for a failure to guard its streets from approach at points where such approach is dangerous. Goodin v. City of Des Moines, 55 Iowa, 67, 7 N. W. Rep. 411; Zettler v. City of Atlanta, 66 Ga. 195; Young v. District of Columbia, 3 MacArthur, 137. The judgment of the district court of Shawnee county should be affirmed.

REDEMPTION FROM TAX-SALES.

1. Where land is sold for taxes September 5, 1882, the period of redemption expires with September 5, 1885.

2. Where a county treasurer, by a mistake in computation of time, gives in a redemption notice one day more than three years for redemption, the notice will not be held to be bad on its face.

3. Where the redemption notice gives the full statutory time of three years for redemption, and one day more, and the last day named in the notice is Sunday, the owner will not be permitted to set aside a deed for the land following such notice, without showing that he was misled by the notice, and that he offered to redeem on the last day named in the notice, or, if the last day was Sunday, on the next day.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Wabaunsee county; R. B. SPILLMAN, Judge:

Malcolm Nicolson, for plaintiff in error.
George G. Cornell, for defendants in error.

STRANG, C. Action in ejectment for the possession of the E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 8, township 12, range 11, Wabaunsee county, Kan. Defendants below claim the land under a tax-title. The statute provides that "any owner, his agent or attorney, may, at any time within three years from the day of sale, and at any time before the execution of the deed, redeem any land, or town lot, sold for taxes, or any part thereof, or interest therein, by paying to the treasurer of the county the amount for which said land was sold, and all subsequent taxes and charges thereon," with interest as provided by the act. The statute also requires the county treasurer, at least four months before the expiration of the time limited for redeeming lands sold for taxes, to publish in some paper published in or of general circulation in his county, once a week for four consecutive weeks, a list of all unredeemed lands and town lots, describing each tract or lot as the same was described on the tax-roll, stating the name of the person to whom assessed, if any, and the amount of taxes charged, and interest, calculated to the last day of redemption, due on each parcel, and give notice that unless such lands or lots be redeemed on or before the day limited therefor, specifying the same, they will be conveyed to the purchaser. The trial court made the following findings of fact, to-wit: First. That the plaintiff holds title to the real estate in controversy, to-wit: The E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section 8, township 12, range 11 E., containing 80 acres of land, in Wabaunsee county, state of Kansas, by a chain of valid conveyances, duly executed and delivered, beginning with a patent from the United States, dated April 15, 1871, and ending with a deed to the plaintiff, dated August 18, 1880. Second. That said real estate was sold on the 5th day of September, 1882, for the taxes of 1881, and under said sale a tax-deed, valid on its face, was on the 11th day of September, 1885, duly executed and delivered to C. S. Kinderdine by the county clerk of Wabaunsee county, Kan.; and the defendant Lewis Nelson is in possession of said real estate under title derived from said tax-deed by conveyance duly executed and delivered to him by said Kinderdine on the 11th day of May, 1886. Third. That, prior to the execution of said tax-deed, the county treasurer of Wabaunsee county, Kan., published a redemption notice of lands sold for taxes in 1882, of which the following is a copy, to wit: "County treasurer's office, Alma, Wabaunsee county, Kansas, February 13th, 1885. Notice is hereby given that the lands described in the following list, situate in the county of Wabaunsee, and state of Kansas, were sold on the 5th day of September, 1882, for the unpaid taxes of 1881, and costs and charges thereon. The period of redemption under said sale will expire in three years from the day of said sale, or on the sixth day of September, 1885. The sum set opposite the several tracts includes the taxes, interest, and charges up to the last day of redemption. Now, therefore, unless the said lands shall be redeemed on or before the sixth day of September, 1885, they may be conveyed to the purchaser thereof on and after the 6th day of September, 1885. JOSEPH FIELDS, County Treasurer." Fourth. That the 6th day of September, 1885, was Sunday. Fifth. That, before this suit was commenced, the plaintiff tendered to defendant the full amount of taxes, and interest, on said land. And the following conclusions of law: First, that the defendant Lewis Nelson does not unlawfully detain said real estate from said plaintiff, and that said plaintiff is not entitled to recover the possession thereof; second, that the defendants are entitled to recover their costs. And thereupon the said plaintiff, to all the foregoing conclusions of law, and each of them, duly excepted.

The sole question involved in the case is the sufficiency of the redemption notice. There are two questions raised on the notice. It is first asserted by the plaintiff in error that the notice is not sufficient because, since the last day of the period for redemption (the 6th of September) is Sunday, the notice should have extended the period for redemption to and including the next day, (the 7th.) The land was sold on the 5th day of September, 1882. Under the rule of this court, (English v. Williamson, 34 Kan. 212, 8 Pac. Rep. 214, and Cable v. Coates, 36 Kan. 191, 12 Pac. Rep. 931,) the day of sale should have been excluded. The period of redemption then would have expired on September 5, 1885. September 5, 1885, was not Sunday; and, as the period for redemption expired with that day, it mattered not that the next day was Sunday. The plaintiff had his full three years in which to redeem, with the expiration of Saturday, the 5th.

It is argued that, because by the terms of the notice the plaintiff was given the right to redeem on the 6th, he should have had all of that day; and, as the 6th was Sunday, he should have also had the whole of the next day, (the 7th.) We do not think this argument is tenable. The statute gives three full years in which to redeem, and until the deed is executed, but the notice should give but three years. If, however, the treasurer by a mistake in computation gives in the notice one day more than three years for redemption, that will not render the notice invalid upon its face. Nor should the owner be permitted to take advantage of such mistake, to set aside a deed following such notice, without showing that he was misled thereby, and that he offered to redeem on the last day named in the notice, or, if the last day named was Sunday, on the next day. It is also said the notice was invalid by reason of its uncertainty, or want of definiteness, in fixing the final day for redemption. That part of the notice claimed to be obnoxious to this criticism reads as follows: "The period of redemption, under said sale, will expire in three years from the day of said sale, or on the sixth day of September, 1885." It is argued that the date of expiration for the period of redemption is not definitely fixed; that the notice is that the period for redemption will expire on one or the other of two periods,—to-wit, "in three years from the day of sale, or on the 6th day of September, 1885,"—and that this feature of the notice is subject to the criticism of this court in the case of Blackstone v. Sherwood, 31 Kan. 36, 2 Pac. Rep. 874, and is therefore invalid. The notice in this case differs from the notice criticised in the case cited. In the notice in that case, the date of sale was not given, and there was nothing from which to compute the three years for redemption. In this case, the date of sale is given in the notice, and a computation will show when the three years will expire. We think the notice in this case must be held to be good. It is therefore recommended that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

INTEREST—TAXES PAID AFTER TAX-SALE.

In an action of ejectment for the possession of real estate, where the defense is based upon a tax-title, and the case is decided adversely to the defendant, and a motion is made by the defendant to ascertain the amount he is entitled to recover by reason of taxes, penalties, and costs, paid on said real estate, together with interest thereon, and said motion is not heard and decided at once, 7 per cent. prior to 1889 is the rate of interest the defendant is entitled to receive subsequent to the decision in ejectment.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Shawnee county; JOHN GUTHRIE, Judge.

F. G. Hentig and E. A. Austin, for plaintiff in error. A. L. Redden, Irwin Taylor, and H. H. Harris, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. This was a hearing on a motion by the defendant in the district court, in a case there pending, in which the title to certain lots had been settled against him, to ascertain the amount due from the plaintiff in the case, for taxes, penalties, and costs paid by him on said lots, together with interest thereon, and to have said amount declared a lien on said lots. The matter was referred to Byron Roberts, as referee. Mr. Roberts heard the parties, and made a report, but there being some technical objection to the report, it was, by consent of both parties, set aside. Whereupon, the matter was again referred to Mr. Roberts, the court, at the time, making an order directing the referee how to proceed to ascertain the amount of taxes, penalties, costs, and interest due from the plaintiff, the successful party in the suit, to the defendant. The referee again heard the parties, and made a report, which is complained of by the plaintiff here. The insufficiency of the record renders it impossible for us to investigate the findings of the referee. The most we can do is to examine the order of the court, which furnishes the basis for the findings of the referee, and refer to certain offers of the plaintiff to make certain proof, which offers are contained in what purports to be a bill of exceptions. The plaintiff claims in his brief that these offers were rejected by the referee; but the record shows that they were received by the referee, and the record is controlling; but a glance at the offers shows that they were not made in accordance with any rule for the introduction of evidence. There was no witness produced, sworn, and questioned by whom it was proposed to make the proof offered, nor was any records produced, identified, or offered, by which the proof was to be made. There was nothing but a bare statement by the party of a set of conclusions that he said he could prove. Such statements are not offers to prove anything. An offer to prove must be supported by a witness, or record, or some form of evidence, by which the offer can be made good. The plaintiff complains of the order of the court. He says the court directed the referee to find when the action of ejectment for the lots was decided, and says that a decision of the ejectment suit had nothing to do with the question of taxes. That she is entitled to 20 per cent. interest on sums paid up to the time when the amount of taxes is found by the court, without any regard to the decision of the ejectment suit, or the settlement of the title to the lots. The contention of the plaintiff below is that, after the decision of the ejectment case, the rate of interest on the sums paid is 7 per cent. This is the view the court took of it, in making the order complained of. We think the court was right, and that after the decision against the defendant below, on the question of title to the lots in litigation, if for any reason the amount of taxes is not immediately ascertained, the rate of interest thereafter is but 7 per cent.

This seems to have been the real difficulty in the case. It is therefore recommended that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

STORCH v. HARVEY et al.

RENEWAL OF LEASE—EXERCISE OF OPTION.

1. In an action to recover rent for the use of real estate, there was a written lease "for the term of one year, with the option of the second party to keep said premises three years, if so desired, at the same rate of rent as the first year." The lessee occupied the premises and paid rent for the same about one year and five months, and the principal question tried was whether the lessee elected to exercise his option and hold over the year under the written lease, or was holding under another and different lease claimed by the lessee to have been entered into just prior to the expiration of the year. The jury found that a new lease was made. Held, that there was sufficient testimony to sustain the finding, and that it was not necessary that the new lease should be in writing.

2. Where the defendant in a case has testified, and the plaintiff, who had previously taken defendant's deposition, introduces and reads a portion of the same relating to a certain transaction with a view of contradicting the testimony given by defendant on the trial, it is not error for the court to permit defendant to read other parts of the deposition which related to the same subject or transaction.

Error from district court, Atchison county; W. D. GILBERT, Judge.

JOHNSTON, J. George Storch brought this action against A. B. Harvey & Co., to recover $493.95, alleged to be due as rent for a store building in Muscotah. A written lease was executed on February 6, 1884, "for the term of one year, with the option of the second party to keep said premises three years, if so desired, at the same rate of rent as the first year." The rent agreed to be paid was $282 a year, in monthly installments of $23.50. The defendants went into possession of the premises, and continued to use the same until July 1, 1885, paying rent up to that time. The possession of the premises was then surrendered, and the property was leased to others, and the rent was paid to and received by plaintiff. The plaintiff claims that the defendants, by occupying the building beyond the year stipulated in the lease, exercised their option to hold it for three years, and were liable for the rent under the terms of the lease for the full time. On the other hand, the defendants claim that they only held the property under the lease for the year specified, when they elected not to exercise the option to hold longer under the lease; that they desired the use of the building for a short time after the expiration of the year, and until they could complete a building which they were about to erect for their own use; and that prior to the expiration of the year they entered into another contract with plaintiff to lease the building temporarily, at a rental of $23.50 per month, for such time as they desired to use it. The case was tried with a jury, which adopted the theory of the defendants, and gave a verdict in their favor. The plaintiff complains of the result, and assigns numerous grounds of error; but the real question involved, and which was submitted to the jury, was whether a second contract was made, as the defendants claim.

It is conceded that the defendants surrendered the possession of the property on July 1, 1885, and that they paid the rent for the term of one year, and also at the rate of $23.50 per month for the time which they held it beyond the year. The rent for the fractional month from June 6, 1885, to July 1, 1885, was $19.50, which was paid by defendants, and accepted, and no further demand for rent was made until December 6, 1887, which was 10 months after the expiration of three years. The testimony of Harvey was to the effect that he went to Storch about a month previous to the expiration of the term, and notified him that they would not hold the premises under the lease beyond the term; and at the same time entered into another contract with him, by which they were to hold the premises at a rental of $23.50 per month until their own building was completed. They proceeded with the erection of their own building, a fact well known to plaintiff's agent, and finished it on July 1, 1885, when they moved their goods over from the plaintiff's building, and rent was then accepted by the plaintiff for the actual time which defendants occupied the premises. There is also testimony tending to show that plaintiff accepted the possession of the premises, and let the same to others, taking compensation therefor. If the defendants had held over the term without declaring their purpose, it might be taken as evidence that they had elected to exercise their privilege, and hold the lease for the additional period of two years, under the terms of the lease; but the jury have found, upon sufficient testimony, that defendants were occupying the premises, after February 6, 1885, under a new and independent contract. It was the duty of the lessees, if they desired to continue under the lease, to give prompt notice of their purpose; but as they did not desire to continue the lease, no election was required. However, if a notice had been necessary, it was given in good time, and accepting defendant's testimony, as we must, the exercise of the option was not a mere mental operation of the defendants, unknown except to themselves, but they made a new contract, which leaves no room for contending that the further occupation of the premises indicated an intention of the defendants to hold under the original lease.

Plaintiff seems to contend that a writing was necessary between the parties, in order to change the terms of the lease, or the conditions under which they continued in possession of the premises. There is no change of the original lease. It terminated at the end of the year, unless the defendants desired to and did elect to extend it. They did not desire to exercise this privilege, and so notified the plaintiff; and the new lease was for so brief a period that it was unnecessary to commit it to writing.

Considerable complaint is made of the rulings of the court in the admission of testimony; but we find no such errors as would justify the overturning of the verdict. The agency of McLain is sufficiently shown to warrant the introduction of testimony of what was said and done by him in connection with the leasing of the premises. He resided in Muscotah, where the property was situated, and was invested with authority to care for the property, and to collect the rents therefor. The second contract leasing the premises, however, was made directly with the plaintiff himself. The deposition of one of the defendants had been taken in advance of the trial, and after this party had testified at the trial the plaintiff read a portion of the deposition which he had given, with a view of contradicting him, and inquired of him if he had so testified. The defendants then, over the objections of the plaintiff, read additional portions of the deposition which related to the same subject; and of this they now complain. It would be manifest injustice to introduce a portion of the testimony of a witness on any subject, without allowing the introduction of all that was said by the witness on that subject. The court committed no error in admitting the other answers or statements of the witness concerning the same transaction.

The ruling of the court on the giving and refusal of instructions is a subject of complaint; but we find no prejudicial error, and think that the charge given fairly presented the case to the jury. The findings of the jury appear to be sufficiently definite, and these answer some of the numerous objections urged against the rulings on the testimony. The real, and in fact about the only, question in the case is one of fact, as to whether a second contract was made, and upon this there is a sharp conflict in the testimony; but the verdict of the jury settles that conflict in favor of the defendants, and we find no sufficient ground for disturbing the verdict. The judgment will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

W. M. Duff and Thomas H. Bain, for plaintiff in error. G. P. Aikman, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This was an action brought by the State Insurance Company against William Curry to recover $33.50, alleged to be due upon a promissory note executed by Curry on December 31, 1885, in payment of a premium on a policy of insurance. The answer of the defendant was that there was a failure of consideration; that the company had not complied with the laws of the state of Kansas; and that the policy issued to Curry by the company was not in accordance with the agreement of the parties. The company brings the case to this court, alleging that the district court erred in not giving certain instructions which it requested.

The objection to the ruling of the court is not available, for the reason that neither the evidence nor any statement of its purport is preserved in the record. In the absence of the evidence, it cannot be said that an instruction, however correct as an abstract statement of the law, was applicable to the case, or that its refusal was material error. *Auld v. RECEPTION OF VERDICT—ABSENCE OF COUNSEL.

Where, during the progress of a trial, and after the jury had retired, counsel for defendant asks permission of the judge to leave the court-room and go to his law-office, with the understanding that the judge is to send a bailiff for him, when the jury returns into court, and the judge fails to send word to counsel, and receives the verdict of the jury in his absence, and that of the defendant, and the verdict is read aloud to the jury, and no dissent made to the question as to whether it is their verdict, and the jury is not polled, held, that such omission upon the part of the trial judge is not such an error as will cause a reversal of the judgment.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Harvey county; L. Houk, Judge.

Brown & Kline, for plaintiff in error. Bowman & Bucher, for defendants in error.

GREEN, C. This case was appealed from justice's court to the district court of Harvey county, where it was tried by a jury, and a verdict rendered for $33 for plaintiffs below. The only error relied upon is the failure upon the part of the trial court to send a bailiff for the counsel for defendant in the court below, when the jury returned into court with a verdict. It appears from the record that, after the jury had been out for a few hours, the counsel who had charge of the case for the defendant below made an arrangement with the court whereby he was permitted to retire from the court-room and go to his law-office, and that he was to be called by a bailiff when the jury had agreed upon a verdict. This, it is claimed, the court failed to do. When the jury did come into court with a verdict, the same was received, in the absence of the counsel, and the jury discharged, without giving the defendant any opportunity to poll the jury. Was this error? The record discloses the fact that the verdict was received by the court, read aloud in the presence of the jury by the clerk, and after such reading the court inquired if that was the verdict of each and all of the jurymen, to which the jury made no dissent; but the jurymen were not polled. Ordinarily, it is the duty of counsel, in charge of a case upon trial, to remain in the court-room until its final disposition. It was a matter of courtesy, upon the part of the trial judge, that permission was given to counsel to retire from the court-room. It was extended without the knowledge or consent of the other parties to the action. It could hardly be claimed that it was a part of the judge's duties to send for counsel when his presence was necessary. It had doubtless escaped the judge's mind, in the press of his official duties, that he was to dispatch a messenger to counsel, upon the return of the jury with a verdict. It being a matter outside of the duties of a judge, and made solely for the convenience and accommodation of counsel, we do not think the plaintiffs below should be obliged to try the case a third time for this omission upon the part of the trial judge to notify the counsel. There is no showing made that the defendant below was in any wise wronged, or that any different result would have been reached. It is possible that the jury could have been polled if counsel had returned to the court-room in a reasonable time. He simply retired upon the promise of the judge to send word to him. This he omitted to do, and, it being a favor extended to counsel alone, we think the case should not be reversed for this oversight of the judge, and the judgment should be affirmed.

RIGHTS OF EXECUTORS INTER SE.

One executor cannot sue his co-executor for money or property in his hands belonging to the estate of the deceased.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Pratt county; S. W. Leslie, Judge.

J. F. King, for plaintiff in error. B. E. Johnson, for defendants in error.

STRANG, C. Action on a promissory note. Martin Taylor and E. C. Minton were executors of the estate of Samuel Taylor, deceased. Minton did most of the business, and handled the money, which he deposited in his own name in a bank. Some time before the estate was settled, and the administration closed up, Taylor and Minton looked over Minton's account as executor, and it was found that Minton had used for himself $120 of funds belonging to the estate. To make the amount good, he made his promissory note to Martin Taylor, his co-executor, but made it to Taylor individually, instead of to him as executor. The other defendant, E. McFeeters, signed the note with Minton. When the note became due Minton failed to pay it, and Taylor brought an action in his own name against Minton and McFeeters. The case was commenced before a justice of the peace, where the plaintiff filed the note as a bill of particulars. The defendants failed to appear, and judgment was rendered against them by default. Defendants then appealed to the district court, where the case was tried by the court and jury without any further pleadings, resulting in a verdict for defendants. Motion for a new trial. Motion overruled. The question presented to this court is raised on the instructions of the court to the jury, which are as follows: "(1) You are instructed that the law implies that every promissory note that is made and delivered was given for a good and valuable consideration, and in this case the burden of proof is upon the defendants to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the note in question was given without consideration passing from plaintiff to defendant E. C. Minton; and, unless defendants have done this, the jury should find for the plaintiff such sum as you find is due and unpaid on said note. You are further instructed that the want of consideration destroys the validity of a note in the hands of the payee, and this without regard to the good faith of the transaction in which the note was given; and in this case, if the jury believe from the evidence that the note was given without any good or valuable consideration passing from the plaintiff individually to the defendants, or one of them, your verdict should be for the defendants. (2) The plaintiff in this case is suing in his individual capacity, and not as a representative of the estate of Samuel Taylor, deceased. All evidence in relation to the consideration of account of defendant Minton with said estate is withdrawn from your consideration; and, in order to find for the plaintiff in this case, you must believe from the evidence there was a good and valuable consideration passing from the plaintiff individually to the defendants, or one of them, for which said note was given." The defendant Minton admitted that he was short in his accounts with the estate of Samuel Taylor, deceased, at the time he gave the note, in the sum of $120, and that he gave the note to Martin Taylor to make good his account with the estate, but denied that he ever owed Martin Taylor anything. The case seems to have been treated by the district court as one between Martin Taylor and the defendants, without any regard to the representative capacity of either Taylor or Minton. Viewing the case within these limits, there seems to be no serious error in the instructions of the court. But it is difficult to refrain from looking beyond these narrow limits, since, the moment the evidence appears, it becomes apparent that Martin Taylor took and holds the note for the use of his father's estate. All the evidence on both sides proves this. Looking at the case in the light of the real position of the parties, Taylor and Minton, and treating them as co-executors, as, under the evidence, they were, both at the time the note was given, and at the time of the trial, the action cannot be maintained. Being co-executors, the possession of the funds of the estate by either is the possession of the other; the possession being in law a joint one. Funds in the hands of Minton belonging to the estate of which he and Taylor were co-executors, if transferred by him to Taylor, are still in the joint possession of both. The giving of the note by Minton to Taylor did not cancel Minton's engagement to the estate. He was still liable to the estate for the money of the estate that had reached his hands. He might have been required by the probate court to turn it over for distribution without regard to the note. Nor did the receipt of the note from Minton charge Taylor with the money the note was intended to represent, so long as the money actually remained in Minton's custody. Notwithstanding the note, until the estate was settled up, or the probate court required him to turn over the money for distribution, Minton had a right to the custody thereof. If the note could be treated as a part of the assets of the estate, Minton had the same right to the custody of it that Taylor had, and the possession of the note by Taylor was, in law, equally the possession of Minton. The statute provides a simple and direct method whereby funds in the hands of an executor may be released from his custody for the benefit of the creditors or distributees of the estate. It is therefore recommended that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ANNEXATION OF FARMING LAND.

Farming land adjacent to a city of the second class, which has been platted into blocks and lots, may, by ordinance, be annexed to such city. Following City of Emporia v. Smith, 42 Kan. 433, 22 Pac. Rep. 616.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Johnson county; J. P. HINDMAN, Judge.

John T. Little, for plaintiffs in error. S. T. Seaton, for defendants in error.

GREEN, C. This action was commenced in the district court of Johnson county, to perpetually enjoin and restrain the city of Olathe from exercising any authority over certain territory which the city had, by ordinance, annexed to and included within its corporate bounds; and also to restrain the city assessor from assessing the annexed territory for the year 1888. The injunction was denied in the court below, and the plaintiff in error brings the case here for review. The case was tried in the district court upon an agreed statement of facts, which showed that the annexed territory had been platted as "Stevenson Place," and duly acknowledged, and that such plat had been filed in the office of the register of deeds of Johnson county, and that the territory included within Stevenson place was adjacent to the city of Olathe. The facts in this case brings the real question in controversy within the rule laid down in the case of City of Emporia v. Smith, 42 Kan. 433, 22 Pac. Rep. 616, where this court held that owners of farming land that lies adjacent to a city of the second class, who voluntarily subdivide their adjacent lands into blocks and lots, and thus create the conditions upon which cities of the second class are authorized to make their subdivisions a part of the city, cannot defeat such annexation by a claim that the extent of their homestead is reduced to one acre, without their consent. We see no distinction between the case at bar and the case above, and we deem it unnecessary to enter upon any further discussion of the homestead right which was claimed in that case, as well as in this, and content ourselves by recommending an affirmance of the judgment in this case upon the authority of that case.

STATE V. ALTEN.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALES.

1. In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor, the state elected to stand for trial upon each of three counts on sales made as testified to by four persons, which the defendant insisted constituted but one sale. A conviction upon each count followed, but the court set aside the conviction as to two of the counts, and approved it as to the third. Held, that the court, in overruling the verdict as to two counts and sustaining it as to the third, did not trench on the province of the jury, and, as there was sufficient testimony to sustain the third, the defendant has no cause to complain.

2. The evidence examined, and held to be sufficient to show that the liquor sold was intoxicating.

Appeal from district court, Riley county; R. B. SPILMAN, Judge.

Green & Hessin, for appellant. L. B. Kellogg, Atty Gen., and F. L. Irish, for the State.

JOHNSTON, J. This is an appeal from a conviction of Charles Alten, who was charged in 17 counts of an information filed against him for selling intoxicating liquors. He was found guilty on 7 counts, but the court set aside the conviction as to 2 of the counts, and approved it as to the others. The defendant sold cider to numerous persons, charging them at the rate of 25 cents a bottle and $1 a gallon for the same. The contention was, and is, that the liquor sold was not intoxicating; but a reading of the record discloses sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict. One witness says, "it intoxicated us to some extent," and that he "felt pretty good and bolsterous." Another witness said, "it kind of livened me up a little so I could feel it," and that "it intoxicated me a little," and made him feel like singing songs. Another testified, "it made me intoxicated, — kind of tipsy." Another stated that it affected him about the same as the drinking of whisky did. And there was still another who said it made him "dizzy-headed." There is considerable more testimony of a like character in the record, and, although defendant produced testimony tending to show that the liquor sold was not an intoxicant, we are inclined to think that the weight of evidence is with the state. At any rate, there is sufficient to uphold the verdict that has received the approval of the trial court. State v. McLain, 43 Kan. 439, 23 Pac. Rep. 651.

A further claim is made as to the action of the court in sustaining the motion for a new trial as to the sixteenth count, and overruling it as to the fifteenth and seventeenth counts. The state was required to elect upon which counts of the information it would stand for trial, and among others elected to stand upon the three counts last named. The evidence upon which the state relied for conviction in these three counts was that of Charles Ryan, W. Stevens, James Mallon, and John Mallon. It is claimed that the testimony of these witnesses shows that while all obtained liquor from the defendant, yet that it only constituted a single transaction and sale, and that the court in determining the motion decided that the charge in the sixteenth count was a sale, and that those in the fifteenth and seventeenth counts were not, and in that way usurped the province of the jury in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant. The objection is not good. The state elected to stand upon the sixteenth count, and there is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the jury thereon. It is unnecessary to examine the question of whether there was testimony to sustain the finding upon the fifteenth and seventeenth counts, as the state is not complaining of the rulings made, and the defendant cannot complain of a decision in his favor. The court did not trench upon the functions of the jury, because the jury had already found the defendant guilty upon the sixteenth count, and the only question to be determined is whether the jury was justified in finding the verdict of guilty upon that count. This being sufficient, the conviction must stand. The judgment of the district court will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

LARCENY—EVIDENCE—COLLATERAL CRIMES.

1. At the trial of two persons charged with the larceny of a load of wheat, it is not error for the trial court to reject evidence tending to show that the father of one of the persons charged tried to hire other persons to haul the wheat to town, and declared that he had hired the prisoners to do so.

2. It is never permitted the state to attempt to prove collateral crimes, either by the cross-examination of a defendant or by evidence offered in chief, but a mere passing reference to other crimes in the course of a cross-examination is not considered prejudicial error in a case where on the whole record there is no room for doubt as to the guilt of the defendants.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Russell county; W. G. EASTLAND, Judge.

L. B. & M. J. Beardsley and David Rathbone, for appellants. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and G. W. Holland, for the State.

SIMPSON, C. This is an original action in this court. The petition alleges that the plaintiff, G. L. Calvert, is and was a resident of Itasca township, in Sherman county, on the 1st day of November, 1889; that at the regular election in November, 1889, the plaintiff and defendant were candidates for the office of justice of the peace in and for said township; that the defendant, Charles W. Whitmore, received 159 votes, and that the plaintiff received 157 votes; and, in addition to the 157 perfect ballots that were cast for the plaintiff, the following imperfect votes were cast: One for Calvert, one for A. L. Calvert, and one for J. C. Calvert. He further alleges that the three ballots cast bearing respectively the names of "Calvert," "A. L. Calvert," and "J. C. Calvert," were meant and intended by the voters so casting them for this plaintiff, G. L. Calvert, and in truth and in fact were so voted for plaintiff for said office; that in erasing the name of Charles W. Whitmore, and writing instead thereof the name of the plaintiff on said ballots, the persons preparing the same meant and intended to write on each of said ballots the name of G. L. Calvert, but by mistake wrote the names as aforesaid; that, prior to said election, the electors of said township met in mass convention, and nominated, as candidates for justice of the peace, W. K. Brown, Charles W. Whitmore, and this plaintiff, G. L. Calvert, and that these three persons were the only candidates for said office at said election; that, at the time of the election, this plaintiff had an office in the town of Goodland, in said township, and that no person bearing the name of A. L. Calvert or J. C. Calvert resided in said township, and that the only other person residing in said township bearing the name of Calvert was a farmer, residing on a claim in the most remote corner of the township, and who was not a candidate, and who was entirely unknown to the great body of the electors of said township; that the names of the electors casting the three ballots above named are known to the plaintiff, and are ready and willing to testify that said ballots bearing the names of "Calvert," "A. L. Calvert," and "J. C. Calvert" were so prepared and voted by mistake, but were in fact cast for the plaintiff for justice of the peace. He then alleges the canvass of the vote, the issuance of a certificate of election to defendant, that the plaintiff filed his oath of office, and offered an official bond for approval, demanded the possession of the office, etc. To this petition a demurrer is interposed, because it does not state a cause of action. We think the petition contains every necessary allegation to state a good cause of action on the part of the plaintiff, and therefore recommend that the demurrer be overruled, and the defendant allowed 30 days to answer.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

SIMPSON, C. The appellants were convicted at the March term, 1890, of the district court of Russell county, of stealing 54 bushels of wheat of the value of $23.76. They appeal to this court, and ask a reversal of the judgment for various reasons. They admitted in open court that they hauled the wheat in the night-time to town, and it is in evidence that they tried to sell it. In fact, without the admission, the proof of the taking was conclusive. By way of defense they alleged that one Jesse Clough, the father of one of the defendants, hired them to haul the wheat to town. As an excuse for doing so in the night-time, they claim that Jesse Clough said that the wheat was mortgaged. The pretended agreement with Jesse Clough is testified to by his wife, the mother of one of the defendants, Clough himself not being produced, or his absence satisfactorily accounted for. The evidence of the defendants, with that of Mrs. Clough, constituted a good defense, if true; but it is evident that the jury did not believe in the truth of the story. Complaint is made of the cross-examination of the defendant Romain, and it does seem that the extreme limit was reached in that direction. To what extent a defendant can be cross-examined, as to his previous residence and history, is a matter largely in the discretion of the trial court, and dependent on the developments of the trial. We decline to say in this particular case that such discretion was abused. Complaint is also made that the state attempted to show the commission of other crimes by the defendant Romain prior to the one with which he was charged at this trial. The only recitation in the record that approaches such an attempt is certain questions asked of Romain on cross-examination. The inquiry as to whether or not he had brought another load of wheat into town and sold it seems to have been provoked by his own statement on his examination in chief, and in our view is not prejudicial.

The other inquiry, as to whether or not he had not taken two chickens from a farmer as they were driving along the road from the house at which they had taken the wheat, on their way to town, ought not to have been permitted, and yet it was a trivial matter; and, in view of our strong conviction that the verdict of the jury is most amply sustained in every respect, we will not reverse for such an immaterial error.

Objection is made to the ruling of the trial court excluding the evidence of Duffy, by whom the defendants sought to prove that Jesse Clough offered to sell or mortgage this particular wheat to him. The defendants sought also to prove by one Clarkson that prior to December 9th (the day the wheat was taken) Jesse Clough tried to hire Clarkson to haul the wheat to town, and afterwards told Clarkson that he had hired defendants to do so. These offers were rejected by the court, and this is alleged as material error. It is true that in an action for the possession of personal property the declarations of a party thereto, as to his ownership while in possession, accompanying some principal fact, which they serve to explain and qualify, are sometimes said to be a part of the res gestæ, and are admissible in evidence. (Relley v. Haynes, 38 Kan. 259, 16 Pac. Rep. 440;) but this rule has no application to this case. Clough is not a party. The title to the wheat is not being determined as between him and some other claimant, and his declarations are hearsay to all intent and purpose. There was no error in excluding this class of declarations. Neither was there error in excluding the evidence proposed to be given by Knapp that Romain told him that he was going to haul wheat for Jesse Clough. This was a self-serving declaration of Romain, and could not be given to the jury in this manner. There is no force in the criticisms upon the instructions of the trial court to the jury. Taking them all together, they stated every element constituting the crime. The defendants were given the full benefit of every presumption of innocence. The record shows the guilt of the defendants, and does not show such prejudicial errors as to entitle them to another trial. We recommend that the judgment of conviction be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

PEARSON v. SAME.

SCHOOL TREASURER—LIABILITY FOR SCHOOL FUNDS—ACTION ON BONDS—LIABILITY OF SURETIES.

1. Where a treasurer of the board of education of a city of the second class gives an ordinary official bond upon taking the possession of his office, and afterwards upon the order of the board of education gives an additional bond with substantially the same condition as the first bond, but with different sureties, and when his term of office expires he fails to deliver to his successor in office the balance of the school fund due to the school corporation, and the board of education commences an action therefor against him and his sureties on both bonds, held, that two causes of action are not improperly joined.

2. In such a case, as the board of education is the general representative of the school organization as a corporation, held that it, and not the successor in office of the aforesaid treasurer of the board of education, is the proper party to commence the action as plaintiff.

3. In such a case, where the first bond after it was given became insufficient, and the board of education ordered that the treasurer should give another and an additional bond, which he did, held, that there was sufficient consideration for the giving of such additional bond.

4. In such a case, where the treasurer of the board of education was also the general manager of a private corporation, and had the control of its funds as well as of the school funds, and he deposited its funds and the school funds together in a certain national bank, in the name of the private corporation, with the knowledge and consent of the officers of the bank, such funds to be subject to his control, and to his checks for schools and school corporation purposes, as well as for the private corporation purposes, held that, although the treasurer as the general manager of the private corporation may have drawn out the funds in the bank so as to cause a deficit in the amount of the school funds deposited in the bank at the time of the execution of the second bond, still, as more than enough moneys were afterwards deposited in the bank by the private corporation and its general manager to make good such deficit, such deficit was paid and satisfied; and, for any other deficit in the school funds occurring subsequently to the execution of the second bond, the sureties on the second bond as well as the sureties on the first bond are liable.

Error from district court, Harvey county; L. HOUK, Judge.

Brown & Kline and Bowman & Bucher, for plaintiffs in error. Ady & Nicholson, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. On January 30, 1889, the board of education of the city of Newton commenced an action in the district court of Harvey county against G. W. Holmes, an ex-treasurer of such board, and his sureties on two certain bonds, to recover $3,857.14, an alleged balance due from Holmes as said ex-treasurer, which he had not at any time accounted for. The defendants W. G. Pearson, who signed only the first of the aforesaid bonds, and Fox Winnie, A. B. Gilbert, Joseph Gerson, and McKinney Smith, who signed only the second of such bonds, and some of the other defendants, demurred to the plaintiff's petition upon the grounds—First, that several causes of action were improperly joined in the action; and, second, that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute any cause of action. The demurrers were all overruled. The record shows that Pearson then answered, that a trial was afterwards had upon such answer, and that judgment was rendered against him for the amount stated in the plaintiff's petition; but the particulars are not stated. The defendants Winnie, Gilbert, Gerson, and Smith also answered, setting forth in their answers—First, a general denial; second, that the bond which they signed, the second bond, was executed without any consideration; third, that the default of Holmes, if any, occurred prior to the execution of the second bond, and that all the school moneys which Holmes had at the time of the giving of the second bond, or which were afterwards received by him, were properly applied and accounted for. A trial before the court and a jury was afterwards had between the plaintiff and these four defendants, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against these defendants for the sum of $3,939.87, with interest and costs. The defendant Pearson, for himself, has filed in this court a petition in error for the purpose of reversing the order and judgment of the district court as against him. The defendants Winnie, Gilbert, Gerson, and Smith have filed another and a separate petition in error in this court for the purpose of reversing the order and judgment of the district court as against them; and these two petitions in error we shall now proceed to consider. The facts of this case briefly stated are substantially as follows: On April 5, 1887, G. W. Holmes was elected treasurer of the board of education of the city of Newton, a city of the second class, and on April 28, 1887, he qualified by taking the oath of office, and by giving a proper bond in the sum of $20,000, with the defendant Pearson and others as his sureties, and he at once entered upon the discharge of his duties as such treasurer. On October 3, 1888, upon the order of the board of education, he gave another bond in the sum of $30,000, with the defendants Winnie, Gilbert, Gerson, Smith, and one other as his sureties. On December 17, 1888, he resigned his office as treasurer of the board of education. Afterwards a successor was duly appointed and qualified, but Holmes failed and refused to pay over to his successor in office the sum of $3,857.14, the balance due to the school corporation; and he made default in that amount. During the time while he was treasurer of the board of education he was also the general manager of the Kansas Investment & Guaranty Company, and had the control of its funds; and he also acted for and had the control of funds belonging to other corporations, and also had funds of his own. During that time he deposited in the First National Bank of Newton all the funds of which he had the control, whether they were his own or belonged to the public school fund, or belonged to some one or more of the other parties for which he did business, and he deposited the same in the name of the Kansas Investment & Guaranty Company. This was all done with the knowledge and the consent of the officers of the bank.

1. It is claimed that, in this action, two causes of action were improperly joined, —one upon the first bond, and the other upon the second bond. There is some plausibility in the argument of the plaintiffs in error attempting to sustain this claim, and yet upon the peculiar facts of this case, and the authorities cited, we think the claim is not tenable. In the first place, the plaintiff sets up the facts of its case, and asks for relief as though the entire facts of the case could constitute only one cause of action. In the second place, it alleges only one default on the part of the treasurer, Holmes, and that default occurred after the second bond was given, and indeed not until after Holmes had resigned his office; and this default is the only one for which the plaintiff has sought to recover, or has recovered in this action. Besides, the condition of the two bonds were, and are, substantially the same; and all the sureties on the two bonds are equally liable for any and all the defaults made after the second bond was executed, and for the only default for which the plaintiff asked to recover, or did recover, any judgment; and if any one of the sureties should pay more than his proper share in making this default or the judgment good, all the other sureties on both the bonds would be equally liable for contribution. Under the authority of the following cases, we do not think that several causes of action were improperly joined in this action: Holan v. School-Dist., 10 Neb. 406, 6 N. W. Rep. 472; Powell v. Powell, 48 Cal. 234.

2. It is further claimed that this action is not prosecuted by the proper party as plaintiff. It is claimed that the treasurer of the board of education, the successor to Holmes, the person who is entitled to the custody of the money when obtained, should be the plaintiff in the action instead of the board of education, which, it is claimed, has no right to the custody of the money. Now the board of education of a city of the second class, as the plaintiff in this action is, is the general representative of the legal organization created in such cities for the purpose of carrying on and conducting the public schools. Section 4 of chapter 122, art. 11, of the Laws of 1876 reads as follows: "The public schools of each city organized in pursuance of this act shall be a body corporate, and shall possess the usual powers of a corporation for public purposes by the name and style of 'The Board of Education of the City of —', of the State of Kansas;" and in that name may sue or be sued, and be capable of contracting and being contracted with, of holding and conveying such real and personal estate as it may come into possession of, by will or otherwise, or as is authorized to be purchased by the provisions of this act." Gen. St. 1889, par. 5726. The board of education is the representative of the corporation, the real party in interest, and the treasurer of the board is not. See, also, Gen. St. 1889, among others, pars. 5731, 5737. See, also, Coffman v. Parker, 11 Kan. 9. A school corporation in a city is a school-district.

3. It is further claimed that there was no consideration for the second bond, and this for the reason, as is claimed, that the first bond was all that Holmes was required to give, and that the board of education had no power to require him to give any other further or additional bond. We think this claim is erroneous. In the first place, the bond originally given, while it may have been sufficient at the time it was given, was clearly insufficient when the second bond was given. The first bond was only for $20,000, while, at the time the second bond was given, Holmes had over $40,000 belonging to the school corporation in his possession, or under his control; and when the first bond became inadequate, as it did, we think the board of education, as the representative of the school corporation, had ample authority to require, as it did, that Holmes should give another and an additional bond, as he did. See the sections of the statutes above cited and others.

4. The next thing to be considered in this case has relation to the question whether the default for which the plaintiff recovered in this action occurred, as a fact, prior or subsequently to the execution of the second bond. If it occurred prior thereto, the judgment in this case is evidently erroneous; but if it occurred subsequently, then the judgment is right. It is admitted by the parties that Holmes, in fact, had $4,467.47 less of school moneys in his hands and in the bank at the time of the execution of the second bond than he ought to have had; but it is claimed by the plaintiff, and we suppose it is a fact, that more than that amount of money other than school money was afterwards deposited in the bank by Holmes and the investment and guaranty company, in the name of the company, in the same manner as the other deposits were made, and that such amount then became, like all the other moneys deposited in the bank by Holmes, subject to the order of Holmes for school purposes, and, therefore, that any deficit which may have existed at any time after that time would be considered as occurring under the second bond as well as under the first, and the sureties on the second bond would be liable for such deficit as well as the sureties on the first bond. It appears that, in all cases when Holmes received school funds, he at once deposited them in the exact form in which he received them in the First National Bank of Newton, in the name of the Kansas Investment & Guaranty Company; but they were at all times afterwards, while they remained in the bank, subject to his checks for schools and school corporation purposes. Hence, as the moneys were absolutely under his control as the treasurer of the board of education, and subject to his checks for schools and school corporation purposes, they must be considered as school moneys; and, as they were actually deposited in the First National Bank of Newton, that bank must be considered as a custodian or depository of the funds for the school corporation. Also as they were deposited in the name of the Kansas Investment & Guaranty Company, with the knowledge and consent of its general manager, Holmes, and with the knowledge and consent of the banking officers, the Kansas Investment & Guaranty Company must also be considered as a custodian or depository of the funds for the school corporation. It was a kind of double or joint custody of such funds by the bank and the investment and guaranty company, and both were liable for such funds,—for their safe-keeping, and for their return or payment whenever called for by Holmes as treasurer of the board of education, or by his successor in office, or by any other person or board legally representing the school corporation, and having the legal authority to call for the same. Holmes and the investment and guaranty company were certainly at all times liable for this money, and therefore, whenever there was any deficit in the school fund caused by

Holmes or the investment and guaranty company drawing the same out of the bank in the name of the investment and guaranty company, any deposit which might be subsequently made by Holmes, or by the investment and guaranty company, would at once inure to the benefit of the school fund, so far at least as to make good any deficit in, or any balance due, such school fund, and would apply instantly in liquidation and satisfaction of such deficit or balance. Therefore, as there was more than enough money deposited in the bank by Holmes and the investment and guaranty company after the execution of the second bond to make up the deficit which existed at the time of the execution of such second bond, we think the sureties on the second bond were liable for any deficit or default which may have occurred or existed at any time subsequent to the execution of such second bond. In all cases where accounts exist between parties, including bank accounts, a cause of action does not exist with reference to each item of the account, but only as to the balance that may be due to one or the other of the parties; and it exists in favor only of that party in whose favor the balance is due. Waffle v. Short, 25 Kan. 503; Tootle v. Wells, 39 Kan. 452, 18 Pac. Rep. 692. And each new item added to the account, in favor of the person against whom the balance is due, operates as payment or partial payment of such balance; and it will generally operate in payment or partial payment of the oldest item of the account not yet paid or satisfied. Shellabarger v. Binns, 18 Kan. 345; 1 Morse, Banks, § 355. Hence, as more than one deficit occurred in the school fund, and in the account between the school corporation and Holmes, and the investment and guaranty company and the bank, one of such deficits existing before the execution of the second bond, and the other occurring subsequently thereto, the deposits made in the bank by Holmes and the investment and guaranty company after the occurrence of the first deficit would certainly operate as a payment and satisfaction of that deficit, even if it were made subsequently to the second deficit.

Other questions have been presented by counsel, but we do not think that they require any comment. The orders and judgments of the court below in both the cases which we have been considering will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

CHALLISS V. MAYOR, ETC., OF THE CITY OF ATCHISON.

JUDGMENT—RES ADJUDICATA—PRIVIES.

1. The term "privity" denotes mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property.

2. A judgment rendered upon personal service, not reversed or vacated, affecting real estate, or some interest therein, in favor of a plaintiff and against a defendant, is binding and conclusive between the same parties, and the privies of such parties.

Error from district court, Atchison county; ROBERT M. EATON, Judge.

This was an action in the court below, brought by Luther C. Challiss against the city of Atchison, its mayor and councilmen, to enjoin them from exercising any corporate jurisdiction or authority over the north half of the north-west quarter of section 7, township 6, range 21, in Atchison county. After the defendant had filed its answer, the case was tried before the court without a jury. The court made and filed the following findings of fact: "(1) That the plaintiff, for more than ten years last past, has been, and still is in part, the owner of the north half of the north-west quarter of section seven, township number six, of range number twenty-one, in the county of Atchison, and state of Kansas, so owning, exceeding the one-half interest thereof, and to such extent interested in said described tract of land. (2) That, for more than ten years last past, the city of Atchison has been a city of the first class, located in Atchison county, state of Kansas, and for many years before had been a city of the second class, and has been incorporated as a city by legislative act on February 12, 1858. (3) Said described 80-acre tract of land adjoins said city of Atchison, as so originally incorporated, on the south thereof; and on February 20, A. D. 1860, George T. Challiss, then the owner thereof, platted the said tract of land as 'Spring Garden Addition to the City of Atchison,' and duly acknowledged it, and on said day caused such plat to be certified, and filed such plat for record in the office of the register of deeds of said Atchison county. Said tract of land is one-half mile long, east and west, by one-quarter of a mile wide, north and south, and was laid off, as platted, into 24 blocks of 28 lots each, with an alley through each block, and streets dividing such blocks. (4) On July 16, 1867, upon written petition theretofore, on June 16, 1867, filed in the office of the county clerk of said Atchison county with the board of county commissioners of said county, signed by said George T. Challiss, W. L. Challis, Luther C. Challis, and James K. Dickson, and verified by their written affidavit thereto attached, representing that they were the owners of a majority of the lots and subdivisions of the said Spring Garden addition, and concerning which they desired action to be taken to have the same declared vacated as such addition, and on said day, by order made therefor, the said board of county commissioners caused due notice of the filing of such petition to be advertised in the Free Press, a daily and weekly newspaper then published in the city of Atchison, in said county, and by public notice posted on the said described tract of land for more than three weeks next following said 16th day of June, A. D. 1867. That said application had been made, and that on July 16, 1867, at 9 o'clock forenoon, the said board of county commissioners would take testimony regarding the occupancy of said described land, and on said day at said time, such notice having been published and posted, and due proof thereof made, said board of county commissioners proceeded to hear the said petitioners, and take testimony upon their said petition. And thereon, it being duly made to appear to the said board of county commissioners that no inhabitants owning any of the soil of said tract, and dwelling upon any definite pieces or parcels of the land thereof of the quantity of five or more acres in a body, protested against such petition, and no protest being made in such respect, the board of county commissioners found the said petition duly sustained upon the hearing. And thereon said board of county commissioners made its certificate, declaring the provisions of section 1 of chapter 128 of the Laws of A. D. 1864 duly applied to said entire 80-acre tract of land, and thereon did describe the entire portion thereof as constituting the entire said Spring Garden addition as thus expunged; and, upon the said lithographic map of said tract so of record in the office of the register of deeds, and upon such hearing presented to said board of county commissioners for investigation, did denote and mark the said entire Spring Garden addition, as to which the said order of the said board made the application of said section one of said act to apply, and as thereby obliterating the survey of said entire Spring Garden addition. And said board of commissioners, on said day, made its certain order upon the records of the board of county commissioners' proceedings of said county, declaring the provisions of said section one of said act to apply to said entire Spring Garden addition tract of land, and thereon that the survey thereof, as such town-site, had been expunged and obliterated upon the written petition of said named petitioners, duly verified by affidavit, and upon due order therefor of said county board, duly advertised and published in said county, and by public notice posted on said land, and upon the hearing thereon had pursuant to such order and notice. And thereon said board of county commissioners did, on said day, forthwith file a duly authenticated certificate of such action and proceedings had, and description and descriptive map of said Spring Garden addition so declared vacated, in the office of the register of deeds of said county, upon the original record of the said plat and filing thereof of such Spring Garden addition, and did cause to be written across the face of such recorded plat, and duly signed by the chairman of said board and county clerk of said county, as follows: 'Expunged by order of the board of county commissioners this 16th day of July, 1867. GEO. STORCH, Chairman. C. W. RUST, County Clerk,'—and which said record and proceedings and certificate and descriptive map have since remained in full force and of record and on file as so then made. (5) At the time said proceedings were had before said county board, the only occupants of said Spring Garden addition tract were said petitioners, George T. Challis and J. K. Hudson, and a colored man by the name of Mills, and such tract had not been previously occupied to any greater extent; and said George T. Challis occupying one block thereof, and said Dickson occupying two or three lots, and said Mills one lot, and said persons, with said other petitioners, owning said entire tract, and same not being otherwise improved, nor any public improvements made thereon. (6) After said July, 1867, the owners and occupants of said tract of land denied their liability for city taxes, but the mayor and council of said city continued to cause said tract of land to be taxed in lots and blocks, and as liable to city taxes, up to and including A. D. 1867, while the owners thereof claimed that their said property was in Shannon township, and not in the city of Atchison, and existed as acre property, and not as lots and blocks; and, in about A. D. 1874, said George T. Challiss, one of the owners of interest in said tract, commenced action as plaintiff in this court against M. Quigg, county treasurer of Atchison county, Kan., Chas. Krebs, as county clerk of said Atchison county, and the mayor and council of the city of Atchison, state of Kansas, as defendants, to enjoin and set aside all taxes theretofore, since A. D. 1867, levied upon said property as lots and blocks, or in said city of Atchison, and to enjoin the further levying of taxes by lots and blocks, or as in said city; and, upon issue thereon duly joined, this court did find the issue for the plaintiff as in his petition alleged, and thereon did adjudge and decree that the several defendants, and their successors in office, should be, and therefrom were, enjoined and barred from setting up or exercising any right to so tax said property so as theretofore done, and thereon giving judgment in favor of said plaintiff, and against said defendants, for all costs of said action, and which said judgment was so rendered and entered on December 31, 1875. And thereafter the said city officials of said city for A. D. 1875 and 1876 caused said property to be assessed and taxed by lot and block subdivisions, and as in said city, and thereon said George T. Challiss, as such owner, about A. D. 1876, commenced another action as plaintiff against M. Quigg, county treasurer of the county of Atchison, and the mayor and council of the city of Atchison, state of Kansas, defendants, to enjoin the sale of the property of said tract for such taxes, on the ground that same was not subject to taxation by lot and block subdivision, but as acres only, and not in said city of Atchison, but in Shannon township only, and to enjoin the further assessing of such property by lot and block subdivisions, or as in said city; and thereon, upon issue duly joined, the said action came on for trial on July 25, 1877, and thereupon the court did consider and adjudge as follows: 'Upon due consideration does find alone upon the ground that said property was so assessed and taxed as lots and blocks, and thereon that such taxation for each year, A. D. 1875 and 1876, was unauthorized, illegal, and void for that reason.' And thereon did consider and adjudge that said M. Quigg, as county treasurer, and his successors in office, should be enjoined and restrained from taking any steps for the collection of such taxes, and did give judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against said defendants for costs of suit, and did so render such judgment without deciding upon the question made as to whether said property was or was not within said city of Atchison. And thereupon the mayor and council of said city of Atchison did not exercise any control or jurisdiction over said territory and the same in any way, and therefrom, until A. D. 1889, said territory and the inhabitants thereof were taxed in Shannon township of said county, and voted therein, and were not taxed, and did not vote as in said city of Atchison, and, in making conveyances of property in said territory, same was described as having been formerly platted and described as in certain lots or blocks of Spring Garden addition, and, in the conveyances of one tract where abutting on street as originally designated on said plat, the description thereof was extended to the center of such original street, and no improvements were made or attempted to be made in said territory by authority of said city, and during all such time the property of such territory was assessed and extended on the tax-roll by description 'as acres and parts of acres in certain localities formerly platted as a part of Spring Garden addition.' (7) In A. D. 1867 the said city of Atchison, as then existing, had a population of five or six thousand people, and increased so that in September, 1888, said city, not counting said Spring Garden addition, had a population of 17,000 to 20,000 people; and additional occupants had been added to said Spring Garden addition tract during the last preceding two or three years, so that the number had increased to from one to two hundred people, mostly residing near together in the north-east corner thereof. (8) On February 28, 1888, the mayor and council of the city of Atchison passed an ordinance, the second section of which provided as follows: 'Sec. 2. Spring Garden addition. The north half of the north-west quarter of section number seven, (7,) township number six, (6,) of range number twenty-one, (21,) in the county of Atchison, and state of Kansas,'—and with a large number of other descriptions, and therein ordaining that the same and each thereof should be added to the city of Atchison, and the limits of said city extended and enlarged so as to include the same, and public notice that the same would be presented to the district court of Atchison county, Kansas, at the next term of said court, was duly given, and a copy of such ordinance, with due proof of such notice being given, was filed in said court on March 30, A. D. 1888, and same remained pending until September 10, 1888, when said court entered its order in the proceedings of said court, 'in the matter of the extension of the corporate limits of the city of Atchison.' * * * It was ordered that the said ordinance be modified and the limits extended and enlarged as designated in said order following, by bringing into said city certain tracts and parcels and pieces of ground adjoining thereto, named and described as follows, to-wit: and then describing as follows as affecting the property in question: 'Spring Garden addition. The north-half of the north-west quarter of section seven, township number six, of range number twenty-one, in the county of Atchison, and state of Kansas.' The plaintiff took no part in such proceedings, and had no notice thereof other than by the passage of such ordinance, and the publication thereof, and the published notice that same would be presented to the district court, as hereinbefore stated; and said Spring Garden addition tract was not at said time, or ever, circumscribed by platted territory, or as taken into said city. (9) On and after September 10, 1888, the mayor and council of said city assumed to exercise jurisdiction over said Spring Garden addition tract as a part of said city, and caused the building of a string of sidewalk, and the grading of a street, and the erection and support of two public electric lights, and exercised police jurisdiction over such territory, and caused the same to be assessed by the city assessor of said city for taxation for 1889, and return for such assessment was made to the county clerk of said county, and the property of said territory for said year 1889 has been placed on the tax-roll of said county as within the city of Atchison, and city taxes, together with state and county taxes, extended against such property as in said city; and since September 10, 1888, the defendants have in every respect exercised jurisdiction, and treated said territory like other territory of the city of Atchison, subject to the control and government of the mayor and council thereof."

Thereon the court made and filed the following conclusions of law: "(1) That the platting and filing for record of the said Spring Garden addition plat made the same a part of the city of Atchison at the expiration of twelve months therefrom. (2) That the said city of Atchison, being an actually existing city at the time such proceedings were had before said county board, their proceedings for the vacation of said Spring Garden addition were without jurisdiction and null and void. (3) That Spring Garden addition has been a part of the city of Atchison since A. D. 1861, and the ordinance for the annexation thereof, and the order and action of this court thereon, on September 10, 1888, was immaterial, and in no wise affected the status of said territory. (4) That said Spring Garden addition was a legal part of the city of Atchison at the commencement of this action; and thereon judgment must be given for the defendants, and against the plaintiff, and for costs of this action." Subsequently, the court rendered judgment against the plaintiff, and in favor of the defendants for all costs. The plaintiff excepts, and brings the case here.

W. W. & W. F. Guthrie, for plaintiff in error. H. C. Solomon, for defendants in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) An ordinance of the city of Atchison which took effect February 29, 1888, attempted to extend the corporate limits of that city so as to include an 80-acre tract adjoining the city, generally known as "Spring Garden Addition," described as the north half of the north-west quarter of section number 7, township number 6, of range number 21, in Atchison county.

On the 14th day of October, 1889, Luther C. Challiss commenced his action to enjoin the official authorities of the city of Atchison from exercising jurisdiction over the real estate. He alleged in his petition that the proceedings of the mayor and council of the city of Atchison, in attempting to extend the limits of Atchison city so as to include Spring Garden addition, were without jurisdiction and void. The trial court, after hearing the evidence, rules that the annexation proceedings of 1888, set forth in the petition, were immaterial, and in no wise affected the status of the real estate. If this had been the only conclusion of law made by the court below, the plaintiff would have been entitled to judgment, because the answer of the defendants admitted the passage, approval, and publication of the ordinance complained of, but denied generally all the other allegations of the petition. The district court, however, ruled that by a plat filed on February 20, 1860, the 80-acre tract in controversy became a part of the city of Atchison as Spring Garden addition; that from that date it had always been embraced within the corporate limits of the city of Atchison, and was a part of such city at the commencement of this action. Therefore the prayer of the petition was denied, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendants, and against the plaintiff for costs. It is evident from the record, and especially from the findings of fact of the trial court, that much testimony was presented and considered by the court not clearly embraced within the issues of the pleadings. The pleadings, however, might be considered as amended so as to embrace the findings found by the trial court. It appears from the findings of fact that in July, 1867, the owners and occupants of the 80-acre tract of land denied the jurisdiction of the officials of Atchison city over the real estate, and in 1874 George T. Challiss, one of the owners of the tract of land, commenced his action in the district court of Atchison county against M. Quigg, the county treasurer of the county, and Charles Krebs, the county clerk of the county, and the mayor and council of the city of Atchison, to enjoin and set aside all taxes levied upon the property as lots and blocks since 1867, and, also, to enjoin the further levy of taxes by lots and blocks upon the real estate. On December 31, 1875, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendants, enjoining them from setting up or exercising any right to tax the real estate as lots or blocks. The officials of Atchison city subsequently caused the said real estate to be assessed by lots and block subdivisions as within the corporate limits of Atchison city. George T. Challiss commenced another action in 1876 against the county treasurer of Atchison county, and the mayor and council of the city of Atchison, to enjoin the sale of the real estate for such taxes, on the ground that the same was not subject to taxation by lots or blocks, but by acres only, and not subject to taxation within the city of Atchison, but in Shannon township only, and, also, to enjoin them from further assessing said property by lots and block subdivisions, or as within the city. On July 25, 1877, judgment was rendered in that action for the plaintiff, and against the defendants, and the court decided that the taxation by the officials of Atchison city for 1875 and 1876 was unauthorized, illegal, and void, and enjoined the county treasurer from taking any steps for the collection of the taxes. After that, the mayor and council of the city of Atchison did not exercise any control or jurisdiction over the real estate in controversy, until after the adoption of the ordinance referred to in the petition. During all that time, the real estate was taxed in Shannon township, and the voters residing thereon voted in Shannon township, and not in Atchison city. There is an inference from the findings of fact that Luther C. Challiss is in privity with George T. Challiss, who recovered the various judgments referred to, but this is not clearly found. It appears that on February 20, 1860, George T. Challiss was the owner of the 80-acre tract of land, and that subsequently he platted it as "Spring Garden Addition." One judgment was rendered on the 31st day of December, 1875, and the other on the 25th day of July, 1877. Luther C. Challiss has been the owner of a part of the 80-acre tract about 10 years. Both of the judgments were rendered more than 10 years before the commencement of this action; one judgment being rendered 14 years before the commencement of this action, and the other 12 years. If the annexation proceedings of 1888 in no wise affected the status of the 80-acre tract, as ruled by the trial court, then the judgments rendered in favor of George T. Challiss, and against the city of Atchison, not having been reversed or vacated, are binding and conclusive against the defendants, not only in favor of George T. Challiss, but also in favor of all in privity with him. If the judgments in favor of George T. Challiss are conclusive, and the annexation proceedings are without force, all of the property owned or claimed by George T. Challiss at the rendition of his judgments cannot be regarded as any part or portion of the city of Atchison, under the platting and records of 1860 or 1861. In this case, this court acts only as a court of appellate jurisdiction, and not as a court of original jurisdiction. The trial court, while deciding that the annexation proceedings of 1888 are immaterial, nevertheless decided against the plaintiff. We shall not pass upon the various questions raised and presented in the briefs which have not been ruled upon by the trial court. It will be time enough to consider these questions when the court below has rendered some decision thereon. Under the circumstances, in order that substantial justice may be done to all the parties, we have concluded it best that a new trial should be granted.

If the plaintiff in this case is in privity with George T. Challiss, who obtained the judgments referred to, or if such judgments in any way protect this plaintiff against the exercise of authority by the officials of Atchison city, then, clearly, the relief prayed for by him must be granted if the annexation proceedings are immaterial or without any force. We more readily perceive the necessity of a new trial because the evidence introduced by the parties is not embraced in the record, and we cannot very well review supposed rulings of the trial court which are not contained in the conclusions of law, nor apparently anywhere else in the record presented to us. The case will be remanded with directions to grant a new trial. All the justices concurring.

CITY OF GIRARD V. BISSELL.

PHYSICIANS—LICENSES.

Section 3 of chapter 40 of the Session Laws of 1881 confers express authority upon cities of the second class to pass an ordinance providing for the levy and collection of a license tax upon doctors, practicing medicine in such cities. Following City of Newton v. Atchison, 31 Kan. 151. 1 Pac. Rep. 288.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Crawford county; J. S. West, Judge.

Arthur Fuller, for appellee.

GREEN, C. The appellant in this case was tried, and found guilty of violating an ordinance of the city of Girard, which provided for a business license tax upon each and every business, occupation, calling, vocation, and profession, operated, carried on, practiced, or maintained, in said city. The case was first tried before the police judge of the city, and appealed to the district court, where the defendant was again found guilty, and fined in the sum of five dollars. The case was tried to the court upon the following agreed statement of facts: "(1) That the said city of Girard, Kan., plaintiff, is a city of the second class, organized under the laws of the state of Kansas, and has been a city of the second class for more than three years last past; (2) that said defendant, O. J. Bissell, was, on the 11th day of September, 1889, and prior thereto, and upon divers other days between that date and the 1st day of December, A. D. 1889, a resident of said city of Girard, and therein engaged in the practice of medicine, as a physician and doctor, without having paid the license tax, and obtained a license from said city therefor; (3) that said defendant was, at the dates above specified, registered as a physician and surgeon in the office of the clerk of Crawford county, Kan., as follows: Date of registration, May 16, 1889; residence, Girard, Crawford county, Kan.; nativity, American; years practice, 43; in Kansas, 6 years; diploma conferred, March, 1847; college, medical department, Willoughby university, Willoughby, Lake county, Ohio." The appellant challenges the power of the city council to pass such an ordinance as the one under which he was convicted in the court below. Section 804 of the General Statutes of 1889, being section 3 of chapter 40 of the Session Laws of 1881, confers express authority upon the city council, in cities of the second class, to levy and collect a license tax on doctors. The ordinance in question makes it unlawful for any person to practice medicine, or to follow the profession of physician or doctor of any kind, without first having paid a license tax of $10 annually. The agreed statement of facts clearly indicates that the appellant comes within the operation of this ordinance. He was engaged in the practice of medicine, as a physician and doctor, and had not paid the license tax.

The question of the authority for such legislation, upon the part of city governments, has long since been settled by this court, and it will not be necessary for us to discuss the matter here. Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, (3d Ed., § 357, note,) has summed the law up in a single sentence: "Unless specially restrained by the constitution, the legislature may provide for the taxing of any occupation or trade, and may confer this power upon municipal corporations." See Campbell v. City of Anthony, 40 Kan. 652, 20 Pac. Rep. 492, City of Newton v. Atchison, 31 Kan. 151, 1 Pac. Rep. 288, and authorities there cited, for a full and elaborate discussion of the question. We recommend an affirmance of the judgment.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

CITY OF SALINA v. COOPER.

CRIMINAL LAW—WITHDRAWAL OF PLEA OF GUILTY —PLEA TO JURISDICTION—APPEAL.

1. Where a defendant was arrested for selling liquor in violation of a city ordinance, and taken before the police judge, and called upon to plead to the complaint filed against him, and admitted that he sold beer in original packages; and, upon said admission, the police judge entered the plea of guilty on his record and adjudged the defendant to pay a fine and costs, and stand committed until such fine and costs were paid; and in a few minutes after the entry of such judgment the defendant asked leave of the court to withdraw the plea of guilty and enter the plea of not guilty, and presented an affidavit stating that when arrested he became very much excited, that there was a large crowd in the court room, that he was not asked by the court if he wanted counsel, nor was he given an opportunity to employ any one, that he was not guilty of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of law or the ordinances of the city, and that he had never admitted that he had sold liquor in violation of law; and the police judge overruled said application, and the case was appealed to the district court, where application was again made to withdraw the plea of guilty, upon a similar showing, and refused; and defendant was again sentenced to pay a fine and costs,—held that, under the showing made, the district court should have permitted the defendant to withdraw the plea of guilty entered by the police judge, and should have allowed the plea of not guilty to be substituted.

2. It is proper for the district court to overrule a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, which substantially raises the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Saline county; R. F. THOMPSON, Judge.

J. G. Mohler, for appellant. W. T. Frazier and Garver & Bond, for appellee.

GREEN, C. This is a criminal appeal from Saline county. The defendant was arraigned in the police court of the city of Salina, a city of the second class, to answer four complaints filed against him, charging him with unlawfully bartering, selling, and giving away intoxicating liquors, contrary to the ordinances of the city. It appears from the record that the defendant pleaded guilty to each one of the complaints, and sentence was duly passed upon him, and entered of record. After conviction and sentence, he filed a motion, supported by affidavit, for leave to withdraw the former pleas of guilty, and enter a plea of not guilty to each complaint. This motion was denied. The case was then appealed to the district court, when application was again made to withdraw the pleas of guilty and enter pleas of not guilty, which was refused. The appellant then interposed his plea to the jurisdiction of the court. The facts, as claimed by the appellant, material to the application for leave to withdraw the pleas of not guilty, as well as the plea to the jurisdiction of the court, are that, when arrested by the city marshal, he was immediately taken before the police judge, who read to him the four complaints, and asked him if he was guilty; that appellant admitted that he sold beer in the city of Salina in the original packages in which they had been shipped into the state, and, upon being pressed to answer whether he was guilty or not, said he was guilty of selling beer in original packages; that, upon making such admission, the police judge accepted the same as a plea of guilty upon each complaint; that, when arrested, he became very much excited, and was not asked by the court if he wanted counsel, neither was he given an opportunity to employ any one to appear for him; that there was a large crowd in the court room, and but a short time was consumed from the period when he was brought before the court until judgment was entered against him in the four cases; that appellant was not guilty of selling intoxicating liquors in violation of law or the ordinances of the city of Salina, and did not admit that he sold intoxicating liquor in violation of law or the ordinances of the city; that he was and is a citizen of the state of Missouri, and agent of the Ferd Heim Brewing Company of Kansas City, Mo., a corporation of the state of Missouri, duly chartered under the laws of said state; that the business of said corporation is to brew, manufacture, and sell lager beer, an intoxicating liquor; that said corporation brewed a lot of lager beer, and put it in original packages, and sent a carload of their product from their brewery, in Kansas City, in the state of Missouri, in original packages, as made up at said brewery, where the same was manufactured, to Salina, in Saline county, Kan., in charge of the defendant, as agent for said importers, the Ferd Heim Brewing Company; that said goods were in original packages in a store-room leased by defendant, as agent of said brewing company; that all the selling, bartering, or giving away by defendant of beer in Salina was the selling and bartering of the same, in original packages, and lawful under the laws and constitution of the United States. The plea to the jurisdiction was also overruled, and the defendant was thereupon sentenced, upon the plea of guilty, entered in the police court, and adjudged to pay a fine of $50, and stand committed until such fine and costs were paid. The appellant asks a reversal of this sentence and judgment.

1. The first assignment of error which we shall notice is the action of the court below in overruling and denying the motion of the appellant for leave to withdraw the pleas of guilty, entered by the police judge, and enter the pleas of not guilty. The cases were on appeal from the police court, and the district court seemed to have considered them just as they came from the police judge, with the plea of guilty standing against the defendant in each case. Was it manifest error for the court to refuse this request? It appears from the uncontradicted statement of the appellant that he had been arraigned before the police judge in the presence of a large crowd; was very much excited, and was not asked whether he wanted an attorney, neither was he given an opportunity to secure one; and claimed that the police judge had no right to construe what he said, in regard to the sale of beer in original packages, as an admission that he was guilty, or that he intended to say that he was guilty, as charged in each of the complaints; that everything was done so hurriedly, and under so much excitement, that he did not know what was going on or being done, and was not aware that he had had a hearing until he sent for and procured counsel; that he was entirely innocent of the offenses charged against him. We think the court below, upon this showing, should have sustained the motion, and permitted the defendant to withdraw the former pleas of guilty, entered against him by the police judge. All fairness should be accorded to a defendant in a criminal case, in every stage of an examination or trial. No advantage should be taken on account of his being in court without counsel. It always should be one of the first duties of a court, where a defendant is charged with a crime, and is about to be called upon to plead, to inquire whether he has or is able to procure counsel, and if not, and he desires it, to see that he has an attorney to represent him. When a plea of guilty has been entered against a defendant, who is without counsel, and there is a question as to whether he intended to plead guilty, the court should permit the withdrawal of such plea, in furtherance of the substantial rights of the defendant. Under the state of facts disclosed by the record, it was clearly the duty of the court to accord such a right to the appellant in this case. The law has been well stated in the case of Cochrane v. State, 6 Md. 400. LE GRAND, C. J., said: "It must be confessed that there is no little indistinctness in the reported cases whether the rights to withdraw the plea of not guilty and to demur belongs unconditionally to the prisoner, or is a matter of favor to be granted by the court. We think, however, that the better opinion, is clearly the justice in the matter, that the prisoner has the right." In the case of Myers v. State, 18 N. E. Rep. 42, the supreme court of Indiana held that a judgment should be set aside which had been rendered against a defendant on a plea of guilty, upon a proper showing that the sheriff had told the defendant that the state's attorney would accept a sentence of two years, if defendant would plead guilty; that the sheriff advised him to do so; that he was ignorant, and was arraigned without the privilege of consulting counsel; and that he was innocent. The court, in the course of the opinion, said: "The rule is that courts may exercise a discretion in allowing or refusing leave to withdraw pleas of guilty, and that an appellate court will not interfere unless there has been an abuse of such discretion. We think that this is a case in which this court is justified in holding that the court below ought to have exercised its discretion in favor of appellant, or, in the language of the law, that the court below abused the discretion which it was authorized to exercise. No possible harm could have resulted, or can now result, to the state by allowing appellant to withdraw his plea of guilty, and substitute a plea of not guilty. If he is innocent of the charge, as he has all the while, and under all circumstances, claimed, he ought to have a fair opportunity for a defense. If he is guilty, the state may have an opportunity to establish that guilt under a plea of not guilty. In the conclusion we have reached here we are sustained by the authorities." As to the authorities sustaining this doctrine, see Nicholls v. State, 5 N. J. Law, 539; People v. McCrory, 41 Cal. 458; People v. Scott, 59 Cal. 341; Swang v. State, 2 Cold. 212; State v. Hale, 44 Iowa, 96; State v. Stephens, 71 Mo. 535.

2. The next assignment of error is in overruling and denying the plea of the appellant to the jurisdiction of the court. We see no error in this. All that was set out in the plea was plainly a matter of defense, and could be shown when the cases were tried upon their merits, and the plea did not properly challenge the jurisdiction of the court. It is unnecessary to notice the other assignments of error, as our view of the first complaint considered will necessitate a reversal of the judgment of the court below. We recommend a reversal of the judgment in this case.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

APPEAL IN CRIMINAL CASES—STAT OF EXECUTION
—BOND.

1. Where a defendant is convicted for a felony, bailable under the statute, and he takes an appeal from his conviction within 30 days after the judgment is rendered against him, and files the transcript of such conviction with the clerk of the supreme court, and makes his application to the supreme court, or any justice thereof, within 90 days after his appeal is taken, the execution of the judgment will be stayed by the order of the supreme court, or any justice thereof, upon the appellant giving bond in such sum as the court or justice shall prescribe; the bond to be approved by the court, or any justice thereof.

2. In default of giving the bond prescribed by the court, or a justice thereof, the appellant will remain in the custody of the sheriff of the county where he is convicted, during the pendency of the appeal, until the further order of the supreme court.

HORTON, C. J. At the April term of the district court of Shawnee county, for 1890, Rough Ready was convicted of unlawfully and feloniously taking, stealing, and carrying away from the person of William Glaze, with violence, and against his will, $35. He was sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary of the state at hard labor for 15 years, commencing on the 26th day of April, 1890. Soon after sentence, he was taken by the sheriff to the penitentiary, and placed in charge of the warden thereof. Ready appealed from his conviction and sentence of the district court to this court within 30 days after the judgment was rendered against him. He filed his transcript, as prescribed by the statute, with the clerk of this court, and made his application to the court within 90 days after his appeal was taken for a stay of the judgment and sentence, and asked that he be permitted to give a bond in such sum as the court should order. His bond was fixed, but he has been unable to give or procure the same. It is insisted under the provisions of the statute, in default of giving a bond in the sum prescribed by this court, that he should remain in the custody of the sheriff until the further order of this court, and it is further insisted that his restraint and confinement by the warden of the penitentiary of the state, during the pendency of his appeal in this court, is unlawful, and contrary to the provisions of the statute. Paragraph 5349 of the General Statutes of 1889 reads: "An appeal to the supreme court, from a judgment of conviction, shall stay the execution, when the judgment is for a fine, or fine and costs only. In all other cases, the execution of the judgment shall be stayed by the order of the supreme court, or any justice thereof, upon the appellant giving a bond in such sum as said court or justice shall prescribe, said bond to be approved by said court, or any justice thereof; and in default thereof the defendant shall remain in the custody of the sheriff until the further order of the supreme court; provided, that, when the conviction is for an offense not bailable, the supreme court, or a justice thereof, shall make an order for the safe-keeping of the appellant in the jail of the county in which the offense was alleged to have been committed, or, in case of no sufficient jail in such county, then in the jail of the county nearest having a sufficient jail; and provided, further, that the appellant availing himself of the benefits of this act shall take his appeal within thirty (30) days after the judgment is rendered, and shall file the transcript with the clerk of the supreme court, and shall make his application to the supreme court, or justice thereof, within ninety (90) days after the appeal is taken." Under the provisions of this section, Ready was entitled, upon his default in giving the bond prescribed by the court, to remain in the custody of the sheriff of Shawnee county until the further order of this court, while his appeal was pending. It appears however, from an opinion handed down at this term of the court, that his appeal has been disposed of. The judgment of the district court has been affirmed, and therefore this court, at this time, cannot release or discharge him from imprisonment. The execution of the judgment rendered against him must be complied with, in accordance with the order of the district court. The petitioner will recover his costs. All the justices concurring.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—SALES IN ORIGINAL PACKAGES.

Under the decision of the supreme court of the United States in the case of Lelsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, an importer of intoxicating liquors, into any state from any other state or country, could, by himself or agent, prior to the passage of the "Wilson bill," sell such liquors so long as they remained in the unbroken packages in which they existed during their transportation, without regard to the laws of the state into which such liquors were imported, and without regard to the size of the packages.

Appeal from district court, Chase county; FRANK DOSTER, Judge.

Madden Bros., for appellant. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and F. P. Cochran, for appellee.

VALENTINE, J. This is an appeal by the defendant W. H. Winters from an order of the judge of the twenty-fifth judicial district, made at chambers in Marion county, on July 25, 1889, sentencing the defendant to pay a fine of $100, and to be imprisoned in the county jail of Chase county for the period of 30 days, and to pay costs, for an alleged contempt in violating an order of injunction granted by such judge at chambers in Marion county on July 1, 1890, restraining the defendant from selling intoxicating liquors at Strong City in Chase county. The injunction was allowed and granted without notice to the defendant upon an ex parte application by the county attorney of Chase county, and it reads as follows: "State of Kansas, county of Chase, in the district court of said county. State of Kansas vs. William H. Winters and Mary O'Byrne. It being shown to me by verified petition of the plaintiff that the defendant Mary O'Byrne is the owner of the certain frame building standing and being on lots 6 and 8 in block 6 in Carter's addition to the city of Strong City, Chase county, Kansas, and that she authorizes and knowingly permits the defendant William H. Winters to occupy and use the same for the illegal sale, barter, and gift of intoxicating liquors, and as the resort of persons for the drinking of intoxicating liquors, and that the defendant William H. Winters occupies and uses said premises for all of such illegal purposes, and that neither of said defendants had authority under the law to sell intoxicating liquors, and that, by reason of all such illegal sales and said other illegal practices, the said premises have become and are a common nuisance: It is therefore ordered that the defendants, and each of them, and their agents, clerks, servants, and lessees, be enjoined from keeping open, or permitting to be kept open, the said premises for said uses, and from bartering, selling, or giving away, or keeping for barter, sale, or gift, or permitting to be drunk thereon, any intoxicating liquors without a permit so to do from the probate judge of the said county of Chase. And it is further ordered that, before this order takes effect, the plaintiff execute a bond to said defendants, conditioned according to law, in the sum of one hundred dollars. Witness my hand, at chambers, in Marion county, Kansas, this July 1st, 1890. FRANK DOSTER, Judge of the 25th Judicial District." Afterwards, and on July 10, 1890, said judge, at chambers, in Marion county, upon a letter of the county attorney of Chase county informing him that the defendant was selling intoxicating liquors in Chase county, issued an order to the defendant Winters requiring him to show cause before the judge at his chambers in Marion county on July 12, 1890, why he, the defendant, should not be adjudged guilty of contempt in violating the said order of injunction. The defendant made a special appearance before the judge on the day last above mentioned, and moved to discharge the order requiring him to show cause, for various reasons, including a want of jurisdiction on the part of the judge, which motion was overruled. The judge then required the county attorney of Chase county to file a written complaint, which the county attorney did, and the defendant again moved to be discharged for various reasons, which motion was overruled; and the judge then, over the objections of the defendant, ordered an immediate hearing upon such complaint without any other or further notice, writ, summons, or process, and the hearing was then had. Upon this hearing the following facts were agreed to by both the parties as constituting "the facts of this case, and all the facts therein:" "It is agreed and admitted that the property that was sold by the defendant was the property of the Pabst Brewing Company, a corporation duly and legally incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Wisconsin; that the only sales, and offers to sell, made by the defendant, were made as agent duly and legally appointed for the Pabst Brewing Company; that the only sales, and offers to sell, of liquors were in sealed cases, and as the same were manufactured and put up by the Pabst Brewing Company of the state of Wisconsin, and were imported by them upon railways from the state of Wisconsin to the state of Kansas to the defendant, their agent; that no cases or kegs sold or offered for sale were broken or opened upon the premises; that as soon as the same was purchased by parties it was removed from the premises; that none of such sales, or offers to sell, were made to minors or persons in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and that none of said liquors so sold, or offered for sale, were drunk or used upon the premises; that the defendant is a resident of the United States, and made each and all of the sales he did make as the agent and employe of said Pabst Brewing Company aforesaid, and in no other way; that said defendant Mary O'Byrne is the owner of the premises in controversy, and that she has never been served with any injunction in this case; that the defendant, in making the sales that he did make, made the same under the faith and belief that he had a legal right to sell intoxicating liquors, and did not intend by such sales to violate any order of the court, and construed the order of the court to mean a restraint of illegal sales, and not of sales legally made under the law; that all the articles so sold by the defendant were the manufactured articles of intoxicating liquors made and manufactured by said Pabst Brewing Company, and that each of said cases was substantially made of wood, and each of them contained twenty-four quarts of beer, and each bottle of beer corked, and the cork fastened in with a metallic cap wire, bound and covered with tin-foil, and each case was sealed with a metallic seal; that the beer in all of the kegs was corked up firmly in wooden kegs, and transported by railway as aforesaid; and that to open said cases the said metallic seals had to be broken, and to open said kegs of beer aforesaid the same had to be broken or bored with an auger; that the only way and manner that the same was sold by the defendant was in said kegs and cases aforesaid; that in the same car in which the cases of beer referred to were shipped and put up and loaded on the cars and received by the defendant were also single bottles of beer firmly corked and protected as above stated and wrapped in paper, as well as pint, half pint, and quart bottles of whisky wrapped in paper, each constituting a single package by itself, received as such, and sold as such before and since the injunction was granted, and in no other manner."

The attorney general, in his brief filed in this court, uses the following among other language: "The substantial question in this case is whether or not the defendant Winters was protected by the decision of the supreme court of the United States in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, in the sales of single bottles of beer and single pint, half pint, and quart bottles of whisky, in violation of the prohibitory laws of the state of Kansas, by reason of the fact that such single bottles of beer and whisky were imported into the state of Kansas in the same car in which cases of beer, shipped and sold in accordance with the usages of the wholesale liquor trade, were imported. These single bottles of beer and whisky were simply wrapped in paper, and thus imported and sold by the defendant Winters under the guise of 'original packages.' The sales were made after the decision in the said case of Laisy v. Hardin, and prior to the passage of the 'Wilson bill.' The defendant had no druggist's permit, and the sales were not made for medical, scientific, or mechanical purposes under the provisions of the prohibitory law.

We think the attorney general is correct with respect to the question to be considered and decided. It has seldom if ever been considered in any civilized country that the same freedom with respect to the traffic in and the use of intoxicating liquors should be allowed as is freely permitted with respect to nearly all the other kinds of property subject to traffic or use. Intoxicating liquors are never considered as coming within the category of the necessities of life, nor even as good or wholesome food or drink, or proper articles for general consumption. They are never considered like wheat or corn, or boots or shoes, or any of the other harmless articles of traffic or use which need no regulation or restriction. They are considered almost as outlaws. In their unrestricted sale and use they are pernicious, deleterious, baneful. They operate as tempters and seducers, alluring people into vice and crime, and constitute a perpetual menace and threat against the peace and quiet and good order and welfare of society. Their proper classification would rather be with such dangerous articles as dynamite, nitro-glycerine, venomous reptiles, dangerous animals, poisons, articles containing the germs of infectious diseases, and "infernal machines," than with any of the harmless or innocuous articles of commerce. Hence, in all civilized countries, they are considered as the proper subjects of regulation, restriction, and, to some extent, prohibition; and all this has generally been considered as coming within the proper scope of the police power of the several states or governments. In this state the sale and use of intoxicating liquors are regulated, restricted, and, to some extent, prohibited by law; and the supreme court of the United States has held such law to be valid. Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 201, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273. But, in a subsequent case from Iowa, that court decided that the liquor laws of the several states will not apply to sales made by the importer or his agent of intoxicating liquors imported from other states or countries, so long as such liquors remain in the unbroken packages in which they existed during their transportation. Laisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681. This decision was made upon the supposed authority of that provision of the federal constitution which gives to congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes." Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8. This court does not agree with that court upon this question. State v. Fulker, 43 Kan. 237, 22 Pac. Rep. 1020. But it is our duty to follow that court, and we shall do so. In the Laisy v. Hardin decision, and in other decisions, the words "original package" are used. These words are not found in the constitution, but still it is thought necessary that we should ascertain what was really meant or intended by their use. Evidently the "original package" referred to in those decisions was and is the package of the importer as it existed at the time of its transportation from one state into the other. The whole subject has relation to commerce and to interstate commerce, and to nothing else; hence the words must mean the package as transported by the importer himself, or by his agent, either a common carrier or a private carrier for the purposes of commerce, and therefore it would seem that it is for the importer to determine how large or how small the packages should be, and the manner in which the package should be made up, and the materials used in making it up. Certainly an importer has as much right, under the federal constitution, to import into a state and sell against its laws a single gill of intoxicating liquor as he has to import into such state and sell against its laws a gallon or a barrel or a hogshead of the same interdicted article. In some cases of interstate commerce it would scarcely seem necessary that any package should be used. For instance, in the transportation of live-stock, the individual articles transported might be horses, cows, sheep, or hogs, and these articles might be very large or very small, even little pigs, and none of them placed in packages. In the present case the liquors transported and sold we suppose were never in any other packages than the ones in which they were sold; hence these packages must have been "original packages." In the License Cases, 5 How., Mr. Justice CATRON used the following language: "To hold that the state license was void, as respects spirits coming in from other states as articles of commerce, would open the door to an almost entire evasion, as the spirits might be introduced in the smallest divisible quantities that the retail trade would require, the consequence of which would be that the dealers in New Hampshire would sell only spirits produced in other states, and that the products of New Hampshire would find an unrestrained market in the neighboring states having similar license laws to those of New Hampshire." Page 608. In the same cases Mr. Justice WOODBURY used the following language: "If the proposition was maintainable that, without any legislation by congress as to the trade between the states, [except that in coasting, as before explained, to prevent smuggling,] anything imported from another state, foreign or domestic, could be sold of right in the package in which it was imported, not subject to any license or internal regulation of a state, then it is obvious that the whole license system may be evaded and nullified, either from abroad or from a neighboring state. And the more especially can it be done from the latter, as imports may be made in bottles of any size, down to half a pint, of spirits or wines; and, if its sale cannot be interfered with and regulated, the retail business can be carried on in any small quantity, and by the most irresponsible and unsuitable persons, with perfect impunity." Pages 625, 626. In the case of Lelsy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 159, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, Mr. Justice GRAY, in his dissenting opinion, which was concurred in by Justices HARLAN and BREWER, used the following language: "If the statutes of a state, restricting or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its territory, are to be held inoperative and void as applied to liquors sent or brought from another state, and sold by the importer in what are called 'original packages,' the consequence must be that an inhabitant of any state may, under the pretext of interstate commerce, and without license or supervision of any public authority, carry or send into, and sell in, any or all of the other states of the Union intoxicating liquors of whatever description, in cases or kegs, or even in single bottles or flasks, despite any legislation of those states on the subject, and although his own state should be the only one which had not enacted similar laws." Pages 159, 160, 135 U. S., and page 702, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. In the case of In re Beine, 42 Fed. Rep. 545, Judge CALDWELL used the following language: "A question was raised in the argument as to whether the smallness of some of the packages sold by some of the petitioners did not deprive them of the protection given to vendors of original packages. Single bottles of beer and whisky packed and sealed or nailed up in boxes made of pastboard or wood, were shipped and sold in that shape. The boxes containing one bottle were not packed in any other box, but shipped singly and separately as so many distinct and separate packages. It is not perceived why, in the absence of a regulation by congress to the contrary, the importer may not determine for himself the form and size of the packages he puts up for export. The idea that small packages of liquor cannot be treated as original packages, because they are small, springs from the conviction back of it that liquor in any form, or in any sized package, is not a legitimate subject of commerce. That question is put at rest by the decision of the supreme court of the United States until congress shall act. As long as packages of liquor in any form or size may lawfully be sold by the importer or his agent in a prohibition state, the size of the package is not of much consequence. Whether the package be large or small, the practical effect will be to seriously impair the efficacy of all laws intended to protect society from the evils of the liquor traffic." Pages 546, 547. See, also, to the same effect, Collins v. Hills, 77 Iowa, 181, 183, 41 N. W. Rep. 571. We know of no opinion or dictum of any court or judge that in the slightest degree conflicts with the foregoing expressions of opinion regarding the size or form of "original packages;" and in all probability there is none. It has also been suggested, but not by the attorney general, that the district judge in this case intended not only to restrain the defendant from making illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, but also to restrain him from making legal sales thereof. Such a thing can hardly be supposed; but, if it should be, still if a sovereign state through its highest instrumentalities, its legislature, its executive, and its highest courts, has no power or jurisdiction to prevent an importer from selling intoxicating liquors in original packages brought from another state or country, we suppose that a district judge at chambers hardly has such power. The order and judgment of the judge of the court below will be reversed. All the justices concurring.

ASSIGNMENT BY FIRM FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

1. The voluntary assignment by a firm of the partnership estate for the benefit of their creditors, without reservations, preferences, or stipulations, exacting full releases from participating creditors, and which is valid in other respects, will not be rendered void because the individual property of the partners is not included in the assignment.

2. A provision in an assignment conveying partnership property, excepting such articles as may be exempt by law, is nugatory, and to be treated as surplusage, and, where it does not appear that any part of the property was set apart or reserved for the benefit of the assignors, it will not invalidate the assignment.

Error from district court, Lyon county; CHARLES B. GRAVES, Judge.

Garnishment proceeding. The matter was submitted to the court upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"In an action pending in the district court of Lyon county, Kan., wherein H. J. McFarland, assignee, was plaintiff, and Anna Bate and M. K. Moulton, partners, doing business as Bate & Moulton, were defendants, after judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the return of an execution wholly unsatisfied issued on such judgment, an order of garnishment was issued to M. C. Little, and, in order to determine his liability as such garnishee, the following facts were agreed upon: 'It is agreed, for the purpose of having the liability of M. C. Little, as garnishee in the above-entitled action, (H. J. McFarland, Assignee; v. Anna Bate and M. K. Moulton, Partners, doing business as Bate & Moulton,) determined, that the plaintiff abovenamed did, in the Lyon county district court, obtain judgment against said defendants on May 17, 1887, in the sum of $581.20. That the same is still wholly unpaid. Plaintiff's judgment was for a partnership debt against the firm of Bate & Moulton. That the debt on which said judgment was rendered accrued prior to December 10, 1886. That on December 10, 1886, said defendants executed the paper hereto attached, (deed of assignment.) That at the time of the execution of said paper the defendant Anna Bate was the owner of lot 102 on Constitution street, Emporia, Lyon county, Kan., on which were situated two dwelling-houses, the same being independent of each other, and arranged for the purpose of being used separately and independently of each other as residences, and were so used, one of them being used by said Anna Bate as a homestead, and the other occupied by a tenant, who paid her rent therefor; and the said dwelling so occupied by said tenant, for some time after said pretended deed of assignment was executed, with the appurtenances thereto, was of the value of $2,000. That, thereafter, said Anna Bate, on February 8, 1887, conveyed said last-mentioned dwelling, by deed executed, to Geo. R. Bate. That no portion of the proceeds of such property, either in rents or purchase money, ever came to the hands of said Little, but that the whole of the said purchase money was applied to the payment of the individual debts of said Anna Bate. That, some time prior to the execution of the deed of assignment hereto attached, the said Anna Bate was informed that said dwelling-house was subject to the payment of her debts. That afterwards, and at the time of the execution of said deed of assignment, she left the said dwelling out of said deed of assignment, because she desired to reserve the same for her own use, for her support, and for the payment of her individual debts. That, at the time of the execution of said deed of assignment said Anna Bate was individually indebted to divers persons in the sum of $2,800, which sum far exceeded the value of all her individual property not exempt under the statute. That at the creditors' meeting held according to law, under said deed of assignment, December 30, 1886, the plaintiff appeared by the present counsel herein, and, with a full knowledge of all the above facts, voted for said Little at the election of assignee. That at the time of said assignment the said firm, with both the said members thereof, were insolvent.

"Copy of paper referred to: 'Know all men by these presents, that whereas, Bate & Moulton, a firm composed of Mrs. Anna Bate and Mrs. M. K. Moulton, of the city of Emporia, county of Lyon, and state of Kansas, are indebted to divers persons in considerable sums of money, which they are unable to pay in full, and said firm are insolvent, and not able to pay their debts in full, and they are desirous to convey all their property for the benefit of all their creditors, under the laws of the state of Kansas in regard to assignment for the benefit of creditors: Therefore we, the said firm of Bate & Moulton, composed of Mrs. Anna Bate and Mrs. M. K. Moulton, in consideration of the premises and for one dollar to us in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby confessed, paid by M. C. Little of the city of Emporia, aforesaid, have granted, bargained, sold, assigned, transferred, and set over, and by these presents do bargain, sell, assign, transfer, and set over, unto the said M. C. Little all our stock of millinery and fancy goods, underwear, gloves, hosiery, embroidery, etc., and our entire stock in trade contained in our place of business, being a store-room in Fluke's block, in said city of Emporia, known as "Bate & Moulton's Millinery Store," also the counters, shelves, show-cases, stoves, and fixtures and furniture contained in said store, being and including the entire stock in trade and fixtures, and all articles used by said firm in carrying on their business, and belonging to said firm, except such articles as may be exempt by law from levy and sale on execution. All this, however, subject to a certain chattel mortgage to F. W. Drake, of Emporia, to secure one hundred and sixty-four dollars, and also one chattel mortgage to Ella C. Drake, to secure eighty dollars, both dated December 8, 1886. To have and to hold the assigned property unto the said M. C. Little in trust for the uses and purposes herein expressed, and under the said laws of the state of Kansas—First. To pay the costs and charges of these presents, and the lawful expenses of executing the trust herein created. Second. To sell and dispose of said assigned property in pursuance of law, and the orders of the proper court, and out of the proceeds pay the costs and expenses, aforesaid, and distribute and pay the remainder to the creditors of the said firm of Bate & Moulton for all liabilities and debts which said firm may be owing: provided, however, that if there shall not be sufficient funds with which to pay all said debts in full, then the same are to be paid ratably, and in proportion to amount of each. Third. The residue of said proceeds, if any there be, after paying all said debts in full, the said M. C. Little is to pay to said firm or their assigns. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands this 10th day of December, A. D. 1886. BATE & MOULTON. MRS. ANNA BATE. MRS. M. K. MOULTON.'

"State of Kansas, Lyon county—ss.: On this 10th day of December, A. D. 1886, personally came before me, a notary public in and for said county and state, Bate & Moulton, and Mrs. Anna Bate, and Mrs. M. K. Moulton, to me personally known to be the same persons and firm who executed the foregoing instrument, and duly acknowledged the execution of the same. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and notarial seal the day and year last above written. [Seal.] J. F. DRAKE, Notary Public. My commission expires Nov. 4th, 1888."

"I hereby accept the trust created by the above instrument, and agree faithfully to perform the same. M. C. LITTLE. Dated Emporia, Kansas, December 10th, 1886."

"It is further agreed that said garnishee had in his hands certain funds arising from the sale of personal property belonging to the firm of Bate & Moulton, and conveyed to him by the foregoing deed of assignment, and was not otherwise chargeable to him as garnishee."

The questions submitted to the court were whether or not the failure to include the individual property of one of the partners, not exempt from execution, would, under the circumstances, invalidate the deed of assignment; and, if so, was the plaintiff estopped to claim it because he participated in the election of the assignee at the creditors' meeting? The court found generally in favor of the garnishee, and entered judgment in his favor for costs. The plaintiff asks a reversal of that judgment.

Cunningham & McCarty, for plaintiff in error. M. C. Simpson and Kellogg & Sedgwick, for defendants in error.

JOHNSTON, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The deed of assignment is assailed upon two grounds: First, because of a reservation in the instrument, in these words: "Except such articles as may be exempt by law from levy and sale on execution;" and, second, the failure to include in the deed the individual property of Anna Bate, one of the assignors. As to the first objection, it may be said that only partnership property was conveyed, or intended to be conveyed, by the deed of assignment, and, as none of it was or is exempt, there was no reservation for the benefit of the assignors; and it does not appear that any portion of the partnership property was set apart or reserved for the benefit of the assignors. It has already been decided that such an exception is nugatory, and will not invalidate the assignment. Dodd v. Hills, 21 Kan. 707; Guptil v. McFee, 9 Kan. 30. As to the second objection, it appears that the assignment only covered the partnership property, and that one of the partners had individual property beyond what was exempt from the process of creditors. It is contended that the exclusion of the individual property from the assignment was sufficient to invalidate it. There is nothing deceptive or misleading in the terms of the instrument; nor do we find anything indicating an intentional fraud upon any of the creditors. The whole partnership property was surrendered without reservation or preference. All the creditors of the assignors were free to participate in the assigned assets, and no releases were exacted from those who did participate, nor any conditions imposed which would debar or hamper them from proceeding against the individual or other property not included in the assignment. It is true, it was only a partial assignment, but such a transfer is not necessarily invalid. Its validity depends upon the statute regulating assignments, and it is well settled that, unless prohibited by statute, the debtor may assign a portion of his property for the benefit of his creditors, if all may unconditionally participate in that which is assigned, and if that which is not assigned is open and available to the remedies of all creditors. Estabrook v. Messersmith, 18 Wis. 572; Carpenter v. Underwood, 19 N. Y. 520; Bates v. Ableman, 13 Wis. 644; Burrill, Assignm. 203, 232, 272; Bump, Fraud. Conv. 369, 391. The same principle has been sustained where it was held that the assignment of all partnership property for the benefit of creditors is not invalid by reason of the fact that the individual property was not also assigned. Auley v. Ostermann, 25 N. W. Rep. 657; Blair v. Black, 9 S. E. Rep. 1033; Trumbo v. Hamel, 8 S. E. Rep. 83; Blake v. Faulkner, 18 Ind. 47; Ex parte Hopkins, 2 N. E. Rep. 587.

We are cited to several cases holding against the validity of partial assignments, but these authorities are based on statutes requiring that all the property or estate of the creditor shall be conveyed, or where one of the conditions of the deed making a partial assignment was that the creditors accepting its terms should give releases in full of their several debts.

It may now be considered to be established by the weight of authority that a partial assignment, which exacts releases from accepting creditors, and deprives them from access to the residue not assigned, is invalid. In this case, however, no releases were required, no preferences given, nor any reservations made, and our statutes do not prohibit partial assignments; and hence the cases cited do not apply here. Although our statute relating to assignments requires that such property as is conveyed shall be for the benefit of all the creditors of the assignor in proportion to their respective claims, it does not require that all the estate of the debtor shall be assigned. Gen. St. 1889, par. 342. The legislative purpose is further indicated in the subsequent paragraphs of that act, wherein it is provided that only an inventory of the property assigned shall be filed, and not an inventory of all the debtor's estate; and also that the affidavit attached to the inventory shall be likewise limited. The court proceeded upon this theory when it held that, in the absence of any statute prescribing the manner of closing up partnership estates, a surviving partner might make an assignment of partnership property for the benefit of the creditors of the firm. Shattuck v. Chandler, 40 Kan. 516, 20 Pac. Rep. 225. It is certain that the surviving partner could not assign the individual assets of his deceased partner, and equally certain that the individual property is subject to the payment of the unsatisfied claims of the firm's creditors. We conclude that partial assignments are not prohibited by our statutes, and that the assignment of a firm need not necessarily include the individual estates of the partners. So far as the record shows, the action of the assignors was fair and honest, the assignment was openly made by them, and it purported to convey partnership property only. There was nothing in the instrument which tended to show that it included the individual property; nor does it appear that the individual property not assigned was concealed or placed beyond the reach of the plaintiff or any other creditor. The unassigned residue was accessible to all the creditors, and the record shows that all of this residue has been taken to satisfy the claims of the individual creditors of Mrs. Bate. The assignment upon its face is valid, and we find nothing in the record which renders it void. The judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the justices concurring.

(No. 13,172.)

MANDAMUS—QUESTIONS DETERMINED—PARTIES.

1. On proceedings for a writ of mandate to compel the officers of a school-district to rebuild, on the old site, a school-house destroyed by fire, as they had been directed by the electors of the district in school meeting assembled, the officers cannot raise the question of the paramount title to the site, as its possession by the district for a number of years for school purposes is prima facie evidence of ownership in the district.

2. While the question of title could not be litigated in this mandamus proceeding, the court below properly admitted evidence showing the dedication of the site to school-house purposes, and its possession by the district, so as to enable the court to determine whether or not, in its discretion, it should award the writ.

3. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1086, which provides for the issuance of a writ of mandate "on the application of the party beneficially interested," a tax-payer of the district, whose children attend the school, is a proper party to apply for a writ of mandate to compel the compliance of the officers of the district with a vote of the electors as to the location of the school-house site. Overruling Linden v. Alameda Co., 45 Cal. 7.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Tehama county; CHARLES P. BRAYNARD, Judge.

WORKS, J. This is a proceeding for a writ of mandate to the board of school trustees of Red Bank school-district, in Tehama county, and the members thereof—A. W. Coffman, C. L. Allen, and Alfred McClure—commanding them to immediately proceed with the erection and construction of a school building upon a certain lot within said school-district, of which the district is alleged to be the owner, and to complete the same within a reasonable time. The verified petition for the writ states, among other things, substantially, the following: That some years prior to October 14, 1886, the district had built and occupied a school-house on a lot therein described; that on October 14, 1886, said school-house had been destroyed by fire; that in April, 1887, the board of trustees called a meeting of the qualified electors of the district, of whom petitioner is one, to be held on the 25th day of April, 1887, "for the purpose of determining a proposition to change the location of the school-house of said district from the said old site to a position a little less than one-half mile south thereof;" that due notice of such meeting was given by posting notices as required by law; that said meeting was held at the time and place appointed, and was organized by electing J. G. Allnut, chairman, and A. W. Coffman, being the clerk of said district, acted as secretary; that it was resolved by a majority vote of the electors at said meeting that the site of the school-house should not be changed, but should remain upon the lot occupied by the house which had been destroyed by fire, and that the trustees of the district be "instructed to erect any school buildings or structures, contemplated or proposed to be erected, upon the location, and at the place above described, and not elsewhere," and that the minutes of the meeting be entered upon the records of said district; that the secretary, Coffman, neglected and refused to keep the minutes of the meeting, or to enter them upon the records of the district; that bonds of said district had been issued and sold for the purpose of raising money to build a school-house in and for the district, and that upon the 1st day of December, 1887, the proceeds of the sale of the bonds, amounting to $810, were deposited in the county treasury of Tehama county, to the credit of the district, and subject to be applied to the building of such school-house; that petitioner has demanded of the board and the several members thereof that they "proceed with the erection and construction of said school-house upon the premises known as the 'Old Site,'" but that they have neglected and refused so to do, and, contrary to the instructions and resolutions of said meeting, are proceeding to build a school-house at another and different place, and to use and apply the funds aforesaid for that purpose; that by the refusal of the board to build on the old site, and the building in a different place, taxation upon the property of the district will be increased, the property of plaintiff will be injuriously affected, and the school privileges and opportunities of the children of plaintiff will be greatly delayed and impeded, and the plaintiff is, and will be, greatly and irreparably injured and damaged, he being the owner of a large amount of taxable property in said district, and having children that are entitled to attend school therein. The answer of the board, and of a majority of its members, denies that at the meeting held on April 25, 1887, the electors of the district resolved not to change the site of the school-house, or that the board was instructed by that meeting to proceed to build on the old site, and alleges, on the contrary, that a resolution, offered at that meeting, to instruct the trustees to build on the old site was defeated by a majority of one vote; denies that the secretary neglected or refused to keep or record the minutes of that meeting, and alleges, on the contrary, that the secretary did take the minutes of that meeting and duly record them in the proper book of the district; denies that the district owns the old site; denies that, by building on a different site, taxation on the property of the district will be increased, or that plaintiff will be injured or damaged; alleges that, subsequent to the meeting of April 25th, another meeting was duly called and advertised for June 6, 1887, which was duly held on that day for the purpose of determining as to a change of the school-house site, and at which it was unanimously resolved to instruct the trustees to build the school-house on the new site, a little less than half a mile south of the old site, where the trustees have commenced to build it. The court found for the plaintiff on all the material issues, and awarded a peremptory mandate, which, after reciting the facts found, is in the following language: "Therefore we do command you that, immediately after the receipt of this writ, you proceed with promptness, diligence, and dispatch to construct and erect upon the said premises, location, and site, hereinbefore particularly described, a school-house in and for said Red Bank school-district, and to use and apply the said fund now deposited in the treasury of the county of Tehama, state of California." The appeal is from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The answer of the defendants denied that the school-district owned the land on which the old school-house stood. It is contended by the appellants that the question of title to real estate could not be tried in a mandamus proceeding, and that therefore, upon an answer being filed, raising the question of title, the proceeding should have been dismissed. It is true that, where a question of title to real estate is directly in issue, mandamus is not the appropriate remedy to determine such question. Babcock v. Goodrich, 47 Cal. 508; Weaverville & M. W. R. Co. v. Board Sup'rs, 64 Cal. 70. But where the question is incidental merely, and may affect the discretion of the court in awarding or denying the writ, it is proper that the court should be satisfied on the subject. Here it appeared that the district was and had been for a number of years in possession of the school lot, using it for school purposes, under such circumstances as to authorize its continued use for those purposes. The mere fact of possession was prima facie evidence of ownership. Whether such possession was based upon a paramount title or not was a question which could not be put in issue by the answer and litigated in this proceeding, nor could the defendant ask for a dismissal on the sole ground that by its answer the title to real estate was put in issue. In Weaverville & M. W. R. Co. v. Board Sup'rs, supra, it was said: "It appears by the findings that the plaintiff was incorporated in 1863, and that it in some way obtained possession of the wagon-road which it was incorporated to construct and operate; and that it has ever since retained the possession of it. Such possession was prima facie evidence of ownership. Whether based upon paramount title or not was a question which could not be inquired into except in an action or proceeding in which some person who claimed a better title was a party; and it could not be tried by a board of supervisors, nor in a proceeding to determine whether a mandate should issue to compel the performance by said board of a duty imposed upon it by law. The question of title can be inquired into and determined in a proper proceeding, but clearly not in this." So in this case, if the proper residents in the school-district had taken the necessary steps to impose upon the board of trustees the duty of constructing the school-house on this property, the board could not evade the performance of its duty by asserting that the district had no title to the property. It was not a question for the board to pass upon. It was enough that they were directed, in the manner provided by law, to erect the school-house, and they should have acted accordingly. Pol. Code, § 1617, subd. 26. Certain evidence tending to show the possession of the property by the school-district, declarations of the owners of the land tending to show a dedication of the property to the district for school purposes, and other like testimony, was admitted, and it is claimed by the appellant that this was error for which the cause should be reversed. As we have said, the question whether the school-district had or had not a good title to the property was one not proper to be litigated in this action. But it was entirely proper for the court below to be assured, by proper evidence, that the possession of the district was such as to secure to it the continued use of the property in case a school-house should be constructed upon it in order to determine whether the court should or should not, in its discretion, award the writ. For this purpose, the evidence was proper, although not necessary to the plaintiff's case. Other items of evidence admitted are objected to, but we find that no error was committed in ruling upon the evidence for which the case should be reversed. It is insisted that the finding that the school-district was the owner of the land was not sustained by the evidence. We think the evidence was sufficient to show a dedication and acceptance of the property, and the adverse use of it for school purposes, sufficient to sustain the finding, but if it were not, as the question of title was one not proper to be litigated in this action, an erroneous finding on the point would not be cause for reversal. Other findings are attacked for the same reason, but we think all of the findings, necessary to justify the issuance of the writ, are sustained by the evidence.

Appellant's counsel further contend that, inasmuch as it does not appear that respondent's taxes will not be increased by the matters complained of, he is not a party beneficially interested in the sense of section 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires the writ of mandate to be issued "upon affidavit, on the application of the party beneficially interested;" and, therefore, that the proceeding cannot be maintained upon his application, in his name alone. There can be no doubt upon the findings, which are justified by the evidence, that it was the duty of the board of trustees to build the school-house upon the old site, as instructed by the meeting of April 25, 1887, within a reasonable time after the money for that purpose had been deposited in the treasury; and that a reasonable time within which to commence the building had elapsed before the commencement of this suit is sufficiently evinced by the admitted fact that the trustees had commenced to build on another site than that selected by the meeting of April 25th, before the commencement of this suit. The interest of the plaintiff in the performance of this duty by the trustees of the district resulted from his being a resident elector of the district, having a family of minor children entitled to school privileges therein. After the site for the school-house had been lawfully established and fixed by the meeting of the electors, he was entitled to all the benefits and conveniences incidentally resulting therefrom to him individually, besides his interest in common with other residents of the district, in having the trustees perform an official duty enjoined by law for the common benefit of all. It is claimed, however, that if the removal of the school-house works a detriment to him it must effect a corresponding benefit to others equally entitled to such benefits; and therefore that he has no right to complain. This may be true in the case of a lawful location or removal of a school-house, but it is not true in case of an unlawful removal; for, while all would be entitled to the benefits and conveniences accruing from a lawful location or a lawful removal of a school-house, no one would be entitled to any benefit from an unlawful removal. It is true that the injury to respondent is the same in kind as that suffered by all others from whose residences the new site is more distant than the old, if any such there are, and this seems to be the only plausible ground upon which it is contended that respondent is destitute of the beneficial interest necessary to the prosecution of this action in his own name; and the case of Linden v. Alameda Co., 45 Cal. 7, is cited to sustain this position. That was a case of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to order an election to determine the question of removal of the county-seat, on the petition of 1,452 of the qualified electors of the county, of whom the applicant for the mandamus was one. In sustaining a demurrer to the application, the court held that the words, "on the application of the party beneficially interested," as used in section 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure, necessarily mean that the interest of the applicant "must be of a nature which is distinguishable from that of the mass of the community;" and further said: "The party applying here appears to have no interest, beneficial or otherwise, other than such interest as each one of the fourteen hundred and fifty-one persons, besides himself, who signed the petition to the board of supervisors may be said to have. * * * The interest of each and all of them is only the general interest that every citizen has in the proper discharge of public duties confided by law to public officers. Obviously, this is not such an interest as would support an application by any private citizen who may see fit to volunteer to bring a suit in behalf of the public interests." But the principle announced in Linden v. Alameda Co. has been disregarded, and, in effect, that case has been overruled by later cases. The point decided in that case is that, to entitle a private party to apply for a writ of mandate, his interest in the subject-matter of the suit must be of a different nature from that of the mass of the community. Yet in Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353, which was an application to this court for a writ of mandate to the assessor of the city of Stockton, in which the applicant appeared to have no other interest than that of a tax-payer, in common with all other tax-payers of that city, this court, through Mr. Justice SHARPSTEIN, said: "We think that the petitioner, who is a tax-payer within the district of which respondent is assessor, is 'a party beneficially interested' in having all the taxable property in the district assessed, and is therefore a proper party to make the affidavit for the issuance of the writ in this case." Maxwell v. Supervisors, 53 Cal. 390, was a proceeding for a writ of review to the board of supervisors to review the action of that body, in behalf of the county of Stanislaus, in entering into a contract for printing, in which the applicant was interested only as a tax-payer in common with all other tax-payers of the county, and in which the objection that the applicant was not "beneficially interested," within the meaning of section 1069 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was overruled. The language of section 1069 as to the "beneficial interest" of the applicant for a writ of review, is identical with that of section 1086 relating to the interest of the applicant for a writ of mandate; and no reason is perceived why it has not the same meaning in both sections. These cases wholly disregard, and are utterly inconsistent with, the rule announced in Linden v. Alameda Co., since the beneficial interest of one tax-payer in a question of taxation is not different in kind or nature from that of the mass of tax-payers, or from that of any other tax-payer in the same district or community. These later cases seem to be in accord with the weight of authority in other states and in England, as stated by Mr. Justice STRONG, in delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Railroad Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 354, in which mandamus was maintained at the suit, and in the name, of two merchants to compel the respondent to operate its road across the Missouri river, etc., although these merchants had no interest in the proceeding, except to receive and ship goods over the road, as did all other merchants engaged in like business. See, also, Dill. Mun. Corp. (3d Ed.) § 865, and notes. Besides, in this case, the respondent, as one of the patrons of the school, has, as such, an interest in the erection of the school-house other than that of a mere tax-payer, and his interest may have been different from that of any other tax-payer in that the removal of the school-house to a distant place might have deprived his children of the benefit of attending the public schools. The nuisance cases referred to are not in point. The rule as to the requisite interest of a plaintiff in this class of cases is specifically prescribed by section 3493 of the Civil Code, which does not apply to cases of mandamus. If the respondent has not the requisite beneficial interest to enable him to maintain this action in his own name, no other person except the district corporation has; and that corporation is controlled by the defendants. Therefore, there is no remedy at law whatever, in favor of any party, unless the respondent can maintain this action. Perhaps the illegal diversion and use of the building fund might be enjoined by a court of equity, at the suit of a member of the district corporation; but this would not be an adequate remedy; and, even if it were, it is well settled that an equitable remedy does not deprive a party of the legal remedy of mandamus. Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: FOX, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.

PATERSON, J. I concur in the judgment. I do not understand that Linden v. Alameda Co. has been overruled by the decision in any later case, and it seems to me the cases are distinguishable. A tax-payer has an interest "which is distinguishable from that of the mass of the community." Every citizen has an interest "in the proper discharge of public duties;" but every citizen is not the owner of property for state or municipal purposes.

THORNTON, J. I agree with PATERSON, J., and concur in the judgment.

WINN v. SHAW. (No. 13,909.)<sup>1</sup>

INJUNCTION—TO COUNTY AUDITOR—ILLEGAL PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

An injunction will not be granted at the suit of a tax-payer to restrain the county auditor from issuing a warrant for the payment of an alleged illegal claim allowed against the county by the board of supervisors, as the county may compel the auditor to refund the money in an action at law if the warrant is in fact illegally issued.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; JAMES F. BREEN, Judge.

Action by W. B. Winn against Rody Shaw, as auditor of San Benito county, to restrain defendant from issuing a warrant on the treasury for the payment of a claim against the county allowed by the board of supervisors. The complaint alleged that plaintiff is a tax-payer of the county. Two newspapers are published therein, which are ready and willing to do the county printing at reasonable market rates. The county board directed its clerk to give notice of its intention to purchase land to be used for court-house and jail purposes, but no such notice was ever published in any newspaper. The county board, nevertheless, completed the purchase, and directed the auditor to draw his warrant on the treasury for the purchase price, and the auditor has declared his intention to comply with such order, wherefore plaintiff prays he may be enjoined. To this complaint, the auditor demurred, on the ground that it states no cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and defendant excepted. On the trial it appeared that plaintiff was the proprietor of the Free Lance, one of the two newspapers published in the county; and that he and the proprietors of the Advance, the other paper, had entered into an agreement fixing the rates for county printing at about double the rates fixed by a resolution of the county board. In compliance with the order of the board, the county clerk offered to publish the notice of purchase in such papers at the rates fixed by the board, but both publishers declined. The clerk then posted notices in three public places in each supervisor district in the county, as required by section 25, subsec. 8, of the county government act, when there are no newspapers in the county. The board consummated the purchase, and then directed the auditor to draw his warrant for the price. The court below enjoined the auditor from so doing, and he appeals.

PER CURIAM. The demurrer to the complaint in this cause should have been sustained, on the authority of Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 174; McCoy v. Briant, 53 Cal. 249; and Merriam v. Supervisors, 72 Cal. 519, 14 Pac. Rep. 137. If the claim was illegal as one not authorized by law, as claimed by respondent, the remedy of the county at law is ample. The county is fully protected, in the manner pointed out in the cases cited, and a tax-payer is not entitled to maintain injunction. As said in the last of said cases: "If other safeguards are needed, the legislature can provide them. It is not the province of the courts." Judgment reversed, and case remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

WILLIAMS v. DENNISON. (No. 13,987.)

APPEAL—NOTICE—BOND.

1. A notice of an appeal from a final judgment and from an order denying a new trial, "and from each and every order and judgment made and entered in said cause," will bring up nothing for review which would not be subject to review if the notice had omitted the words, "and from each and every order and judgment made and entered in the case;" and hence the notice is not open to the objection of being indefinite.

2. A single undertaking is sufficient on an appeal from a final judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco.

Action by C. B. Williams against E. F. Dennison for money had and received. There was a judgment for plaintiff. Defendant served the following notice of appeal: "You will please take notice that the defendant in the above-entitled action hereby appeals to the supreme court of the state of California from the judgment therein entered, in the said superior court, on the 28th day of February, 1890, in favor of the plaintiff in said action, and against said defendant, and from the whole thereof. Also from the order overruling the motion for a new trial, and from each and every order and judgment made and entered in said cause." The undertaking on appeal was in double the amount of the judgment and costs, and recited that the appeal was from the judgment and the order denying the new trial, and from each and every order and judgment made and entered in said cause. Plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal.

B. McKinn, for appellant. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

Fox, J. The appeal in this case must be treated as an appeal from the judgment and order denying the motion for new trial. Under the notice, nothing will come under review on the hearing which would not be subject to review if the notice had omitted the words, "and from each and every order and judgment made and entered in said cause." Treating the appeal as being from the judgment and the order denying the motion for new trial only, as we think it must be treated, and the same not being separately taken, the undertaking is sufficient in form and in substance. Chester v. Association, 64 Cal.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; PATERSON, J.; THORNTON, J.

WORKS, J. I concur. The notice of appeal and undertaking are in bad form, and in some cases might render the appeal abortive, but there is nothing in the record here to which the unnecessary recitals therein can apply except the appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial. But, while this mode of procedure is harmless in this instance, it should not be encouraged.

MITCHELL v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. (No. 12,779.)

CARRIERS—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—EVIDENCE.

1. In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a passenger, occasioned by a train running off the track, evidence that at the time the accident occurred the train was running down a steep incline on a new and curved track, at an unusual and dangerous rate of speed, is sufficient to cast on defendant the burden of showing that the accident was not caused by any want of care on its part.

2. Where plaintiff was on the platform of the car when he was injured, and testifies that he went there because he feared that some accident would result from the unusual speed of the train, and intended in that event to jump into the sand on the side of the road, it is a question for the jury whether his action was that of a person of ordinary care and prudence.

3. Civil Code Cal. § 484, absolving railroad companies from responsibility for injuries received by passengers while riding on the platform of a car in violation of the printed and posted regulations of the company, does not apply where the person so injured went upon the platform, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, to escape the consequences of an accident which he feared from the unusual speed at which the train was running.

4. It is error to refuse to admit evidence that the other passengers remained seated in the car and were not injured, as their actions are part of the res gestæ, and tend to show what they regarded as prudent conduct under the circumstances.

5. The conductor testified that he left the smoking-car several minutes before the accident occurred, plaintiff going out with him; that the train was not then running as fast as it had been, and that he gave certain orders and then returned to the smoking-car, leaving plaintiff on the platform. Held, that it was reversible error to exclude a question put to one of the passengers whether the conductor did return to the smoking-car after he and plaintiff left it, and before the accident.

SHARPSTEIN, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Gell & Morehouse, for appellant. D. M. Delmas, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while traveling as a passenger on one of defendant's trains. Appellant contends that the judgment and order should be reversed because plaintiff failed to show negligence in the management of the train, or any defect in the defendant's railroad track. It is doubtless true, as claimed by appellant, that in cases of this character the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to establish negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the mere fact that a passenger was injured while on his journey is not sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier. But in this case not only is the injury admitted, but the derailment and overturning of the car are undisputed facts, and there is evidence tending to show that at the time the accident occurred the train was running down a steep incline leading to the bed of a river on a new and curved track, at an unusual and dangerous speed. This showing was sufficient to throw upon the defendant the burden of proving that the injury was not caused by any want of care on its part. Boyce v. Stage Co., 25 Cal. 460; Lawrence v. Green, 70 Cal. 417, 11 Pac. Rep. 750; Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. Rep. 266; Buel v. Railroad Co., 31 N. Y. 314.

At the time the accident occurred the plaintiff was standing on the platform of the smoking-car, and it is claimed that he cannot recover for the injury sustained by him, and that defendant is relieved from responsibility therefor by the provisions of section 484, Civil Code, which reads as follows: "Every railroad corporation must have printed and conspicuously posted on the inside of its passenger cars its rules and regulations regarding fare and conduct of its passengers; and in case any passenger is injured on or from the platform of a car, or on any baggage, wood, gravel, or freight car, in violation of such printed regulations, or in violation of positive verbal instructions or injunctions given to such passenger in person by any officer of the train, the corporation is not responsible for damages for such injuries, unless the corporation failed to comply with the provisions of the preceding section." Plaintiff admitted at the trial that defendant had proper notices as required by this section posted in all of its cars, and that he had full knowledge of their contents before the accident. He testified that he had gone out upon the platform immediately before the accident in consequence of the fear that some disaster would occur; that his attention was directed to the speed of the train as soon as it passed over the top of the grade and began to descend; that the great and unusual speed at which the train was going, taken in connection with the fact that the road was new and temporary, led him to believe that an accident would occur, and that he went out upon the platform intending to jump therefrom to the sand on the inside of the curve, where he believed he would escape with less injury than if he remained in the car, and that he had no sooner reached the platform than the car was overturned and he was thrown upon the ground; that he had been for a long time in the employ of Wells, Fargo & Co., had acquired a knowledge and skill in the movement of trains, could distinguish between the degrees of speed by the motion of the train, and that the train ran faster on the day of the accident than ever before. The evidence of the defendant tends to show that the plaintiff had been upon the platform several minutes before the accident occurred, but if the jury believed the testimony of the plaintiff it was for them to say whether the circumstances were such as would lead a person of ordinary prudence to act as the plaintiff did. The inquiry is, where there has been an unsuccessful attempt to escape danger in an accident, was the attempt which was made an unreasonable or rash act, or was it one which a person of ordinary care and prudence might do under the circumstances? The answer to this inquiry cannot be made to depend upon the result of the attempt to escape, nor upon the result which would have occurred if the attempt had not been made. It would be unreasonable to require a passenger in case of accident to judge with absolute certainty the degree of danger attending him if he made no effort to escape, and the absolute consequences of an effort to escape. He must act upon the probabilities of an effort to escape as they appear to him, and choose that hazard which seems to him as a person of prudence to be the least. Of course the facts that he was injured in the attempt to escape, and that those who remained in the car escaped without injury, are circumstances which the jury should consider in determining whether he acted as a man of ordinary prudence would under the circumstances, but, where he has acted in the manner described, it cannot be said that his attempt to escape constituted contributory negligence. Twonley v. Railroad Co., 69 N. Y. 160; Railroad Co. v. Mowery, 36 Ohio St. 418.

In Buel v. Railroad Co., 31 N. Y. 319, the court said: "The statute exempts the railroad company from liability to a passenger who shall be injured while on the platform of a car, etc., in violation of the printed regulations of the company, posted up at the time in a conspicuous place, inside of its passenger cars then in the train, provided the company at the time furnish room inside its passenger cars sufficient for the proper accommodation of the passengers. Laws 1850, c. 140, § 46. There was in this case a printed regulation, pursuant to this statute, posted in a conspicuous place inside the car, prohibiting passengers from standing or riding on the platform of any car. But neither the statute nor the regulation has any application to a case like the present one. * * * The statute was intended to prevent the imprudent act of standing or riding on the platform, but not to absolve railroad companies from responsibility for every injury which might happen at that place, when a passenger is passing over it, while justifiably entering or leaving the cars." In that case it was held that, although the plaintiff was injured while attempting to escape from the car in a collision, and although the passengers in the same car with him, who kept their seats, escaped uninjured, he could not be held guilty of contributory negligence; that he acted with ordinary care and prudence. We have carefully examined the instructions of the court to the jury, and find no error in any of them.

The court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objections to the questions asked by defendant as to the conduct of the passengers who remained in the car, and whether any of them were injured. Evidence of the action of other passengers in such cases is competent as a part of the res gestæ, and to show what they, being in the same dangerous situation, deemed prudent conduct. They all have an equal interest in protecting themselves, and will be presumed to have done what appeared to them to involve the least hazard. This error was cured, however, by other testimony—which appears not to be disputed—showing that there were only three passengers in the car besides plaintiff, and that they all remained in their seats until the car was overturned, and all escaped unhurt.

There is another error assigned, based upon the refusal of the court to allow defendant to ask how often plaintiff had traveled over the road, prior to the accident; but, as evidence on the topic went in afterwards without objection, no prejudice can be predicated on the ruling complained of.

There was one error which we think was prejudicial, and which entitles the appellant to a new trial. The plaintiff testified that the car left the track immediately after he reached the platform; that "just as I [he] had stepped out of the car-door the crash came." It was claimed by the defendant, and it attempted to show by evidence, that plaintiff was improperly on the platform; that he was not there through fear of an accident; that he had been standing on the platform in violation of its regulations several minutes before the accident occurred, and was consequently guilty of contributory negligence. The conductor testified that he left the smoking-car two or three minutes before the accident occurred, and that plaintiff went out with him; that the train was not going as fast then as it had on former occasions at the same point, and while plaintiff was on board; that he gave the brakeman orders to let off the brakes, walked back into the smoking-car, and took his seat while the plaintiff remained standing on the platform. The defendant then called S. W. Smith, who was one of the three passengers in the car at the time of the accident, and he was asked to state whether Mr. Clark, the conductor, returned into the smoking-car after he and plaintiff left it, and before the accident occurred. Plaintiff objected to the question on the ground that it was immaterial, the court sustained the objection, and defendant excepted. The question whether plaintiff went upon the platform under the circumstances narrated by him was a most important one; in fact the main question in the case is whether he acted as a prudent man would under the circumstances. In determining that question, the length of time he remained upon the platform, and the conduct of others on the train, including the officers of the train, is material, competent, and important. The testimony of the conductor, if true, would tend not only to impeach the testimony of the plaintiff as to the length of time he stood on the platform, but directly to prove that there was no apparent reason for alarm at the time the accident occurred. To enable the jury to decide whether the conductor's version of the circumstances or that of the plaintiff was correct, the testimony of Smith, a disinterested witness, might have been important. It certainly was material and competent, and should have been admitted. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; MCFARLAND, J.; FOX, J.

I concur in the judgment. WORKS, J.

I dissent. SHARPSTEIN, J.

THORNTON, J. I dissent. The exclusion of the testimony of Smith, on which the reversal is ordered, could not possibly have caused any injury to the defendant. Evidence of the return of the conductor before the catastrophe occurred in which the plaintiff was injured was already in and uncontradicted. The conductor had already testified to the fact of such return. The time of the return of the conductor from the platform could not possibly show how long the plaintiff stood on the platform, as the conductor, when he returned, left the plaintiff standing on the platform. The evidence shows that the conductor and plaintiff went on the platform at the same time. The conductor returned, leaving plaintiff on the platform. How could the time of the return of the conductor show how long plaintiff remained on the platform after such return? If the return of the conductor from the platform could show anything as to the time when the plaintiff remained on the platform after such return, the fact of his return was already in evidence and uncontradicted. A case carefully and laboriously tried should not be sent back for a new trial for an error, if any, so trifling.

CITY OF NAPA v. HOWLAND. (No. 12,800.)

EJECTMENT—PARTIES—EVIDENCE—DEDICATION—FINDINGS.

1. In ejectment, where plaintiff city claims the land in dispute by dedication, and the court has found that there was such a dedication, a further finding that after the dedication the owners of the land directed that it be so designated on the maps of the city is immaterial, and the fact that it is not supported by the evidence will not affect the judgment for plaintiff.

2. Though the owner of the land had no title thereto at the time he dedicated it, he and his grantees are estopped to deny the fact of dedication; and a title subsequently acquired by him inures to the benefit of the public, by virtue of such estoppel.

3. Where defendant in ejectment admits that he is in possession of the land when it is demanded of him, the tenant from month to month by whom he holds possession is not a necessary party defendant.

4. In ejectment by a city for land claimed to have been dedicated as a levee and street, where maps are produced on behalf of plaintiff, the error of admitting them without evidence that the former owner of the land filed or adopted them is waived by defendant's failure to object to them, and his discussion of them in argument, as evidence on the issue of dedication.

5. A finding that land was dedicated as "a public levee" is supported by evidence of dedication as a "public landing," the word "levee," as applied to land such as that in question along a navigable stream, having the same meaning as "landing."

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Napa county; A. J. BUCKLES, Judge.

F. E. Johnson, for appellant. O. R. Coghlan, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. This is an action of ejectment. The main question involved in the issues is whether the lands in controversy have ever been dedicated for the use of the public as a levee and street. The court found from the evidence that the property was dedicated to public use by the owners thereof about the year 1850, and that ever since said dedication the land has, by direction of the owners of the fee thereof, been designated and represented on the maps of the city of Napa, as public streets and levees; that the public used the same exclusively until March 1, 1875, when defendant, without authority or right, ousted plaintiff therefrom, and has ever since wrongfully held exclusive possession of the property. The plaintiff had judgment against defendant for the possession of the lands, but the defendant was permitted to remove his warehouses and fences.

1. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff is ample to support the finding as to dedication.

2. The court found, finding 2, that the land had been dedicated by the owners, Coombs and others. This was the ultimate and essential fact, and the subsequent finding that the land by direction of the owners had, after such dedication, been designated on the maps of the city, was a finding upon an immaterial matter, at least upon a matter that was not controlling. The latter finding may be excluded as not supported by the evidence, and yet the judgment will be supported by the finding upon the question of dedication. The maps were not necessary to support the finding of dedication. The evidence of the acts and declarations of Coombs was sufficient to show a dedication.

3. If it be assumed that Coombs had no title at the time he dedicated the property, he and his grantees are nevertheless estopped from denying the fact of dedication. His claim was confirmed by the board of land commissioners in April, 1854, and a patent was issued to him in 1866. His newly-acquired estate "feeds the estoppel." God. Easem. p. 95, and cases cited in note; Tyler, Ej. pp. 725, 726; Washb. Easem. p. 62.

4. When the city marshal served a notice on defendant demanding that he deliver up possession of the premises, the defendant admitted that he held possession of the property, and said he would not surrender it. This testimony of the marshal was not contradicted by defendant. The premises were in possession of a tenant of defendant under a letting from month to month. Under these circumstances it was not necessary that the tenant be made a party defendant. Finnegan v. Carraher, 47 N. Y. 497.

5. It is claimed that the court erred in its ruling in regard to the Thompson and Pierce maps. If the evidence necessary to render them proper for consideration under the ruling of the court was not produced by plaintiff, the defendant ought to have moved to strike them out. Instead of calling the attention of the court when plaintiff rested its case to the fact that there was no evidence showing that the former owners of the land had made, filed, or adopted the maps, counsel for defendant in the argument of the case considered and discussed the effect of the maps as evidence on the issue of dedication or no dedication. Therefore, if it be assumed that there was, at the time that the maps were offered and admitted in evidence, an express and binding understanding between counsel and the court such as is claimed, we think that the failure to move to strike them out, and the manner in which they were treated by counsel in the argument, constituted a waiver of the limitation. Furthermore, there is no exception in the record upon which error can be predicated. There is no ruling which we can review. The court did not err in admitting the map called "Plan of Napa City, filed for record at the request of Nathan Coombs."

6. It is said that the evidence does not support the finding of dedication "as a public levee and for public street purposes," because it shows a dedication, if any, for a public landing. It matters but little what name is given to the place, so long as the fact appears that it was dedicated for public use. "A landing is a bank or wharf to or from which persons may go from or to some vessel in the contiguous water." State v. Graham, 15 Rich. Law, 310. The word "levee," as applied to portions of the public highways bordering on navigable streams and sloughs in the interior cities and towns of this state, has the same meaning as "landing." The judgment and order are affirmed.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LOCAL AND SPECIAL LAWS—IMPRISONMENT IN HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. St. Cal. 1877-78, p. 953, relating to the house of correction in the city and county of San Francisco, provides that the criminal court of such city and county may sentence a prisoner on conviction to the house of correction in any case where he might be imprisoned in the county jail. Held, that this is not a special or local act relating to the punishment of crime, within the meaning of Const. Cal. art. 4, § 25, as it does not change the punishment or degree of any crime under the existing uniform laws, but only provides a place where punishment may be inflicted.

2. Nor is it an act regulating the practice of courts of justice within the meaning of such section of the constitution, as it relates only to the execution of their judgments, which is a matter subject to legislative discretion.

In bank. Habeas corpus.

N. S. Wirt, for petitioner. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and J. D. Page, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In this case, by leave of the court, an amended petition was filed, after the decision which was filed July 24, 1890, (24 Pac. Rep. 602;) and on such amended petition the petitioner was permitted to reargue the case on the question of the constitutionality of the act of 1878, under which petitioner was sentenced to the house of correction. After a patient hearing and investigation we deem it necessary only to add to that which was said in our former opinion that, in our judgment, the act is not in conflict with section 25, art. 4, of the constitution. It is not special or local, either for the punishment of crimes or misdemeanors, or regulating the practice of courts of justice. The laws for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors are uniform throughout the state, in the matter of determining what is a felony, and what a misdemeanor, and the legal consequences flowing from the conviction of either. They are uniform in prescribing the punishment of imprisonment, when such punishment is allowed at all, for each of the several offenses for which that punishment is provided. This act does not change the punishment, or the degree of the crime. All that it does is to authorize the court in San Francisco, in its discretion, to cause the punishment to be inflicted in one place, instead of either of two or three others where it might be done. If the legislature has no power to authorize courts to do this, then it is powerless to provide for imprisonment for felony in more than one place in the state. We find no such limitation upon the power of the legislature in the premises. If, as is claimed in argument, the imprisonment must be in a state-prison in order to be equal and uniform, then there must be but one state-prison; for if more than one, even though the government and discipline in all be the same, it would be impossible that the climatic and other conditions would be the same, and hence the conditions of punishment would be unlike. Such cannot be the meaning of the constitution or the law. It is the fact of imprisonment, and the labor during confinement, and the civil consequences that attach to the conviction, that constitute the punishment, and not the place where the imprisonment is carried out.

Nor is the act one regulating the practice in courts of justice. Practice is that course of proceeding by which the investigation is had, and the judgment reached. When reached, the place and manner of executing the judgment (it being uniform in character with other judgments in like cases) is subject to legislative discretion; and the legislature may prescribe that all judgments upon conviction for felony shall be executed in one place, or that those in different parts of the state may be executed in different places, or, having prescribed different places for such purposes, it may, as it has, leave it to the discretion of the court in each instance to determine in which of them the judgment shall be executed. Let the writ be discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

PETITION FOR STREET GRADING—PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY.

1. St. Cal. 1871-72, p. 804, provides that certain street grading cannot be ordered by the supervisors unless a majority of the frontage of lots petition therefor. Certain grading was done upon a petition from which it did not certainly appear whether the petitioner owned a majority of the frontage or not. Held that, since the board must necessarily have passed upon the sufficiency of the petition before ordering the work done, it was properly presumed to be sufficient, and testimony to the contrary was rightly excluded. Distinguishing Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 206, and Kahn v. Supervisors, 79 Cal. 388, 21 Pac. Rep. 849.

2. The act further provides that the board shall publish notice of its intention to order the work done, and that lot-owners who feel aggrieved by the proposed improvement shall file a remonstrance, which shall be passed upon by the board, and its decision shall be conclusive. Held, that one who failed to file such remonstrance was concluded by the decision, and could not attack it by way of defense to a suit to collect the assessment for the improvement.

3. Where a contract was made for doing the work for 50 cents per yard, but afterwards, without the contractor's request, the board published a new notice of intention, which resulted in a new contract with him to do the same work at 60 cents per yard, for which action no reason appears, it must be presumed that the board acted regularly, and that for some defect in the proceedings the new contract was necessary.

In bank. On rehearing. For former report, see 24 Pac. Rep. 600.

E. J. Pringle and D. H. Whittemore, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart and J. W. Wood, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment enforcing a street assessment against a lot on Lombard street. The case was heard in department, and the judgment was affirmed; and the facts of the case are stated in the opinion then rendered by Commissioner Gibson, filed July 8, 1890. A hearing in bank was ordered, because it was strenuously urged that the decision was in conflict with Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 206, and Kahn v. Supervisors, 79 Cal. 388, 21 Pac. Rep. 849. But, after argument on rehearing, and mature consideration, we are satisfied with the conclusions reached in department. Mulligan v. Smith, and Kahn v. Supervisors, arose upon a special statute which did not provide for an adjudication of the jurisdictional fact that a majority of the frontage of lots fronting on the work proposed to be done was represented by the owners thereof in a petition for the work; and did not provide for a hearing to any of the owners of such frontage on that issue. But we think that section 4 of the act in question in the case at bar (St. 1871-72, p. 805), does not provide for such adjudication by, and such hearing before, the board of supervisors, and that the decision of the board that a majority of such frontage was represented in the petition was a decision which the act says "shall be final and conclusive." In Freeman on Judgments, § 523, it is stated as a rule (founded on numerous authorities there cited) that "whenever the jurisdiction of a court not of record depends on a fact which the court is required to ascertain and settle by its decision, such decision, if the court has jurisdiction of the parties, is conclusive, and not subject to any collateral attack." The rule embraces "a large number of persons and tribunals not ordinarily spoken of as 'judges' nor as 'courts,'" for "their authority in this respect is judicial," (section 539;) and it was expressly applied by this court to boards of supervisors in People v. Hagar, 52 Cal. 182. The rule stated in the latter case governs, we think, the case at bar. In Turrill v. Grattan, Id. 97, the only question which seems to have been raised was as to the sufficiency of the petition itself, which was a question not of fact, but of law. In the case at bar, we think that the petition was sufficient. A diagram, which was not as full in details as it might have been, was presented with the petition; but it was not inconsistent with the main body of the petition, which sufficiently stated the facts required by the statute. The point that the contract was invalid because there had been a previous contract is sufficiently answered in the said opinion of the commissioner; and we may add that the remedy for any such objection to the contract is provided for in section 12 of the act. It may be remarked also that it is doubtful whether the points which appellant seeks to make against the petition and to the rulings of the court are properly presented in the record. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

VENDOR AND VENDEE—CONTRACT OR OPTION—RIGHTS OF VENDEE.

1. In an action to quiet title, defendant claimed under the following contract, signed by plaintiff, which defendant contended was a contract of sale, while plaintiff insisted that it was an option: "Sept. 7, 1888. Received from * * * one thousand dollars, being deposit on account of sale by me to him of, [a described lot] for the sum of $16,000. * * * Purchaser to have rent of lot from and after September 1st. Possession of lot given and guaranteed to purchaser on transfer of title. Fifteen days given to purchaser for examination of title and making of deed. If title not satisfactory to purchaser, sale to be null and void, and above deposit returned to him." Held, that this was a valid contract of sale and not an option.

2. The abstract of title disclosed that the title had at one time come into "H. P. Hepburn," and that there was no deed from him, but one from "H. P. Hopkins." Plaintiff claimed that the original deed in his possession was signed by H. P. Hepburn, but refused to allow defendant to submit this deed to his counsel, or to have it recorded, and on the last of the 15 days he tendered defendant a conveyance, and demanded the balance of the purchase money. Held that, though plaintiff had a good title, it was not satisfactorily proved according to the terms of the contract, and defendant was justified in refusing to complete the contract. WORKS, J., dissenting.

3. The lot was occupied by various tenants, some of whom had attorned to plaintiff, and some had not. Those who had not attorned occupied shanties, and could not be found in the day-time at all. It also appeared that the buildings and fence of the adjoining lot on one side projected over the line, and had so projected for many years. The owner of the encroaching lot was a non-resident who had no resident agent authorized to act. Held, that plaintiff could not and did not give possession within the terms of the contract.

4. When, under such circumstances, plaintiff brings an action to quiet title, he can only have a decree upon condition that he restore the money paid by defendant upon the contract.

Fox, J. Action in form quia timet, or one brought under section 738, Code Civil Proc., for the purpose of determining the adverse claim of defendant to beach and water lot No. 717, San Francisco. Defendant denies that he asserts any claim to the lot, other than that which he derives under a certain contract with the plaintiff for the purchase thereof; alleges payment of $1,000 under said contract, with offer to fully perform on his own part, but inability and refusal to perform on the part of plaintiff; and, in addition, files a cross-complaint against plaintiff, demanding a return of said $1,000, with interest, together with damages for non-performance on the part of plaintiff, and other relief. Findings and judgment for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and defendant appeals. Respondent claims that the transaction between himself and appellant was not a sale, or contract for the sale, of the lot, but a mere sale of an option to buy the lot; that the $1,000 was paid for the option, and that defendant not having exercised the option, and made the purchase, the transaction is finally closed, and he, plaintiff, is entitled to have his title quieted, and to retain the $1,000. Defendant, on the other hand, insists that the transaction was a sale. The contract was in the words and figures following: "San Francisco, September 7, 1883. Received from J. M. Shotwell one thousand dollars, being deposit on account of sale by me to him of beach and water lot No. 717, [describing it,] for the sum of sixteen thousand dollars ($16,000.) Purchaser to pay the commission of two hundred dollars ($200) for selling, to Messrs. Moxley and Fisher. Purchaser to pay for paving crossing of Howard and Steuart streets, now being done, at an amount not exceeding one hundred and twenty dollars ($120.) The seller to pay all other street work now being contracted for or already done. Purchaser to pay taxes for current year 1883-4. Purchaser to have the rent of lot from and after September 1st. Possession of lot given and guaranteed to purchaser on transfer of title. Fifteen days given to purchaser for examination of title and making of deed. If title not satisfactory to purchaser, sale to be null and void, and above deposit returned to him. [Signed] JOHN BENSON. Witness, CHAS. C. FISHER." The thousand dollars was paid simultaneously with the execution, delivery, and date of this paper. The 15 days consequently expired on the 22d of September. There is no question in our minds that this was a good and valid contract for the purchase and sale of the lot; the deposit to be returned in case the title did not prove satisfactory, or of inability on the part of the seller to comply with its terms. It comes fairly within the provisions of sections 1726 and 1729 of the Civil Code. It was signed by the party to be charged, and by the only party who was required to sign it. Civil Code, § 1741; Fabian v. Callahan, 56 Cal. 159. The payment of the deposit by the other party was a sufficient acceptance of its terms, and by the express terms of the paper that payment was not, as claimed by respondent, for an option, but "a deposit on account of sale." For the amount of that deposit, the vendee had and has a lien upon the property, in case of failure on the part of the vendor to make good his part of the contract, unless the vendee is himself first in default. Civil Code, § 3050; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 167, 1263, and cases there cited.

At or about the time of making the contract, respondent delivered to appellant an abstract of title, which appellant had revised and continued down to date at his own expense, and then placed it in the hands of a well-known examiner. On the 17th of September he received the report of his examiner, and immediately notified the respondent in writing of certain defects in the record title, calling his attention thereto, and, as to one which seemed to be an important one, suggesting that possibly it arose from clerical error in the record, and asking for the original papers, that he might submit them to his counsel and examiner; also calling his attention to certain facts in regard to the occupancy and possession of the lot, and to the fact that "to avoid trouble and give undisputed possession it will be necessary to oust them all." Receiving no response to this, appellant again wrote to the respondent on the 19th as follows: "I am waiting patiently your reply to my note of the 17th inst., referring to matters requiring your attention in clearing up title, etc., to water lot No. 717. If you will be kind enough to inform me where I can find you during business hours, and at what time, I will meet you. I wish to close up the business without further delay." After receiving this letter, respondent called, and claimed that he had the original of the deed to which exception was taken in the chain of title shown by the abstract, which, according to the record, was signed "Hopkins," but which he claimed was in fact signed "Hepburn," as it was required to be, in order to make the title correct, but he refused to let the appellant take it to submit it to counsel, or to put it upon record. His attention was then also particularly called to the condition of the lot as to the matter of possession, but he took no measures to prepare himself for delivery of possession as required by his contract. On the 22d of September, the day when, by the terms of the contract, the transaction was to be closed, he sent his agent with his deed of the premises, and made a tender thereof, and demanded the remaining $15,000. Appellant counted out to him the money, and, as he was about to put it in a bag and carry it away, appellant said, "Wait a minute, gentlemen, you must go down and put me in possession of the lot, and then you can take the money away," and added that upon receiving possession of the whole lot, and with the correction of the deeds, he was ready to complete the purchase. The evidence given upon the trial shows the title from two sources: (1) An alcalde grant, made January 3, 1850. (2) A deed from the California land commissioners, dated August 26, 1854. In tracing the title down from the alcalde grant, it came into H. P. Hepburn. There, according to the records of the recorder's office, and as shown by the abstract, there was complete break in the chain of title. The next deed in order of date was from H. P. Hopkins, and there was no deed of any date from H. P. Hepburn. It was admitted upon the trial, and so appears in the record, that the land is within the grant to the pueblo of San Francisco. If that is true, and it must be taken as true for the purposes of this case, here was a fatal defect in the record title. It could not be helped out by a good chain of deeds from the land commissioners down, for, if the land was within the grant to the pueblo, the commissioners had no title to grant, and nothing was acquired or taken under their deed. It therefore became important that the connection should be complete with the alcalde title. According to the record the plaintiff utterly failed to connect himself with that title. Under the contract defendant was entitled to a good paper title, sufficient in law, and was not bound to accept a title resting upon the statute of limitations, or take the risk of determining from facts which he might learn de hors the record, whether or not the statute of limitations could be successfully pleaded against an adverse claim. Hartley v. James, 50 N. Y. 42. True, plaintiff claimed, and upon the trial proved, that the record was wrong, and that the deed purporting to be from Hopkins was in fact from Hepburn. But, at the time when it was his duty to show good title, he allowed the matter to rest upon his naked assertion, and refused to submit his proof for examination, or to permit the deed to be recorded correctly. Defendant had a right, therefore, to stand by the record, and to govern his conduct accordingly. Some other discrepancies in the chain of this title were also pointed out as defects, at the time, but they do not seem to have been seriously insisted upon, and, comparatively, at least, they were immaterial.

As to possession, the evidence shows that there were on the lot several tenements, a blacksmith shop, a shoemaker's shop, a stable, and several shanties, ships, cabins, and the like; that one or two of these tenements were occupied by persons attorning to the plaintiff, and paying a small monthly rental; that others of them were occupied by persons whose names even could not be learned,—persons sleeping there at night, and absent during the day,—the regular tenant claiming that they slept there by his permission, but he did not even know the names of some of them. Along the rear end of the lot, certain buildings, supposed to stand on the corners, and a fence running from one to the other of them, constituted the rear line of occupancy, but it was found upon survey that these buildings and this fence were inside the line of the lot 1 foot 8½ inches, and that for at least 12 or 13 years this strip had been so fenced out of this lot, and used and occupied by the tenants on the adjoining lot, which belonged to Mrs. Klumpke, then in Europe, with no agent here authorized to act for her in the matter of determining or deciding whether she claimed it or not. These facts appear from the evidence, without substantial, and it seems to us without any, conflict. Under these circumstances, the defendant claimed and demanded that when he paid his money he should be given not only a good paper title, but the actual possession of the lot, and of the whole lot. When demand was made, and the money counted out, plaintiff's agent sent some persons down with defendant to put him into possession, but the tenants said they could not give it. Several of the small tenements were locked up, and the occupants absent, and the strip on the outside of the fence was completely covered, to a depth of several feet, with lumber belonging to the tenant of Mrs. Klumpke. The parties returned without a surrender of possession. It is claimed on the part of respondent that the tenants who were under lease from plaintiff said while there that they would acknowledge the defendant as their landlord, and attorn to him, and that this was all that was required. But this was not the measure of plaintiff's obligation, according to the letter of his bond. According to that paper, defendant was entitled to an actual possessio pedis of the whole lot. The language of the contract implied nothing less. Constructive possession, and the duty to attorn, would follow the title, and, if that was all that was meant, there was no need to have said anything about possession in the contract. But in that instrument it is expressly provided that the possession of the lot is to be both "given and guaranteed to purchaser on transfer of title." Nor is this relieved or modified by the other provision that he is to receive the rent from and after September 1st. That assures him, in case the contract is carried out, the rent from a day anterior to the date of the contract, but does not bind him to take the lot with all its incumbrances at the time of final completion of the terms of the agreement. Besides, this proposed attornment was from only two or three of the many occupants of that lot. The others knew no landlord, and were unknown to any. Their tenements were locked up, and access to them could not be had, without a violation of law. Still more, as to an important portion of the lot, it was certain that an adverse right had grown up, which, if asserted, would defeat the title as to that portion, and it was not known then, or even at the time of this trial, whether it would be asserted or not. By the terms of the contract, delivery of possession and the transfer of title were to be simultaneous, and both were to be concurrent with the payment of the money. The conditions of the contract were mutual and dependent—concurrent—within the meaning of section 1437, Civil Code. Under it, respondent was not entitled to demand payment of the money until he delivered that possession. Civil Code, § 1439; Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 661–663; Society v. Hildreth, 53 Cal. 723. The word “possession,” as used in this contract, is to be understood and construed in its ordinary and popular sense. Civil Code, § 1644. According to the uncontradicted evidence, appellant offered to perform, according to the strict letter of the contract, (Id. §§ 1437, 1498;) and no objection was made to the mode of such offer, (Id. § 1501.) Nothing which transpired afterwards met the measure of his rightful demand. The subsequent written surrender of possession to plaintiff by his tenants, which was afterwards shown to defendant, did not meet the calls of the contract. It was a mere statement of surrender, not accompanied or followed by an actual surrender, and, as before stated, was from only a portion of the actual occupants. The court found in favor of plaintiff, and against defendant, on all these questions of performance, and offers to perform, on the part of the respective parties. Without specifying them separately, we think the findings upon these questions are clearly against the evidence, and that the evidence on the subject is without substantial conflict. The case must therefore go back for a new trial, and it remains only to consider the points made on the questions of remedy and relief.

Appellant, although not appearing to be in default, has not asked for specific performance. Respondent has not chosen to bring his action to rescind, but rather seeks to quiet title. If he had sought to rescind, appellant not being in default, respondent would not have been entitled to that relief until he had restored all that he had received under the contract. Id. § 1691; Wilson v. Sturgis, 71 Cal. 226, 16 Pac. Rep. 772, and cases there cited; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 276, 17 Pac. Rep. 225; De Cazara v. Orena, 80 Cal. 132, 22 Pac. Rep. 74. He cannot avoid this obligation by coming into equity to quiet his title. The complaint in this case must be treated as a bill in equity. Brandt v. Wheaton, 52 Cal. 430; Hancock v. Plummer, 66 Cal. 338, 5 Pac. Rep. 514. This action has always been held to be on the equity side of the court. Polack v. Gurnee, 66 Cal. 267–269, 5 Pac. Rep. 229, 610. He who asks equity must do equity. Ballard v. Carr, 48 Cal. 75; Guttenberger v. Woods, 51 Cal. 523. Under this contract and this evidence, plaintiff cannot come into a court of equity, and ask to quiet his title against the claim of defendant, without restoring the money he has received. Chandler v. Chandler, 53 Cal. 269. The real subject of controversy here is the contract of sale, and the rights of defendant thereunder. The judgment must necessarily adjudicate those rights, and will pass only incidentally upon plaintiff's title. Parnell v. Hahn, 61 Cal. 131. It may be that respondent can make good title, but he did not at the time show good record title; was unable to put his vendee in possession, and has never yet shown that his title, even if good paper title, has not been defeated as to a part of the lot by adverse possession. Under such circumstances the appellant was entitled to recover the money paid. Sanders v. Lansing, 70 Cal. 429, 11 Pac. Rep. 702. It is suggested that we can order a modification of the judgment, requiring plaintiff to repay to defendant the sum of $1,000, with interest thereon from September 22, 1883, and that thereupon plaintiff's title be quieted. On the evidence such a judgment would seem to be equitable between the parties, but it would not be supported by the findings as they now stand, and this court cannot make findings for the court below. If in the court below the parties shall consent to so adjust their differences, no doubt the court will facilitate them in so doing. All that we can do is to order that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

WORKS, J. I concur in the judgment on the ground that possession was not given as provided in the contract. I do not concur in the conclusion reached that a good title was not shown. The respondent showed by producing his deed that the record was incorrect, and that the deed was made by the proper party. This was done on the day the contract was to be consummated, and was sufficient. Besides it was satisfactory to the appellant, as he only required as a condition upon which he was willing to pay the purchase money, that possession of the property be given him.

DE GUYER et al. v. BANNING. (No. 13,240.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1890.)

MEXICAN GRANTS—DESCRIPTION—CONFIRMATION—CONFLICTING PATENTS.

In ejectment, plaintiffs claimed under a Mexican grant that had been confirmed by the federal district court in 1857, and had been patented to plaintiffs by the United States in 1858, in accordance with the decree of confirmation which described the land by specified boundaries, giving lines and monuments. The survey made by the surveyor general in carrying out the decree of confirmation conformed to the exterior boundaries, as described in the decree, which mentioned no reservation within the limits of these exterior boundaries. There was a clause in the certificate of survey which read: “Excepting, reserving, and excluding from the tract, as thus surveyed, that portion thereof covered by the navigable waters of the inner bay of San Pedro, and which are included within the following described lines.” The land in controversy was an island lying within these lines. This island, together with other land lying within the inner survey, was patented to defendant by the United States in 1881. Held, that the Mexican grant, as confirmed and patented by the United States to plaintiff, included the whole space lying within its exterior boundaries, and that defendant had acquired no title under his patent. BEATTY, C. J., and McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; A. W. HUTTON, Judge. Houghton, Silent & Campbell and J. S. Chapman, for appellants. Bicknell & White and Smith, Winder & Smith, for respondents. J. E. Foulds, amicus curiæ.

Fox, J. This is an action of ejectment for the recovery of the possession of a tract of land, comprising 18.88 acres, commonly known as "Mormon Island," situate in the inner bay of San Pedro, in the county of Los Angeles. Defendant had judgment, from which, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Plaintiffs claim under a Mexican grant, alleged, in the petition for confirmation thereof introduced and received in evidence, to have been made early in the present century, under which it is claimed that juridical possession was given in 1817, and that the same was repeatedly acknowledged by the Spanish and Mexican governments, and particularly so by a decree of the governor of the province of California, dated December 31, 1822; of which grant, confirmation was made by the district court of the United States, February 10, 1857, and patent thereon issued December 18, 1858. Defendant claims under a patent issued by the government of the United States, as upon a sale of the property as government land, describing the same as lot No. 1 of section 8, in township 5 south, range 13 west, San Bernardino meridian, in California, dated December 30, 1881. In addition to pleading his title, the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, but upon that plea the court found against the defendant. The only question, therefore, to be determined upon this appeal, is whether or not the title passed by the Mexican or Spanish grant as the same was finally confirmed and patented by the government of the United States. The grant is of the Rancho San Pedro, made to Christobal Dominguez. The decree of confirmation is for eight and a half leagues, a little more or less, of which specific boundaries are given in the decree, giving lines and named monuments, some of which are natural, and some artificial, and extending around all sides of the grant. One of these lines, as specifically described in the decree, runs directly across the outer or western border of "the inner bay of San Pedro" to La Coleta, and includes said inner bay within the exterior boundaries of the grant. As described in the decree, no exception within the exterior lines there given is made, but everything passes by the grant, which lies within those exterior boundaries. It is proved and conceded that the exterior boundaries, as described in the survey, made by the surveyor general, and recited in the patent, are identical with those given in the decree itself. But after completing the survey of the exterior boundaries, as the same are described in the decree, the surveyor adds this paragraph: "Excepting, reserving, and excluding from the tract, as thus surveyed, that portion thereof covered by the navigable waters of the inner bay of San Pedro, and which are included within the following described lines, to-wit,"—and then follows with the courses and distances of the survey of such inner bay, and including therein 1,100.50 acres. What was the purpose, and what was the legal effect, of this paragraph in the certificate of survey, and the subsequent field-notes of the survey in this paragraph referred to? An understanding of the character of the "inner bay of San Pedro" may help to solve that problem, if it is one capable of solution. According to the map attached to the record it is a body of water jutting into the main body of the land, towards the east, from the principal or main bay of San Pedro, covering in its exterior limits 1,100.50 acres. The body of the main-land of the grant surrounds it on the north, south, and east. It was claimed by counsel at the argument, but we do not see that the fact appears in the record, that it is inaccessible to sea-going ships, but that at times of high water it is navigable with small craft. Manifestly, and we say this more from what seemed to be conceded at the argument than from any direct evidence in the record, it is a tract of water below ordinary high-water mark, but not a portion of the deep sea, or into which deep sea going vessels can be taken. Within it Mormon island is situated. At high water, this island consists of a pile of rocks, covering not much more than an acre, above the surface of the water, but at medium low water it is an island of considerable extent, and at extreme low water, according to the testimony of the defendant himself, it is not an island at all, but is accessible, dry shod, from the main-land.

The exception and reservation, if it be one in law, is "that portion thereof covered by the navigable waters of the inner bay," etc. The very language of this exception would certainly exclude from the exception the island, which cannot be, in the nature of things, "covered by the navigable waters," and this exclusion would extend to the island as shown at ordinary low-water mark. This conclusion must be inevitable, and not open to debate, if we are to be governed by these words of exception and reservation. If, on the other hand, courses, distances, and quantity are to govern in the construction of this clause, and the determination of what is covered by the reservation, then the island is necessarily a part of, and is not excluded from, the reservation. But the very language of the exception forbids such a construction. There is no word in the entire certificate of the surveyor to show that all within the survey of the inner bay is reserved, but only that part thereof which is covered by the navigable waters. This conclusion would determine this case were it not for the fact that the 18.88 acres patented to defendant, and of which he admits himself in possession, include much more than the island, as the same appears at even ordinary low tide. • Because of this fact, it becomes necessary to go further, and inquire whether the United States had any property right within that inner bay, at the date of the patent made by the government to defendant, which its officers had the power to convey.

Returning again to the Mexican grant, of which it is conceded that juridical possession was given in 1817, and final confirmation made by the constituted authorities of the Mexican government in 1822, we find that the judicial department of our own government, in 1857, finally adjudged, determined, and decreed that this inner bay was included within, and was a part of, said Mexican grant, and in and by said decree gave the entire boundaries, showing that it was so included. This was a final adjudication that the lands within the inner bay never were, never became, and never could become, unless by subsequent purchase, the property of the United States. It had passed into private ownership before the conquest, and this government was, by its treaty, bound to protect the title thereof in the Mexican grantee, or his successors in interest. By its decree of confirmation, the government did so protect this title, and determined that it had no interest in the lands. There was nothing in the decree to indicate or intimate that the inner bay, or any part thereof within the lines of the boundaries there given, was excepted or reserved from the grant, or to authorize the surveyor to either survey or make such an exception or reservation. The grant was one by boundaries, and not by quantity, and was complete within itself.

Turning to the patent, which, as before stated, is dated December 18, 1858, we find that it commences with and consists of recitals of the presentation of the grant for confirmation, and of all the proceedings down to and including the decree of confirmation, and the dismissal of appeal therefrom, followed by a recital of the certificate of survey and plat made by the surveyor general, and then, and not till then, proceeds with the granting clause, as follows: "Now know ye that the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and pursuant to the provisions of the act of congress aforesaid of March 3, 1851, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said * * * and to their heirs, the tract of land embraced in the foregoing survey, in the respective shares," etc. There is not in the entire granting portion of this patent, nor at any place in the entire instrument, except in the recital of the certificate of survey, a word to indicate that any exception or reservation whatever is made, either in the Mexican grant, in the decree, or in the grant or relinquishment finally made by the United States. The latter is "of the tract of land embraced in the foregoing survey." What "foregoing survey?" The one which is complete in itself, and confessedly conforms minutely to the original grant, the juridical possession given thereunder, the monuments then established, both natural and artificial, and to the decree of final confirmation; or to that survey amended by adding thereto a complete, independent, and unauthorized survey, embracing 1,100.50 acres, lying wholly within the lines of the authorized survey, but to be taken out of the grant or relinquishment thereby made? This reference to survey in the granting clause of the patent is not free from ambiguity, but, when construed in the light of the decree of confirmation, under authority of which the patent was made, and of the law as to what the government then possessed, and could grant in the premises, it must be held that the words "foregoing survey" refer to the first of the complete surveys given in the recital,—the one which confessedly conforms to the original Mexican grant, and the decree of confirmation thereof; and that the second survey recited therein, descriptive of a reservation attempted to be made by the surveyor, but for which there was no warrant in law or in the decree, is surplusage, and of no effect. The patent was, in effect, but the execution of the decree of confirmation. U. S. v. Minor, 114 U. S. 242, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 836. The officers of the government had no power to execute the decree in part, and by the same act, or any other, to withhold execution of the balance, or make reservation of a part of that which had been adjudged to be already the property of the claimants. Nor is there anything in the language of the patent which necessarily leads to the conclusion that the president, in executing this patent, attempted to make any such reservation, or do less than execute the decree as a whole. The act of the surveyor in making this second survey, and describing it as of an exception or reservation, was without authority, not binding upon his superiors or the government. The presumption is that the officers whose duty it was to prepare and execute the patent did not consider themselves bound by it, nor attempt to act upon it, and there is no language employed by them in the patent which necessarily overrides this presumption. "When a decree gives the boundaries of a tract to which the claim is confirmed with precision, (as was done in this case,) it is conclusive not only on the question of title, but also as to the boundaries which it specifies," (U. S. v. Hancock, 133 U. S. 196, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264;) and it was the duty of the surveyor, in making survey of the claim finally confirmed, "to follow the decree of confirmation as closely as practicable," (Id.; also Act Cong. July 1, 1864; 13 St. 334.) This statute, it is true, was passed after this survey, but it established no new law,—was merely declaratory of what always was the duty of ministerial officers in executing the decrees of court. In this case, it was practicable to, and he did, follow the decree of confirmation minutely and exactly, and made a complete and perfect survey according to the same. That which he did afterwards in the way of making addenda to his survey, was in excess of his authority, and void. That the court had authority to fix and determine these boundaries definitely in its decree was settled in the Fossat Case, 2 Wall. 710, and U. S. v. Fossatt, 21 How. 447, and that when so fixed they are conclusive is affirmed in U. S. v. Hancock, supra, probably the very last case decided by that court of last resort upon such a question. It was also held by this court in its last decision upon this question. Association v. Knight, 24 Pac. Rep. 823, (filed September 4, 1890.) And it was long since established by the supreme court of the United States, and has been steadily followed in this court, that when a specific tract of land is so confirmed according to ascertained boundaries, fixed by the decree, the confirmee takes title, upon which he may maintain action in ejectment. Stanford v. Taylor, 18 How. 412; Mining Co. v. Clarkin, 14 Cal. 551; Soto v. Kroder, 19 Cal. 95. In such a case, the patent from the United States is evidence only of pre-existing title. Waterman v. Smith, 13 Cal. 418. "Segregation was made by the decree." Mining Co. v. Clarkin, supra. Both affirmed in Mahoney v. Van Winkle, 38 Cal. 456. That when the boundaries are fixed by the decree the survey must conform thereto was also held by this court in Hale v. Akers, 69 Cal. 167, 10 Pac. Rep. 385. "The survey is not an independent act, but is an act performed under the decree, and preparatory to its [the decree] being carried into effect by a patent," (More v. Massini, 37 Cal. 436,) and which patent is but the execution of the decree, (U. S. v. Minor, supra.)

But it is claimed on the part of respondent that, notwithstanding the authorities cited, and the principles therein established, the reservation attempted to be made by the surveyor general and the survey thereof was correct and lawful, for the reason, as he claims, that no title passed by the Mexican grant to any lands within the exterior boundaries of the grant, except such as were situate above ordinary high-water mark of the sea-shore. In the recent case of Association v. Knight, supra, we held that the pueblo did not take and hold, under the laws of Mexico, and under those laws could not acquire title to, lands situate below ordinary high-water mark of the sea-shore, and cited authorities to show that such was the Mexican law, and also the decree of confirmation in that case to show that by such decree, the boundary of the pueblo, at the point under consideration, was fixed by and at high-water mark, and so found and established by the decree. But this is not a parallel case. Here there is no question of what are or can be the rights of a pueblo under the Mexican or any other law. There is no pueblo at this point, and neither party claims under one, or under the laws relating to pueblos. One is claiming under a Mexican grant, the other under the United States, direct. In that case it was conceded as having been long since established by the decisions of both state and federal courts that the Mexican government could, and sometimes did, make private grants of lands extending below the ordinary high-water mark of the sea-shore. This was so held in Teschemacher v. Thompson, 18 Cal. 11, and in Ward v. Mulford, 32 Cal. 365, and the grants there referred to, like the present one, were confirmed, patented, and respected by the government and the courts. But even if this contention of the respondent, that nothing passed by the Mexican grant, or the patent issued in execution of the decree of confirmation thereof, lying below ordinary high-water mark, be true, it still follows that so much of the judgment appealed from in this case as adjudges and decrees that the defendant is the owner, and entitled to the possession, of the tract of land described in said judgment, to-wit, the 18.88 acres described in defendant's answer, and in the patent to him, is erroneous; for, according to his own testimony, which is uncontradicted, more than 17-18 of that tract lies below ordinary high-water mark, and is, therefore, land which, if it was not granted by the Mexican government, but remained a part of the public domain, became, on the 9th day of September, 1850, the property of the state of California; and the government of the United States, or its officers, had no power to make a grant thereof, or give title thereto, at the date of defendant's patent. Defendant makes no other claim to the property, except that based upon his patent from the United States, and his possession thereunder. If the island was not included in the grant under which plaintiff claims, defendant's title to that might be good, but even then it could not be good to the land below ordinary high-water mark. In our judgment, however, the title, not only to the island, but to the whole of said inner bay within the exterior lines of the Mexican grant, as described in the decree of confirmation, and in the survey of exterior boundaries, passed to the claimants under said grant, and is vested in the plaintiffs. Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

THORNTON, J. I concur in reversing the judgment and order herein, but for other reasons than those stated in the opinion of Justice Fox. I am of opinion that the decree of confirmation of the Rancho San Pedro includes what is called the "Inner Bay of San Pedro." The patent, however, contains a reservation from grant, which reservation is confined to and embraces only that portion of the inner bay above mentioned which is covered by the navigable waters of the bay. It appears from the testimony that Mormon island is not so covered. It is not so covered by the waters of the bay at ordinary high tide. I am of opinion that plaintiff is entitled to recover the island, and such other portion of the tract of land sued for, described in the complaint as containing 18.88 acres, as is not covered by the navigable waters of the inner bay aforesaid. The judgment and order should be reversed, and the cause remanded, that the limits of such portion may be determined by the court below, and, when so determined, judgment should be rendered for it in favor of the plaintiffs.

McFARLAND, J. I dissent. This is a pure action of ejectment. Plaintiffs' asserted title to the demanded premises rests upon a patent of the United States issued for a Mexican grant under the act of congress of March 3, 1851. By the thirteenth section of that act it is provided that after a claim under a Mexican grant shall have been confirmed, "a patent shall issue to the claimant upon his presenting to the general land-office an authentic certificate of such confirmation, and a plat or survey of the said land duly certified and approved by the surveyor general of California, whose duty it shall be to cause all private claims which shall be finally confirmed to be accurately surveyed, and to furnish plats of the same." In the case at bar, plaintiffs claim title under a patent for a tract of land known by the name of "San Pedro." The patent recites a plat and survey made under said thirteenth section of said act of March 3, 1851, and contains full copies of such survey and plat; and it then conveys to the grantees "the tract of land embraced and described in the foregoing survey." There is no other description of the land granted. Now "the foregoing survey" does not include the land sued for in this action; indeed such land is expressly excluded; and that certainly seems to me to end the case. How can a plaintiff in ejectment recover land which is not included in the title-deeds on which he relies? I am clearly of the opinion that the judgment and order should be affirmed.

JONES V. DUCHOW. (No. 13219.)

LIBEL—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ—IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS.

In an action for libel, in publishing that plaintiff had been compelled to leave his former place of residence to escape punishment by a mob, a letter, not under oath, written and signed by reputable citizens of the place, four months before the alleged departure of plaintiff, giving him a good character, is neither admissible as part of the res gestæ, nor to contradict witness for defendant, who testifies that plaintiff was, at the time of his departure, denounced by all good citizens. BEATTY, C. J., and FOX, J., dissenting.

In bank. On rehearing. For former report, see 23 Pac. Rep. 371.

F. D. & G. W. Nicol, F. W. Street, and E. A. Rodgers, for appellant. J. H. Budd and I. M. Kolloch, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Upon rehearing and further consideration of this case we are satisfied that the court below did err in the particulars pointed out in the opinion filed herein, February 28, 1890, and the same will stand as the opinion and order of the court on this appeal.

We dissent: BEATTY, C. J.; FOX, J.

THORNTON, J. I concur in the judgment of reversal herein, for the reason that the letter allowed in evidence to contradict the witness, Gift, was erroneously admitted. It was admitted on the offer of plaintiff to contradict a statement of Gift brought out on cross-examination by plaintiff, which statement was collateral to the issue. The plaintiff was bound by Gift's statement, and could not be allowed to contradict it.

Ex parte BARRY. (No. 20,607.)

CONTEMPT—PROCEEDINGS OF COURT—NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION.

A publication made by a newspaper immediately after a judge of the superior court has sustained a demurrer to a petition with leave to amend, falsely charging him, in so doing, "with deliberate lying about the law, deliberate, intentional falsification in his official capacity, and deliberate, intentional denial of justice," with being a "fool," an "impudent rascal, a criminal on the bench," is a flagrant abuse of the liberty of the press, and an "unlawful interference with the proceedings of a court," within Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1209, subd. 9, and the offender is punishable by fine and imprisonment, as for a contempt.

In bank.

E. P. Cole, for petitioner. H. S. Philbrook, amicus curiæ.

WORKS, J. This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus. The following affidavit was filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, charging the petitioner with contempt of court: "State of California, city and county of San Francisco—ss.: William J. Dixon, being duly sworn, deposes and says that one Henry Bingham is the defendant in an action wherein the people of the state of California, upon the relation of Charles J. Swift, is plaintiff; that said action is now pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and is still undetermined; that said Henry Bingham did interpose and file a demurrer to the complaint in said action, which said demurrer was, after full argument, on the 2d day of August, 1889, by the court sustained, and, on said last-mentioned day, the said plaintiff was given leave to amend his said complaint within ten days thereafter; that the time granted said plaintiff by said court to amend his said complaint has not yet expired; that one James H. Barry is the editor of a paper published weekly in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, which said paper is called the 'Weekly Star,' that on the 3d day of August, 1889, and while said action was then and there pending in said superior court, said James H. Barry did published and cause to be published at the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, in the said paper, the Weekly Star, the following false, malicious, untrue, libelous, and defamatory matter of and concerning Honorable F. W. Lawler, judge of the superior court of the said city and county of San Francisco, state of California: 'A Criminal Judge. We charge Francis W. Lawler, judge of the superior court of San Francisco, with deliberate lying about the law, deliberate, intentional falsification in his official capacity, and deliberate, intentional denial of justice. He is not merely a fool, but an impudent rascal; a criminal on the bench. He ought to be impeached and removed from office, and disfranchised, indicted, and punished by fine and imprisonment; made a convict of. But our criminal machinery and our legislature are so often elected and used, (just as Lawler acts,) not to punish wrong-doing, but on purpose to protect it, that such a proceeding is hopeless. If the information which we have received is wrong, let the editors of the Weekly Star be at once arrested on a charge of criminal libel. We invite and defy Lawler to venture to defend himself, even in a San Francisco court by this proceeding. We shall make the crime of this judge so plain, that even the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. The case is this: A suit has been brought against Supervisor Henry Bingham to determine whether he is entitled to the office of supervisor. This suit was assigned by the Buckley judge, Levy, to the other Buckley judge, Lawler, upon which every lawyer in town knew beforehand what Lawler would do, though they could not have foreseen just how he would begin to do it. When the case came up before Lawler yesterday, Bingham's attorney "demurred;" that is, he said the superior court had [no] authority to try a case like this. In reply, the complainant's attorney showed that the constitution expressly provides that the superior court has jurisdiction over all such cases. And this impudent falsifier of the law and denier of justice, Francis W. Lawler, allowed the demurrer, absolutely giving for a reason that, "although the constitution does give the superior court jurisdiction over all such cases, yet this is not all cases, but merely one case, and therefore this court has no jurisdiction over it. This seems impossible. But we affirm it to be true, and upon the affirmation, we are deliberately taking the risk of being publicly dishonored. It is exactly as if the burglar Jimmy Hope had been discharged by Judge Toohy without trial, on the ground that the "law only provided for the trying of all burglars, and therefore did not provide for trying this one"—* * * with intent then and there unlawfully to interfere with the proceedings of a court of justice, and to insult the said Francis W. Lawler, Esquire, judge of said court, in the discharge of the duties of his office, and to expose him to obloquy and contempt. W. J. DIXON. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 9th day of August, 1889. GEO. H. PIPPY, Deputy County Clerk."

Upon the affidavit being filed, the matter was referred for hearing to Hon. WILLIAM T. WALLACE, J. McM. SHAFER, and J. P. HOGE, judges of said court, who heard the same, found the petitioner guilty, and adjudged that he be imprisoned in the county jail for the term of five days, and pay a fine of $500. The petitioner contends that there were certain defects in the manner of charging and bringing him before the court; but we think there were no such defects in the proceedings as would entitle the petitioner to his discharge.

Again, it is contended that the publication of the article above set out was not a contempt of court, because the case of People v. Bingham, therein referred to, had been finally disposed of, and therefore the language used could not in any way affect or interfere with the proceedings of the court in said action. But the affidavit shows that the action was still pending and undisposed of. A demurrer to the complaint had been sustained with leave to amend. The time for amendment had not yet expired. A mere formal amendment might have been made, and the same question as to the merits again presented. The language was well calculated to intimidate or improperly influence a timid judge, or one unduly sensitive to public feeling or censure. It seems to us to be too clear for argument that the publication was made at such a time as to affect or have a tendency to affect the proceeding then pending in court, and this contention of the petitioner cannot prevail. The act complained of was an "unlawful interference with the proceedings of a court," and therefore within subdivision 9 of section 1209 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This being so, the citation of other authorities to support the contention of respondent that the publication of the article was a contempt of court was unnecessary.

We do not understand the learned counsel for the petitioner to attempt to justify the language used in this publication, but much is said about the liberty of speech and of the press. It is said in broad language: "The liberty of speech and of the press is unlimited and unrestrained upon all subjects whatsoever, whether it be the decision of the court, or the character of the judge. The only check upon this liberty is the responsibility for the abuse of it." This may be true in the sense that the liberty to speak and write on any subject cannot be restrained or prevented in advance, and that the only remedy is to punish subsequently for any publication that amounts to an abuse of such liberty. That is precisely what has been done in this case. If the language used was improper, but affected the judge in his individual capacity, and was not an interference with the proceedings of the court over which he was presiding, the remedy could not be by a proceeding for contempt. So the question is twofold,—was the publication an abuse of the liberty of the press? and, if so, was it an interference with the proceedings of the court? The last of these we have already determined. As to the former, the liberty of the press to fairly criticize the official conduct of a judge, or the decisions or proceedings of the courts, and to expose and bring to light any wrongful, corrupt, or improper act of a judicial officer, is one that should be carefully preserved and protected by the courts. If a public supervision and censure, through the press or otherwise, is necessary to suppress corruption, and keep the channels of justice pure and untainted, the right to exercise such supervision, and to censure and expose wrong-doing, should be and must be upheld by the courts. But the publisher of a newspaper who assumes to criticize or censure a public officer, or the proceedings of a court, must know whereof he speaks. If he censures unjustly or charges falsely, he must be held strictly accountable. While his right of free speech is protected, his abuse of it must be punished. The great trouble with the freedom of the press at the present day, so far as it affects the courts, is that it is used indiscriminately in many cases, not with the laudable purpose of correcting abuses, and exposing wrong-doing, but to gratify ill will and passion, or pander to the passions or prejudices of others. This tendency should be severely condemned and punished, not only for the protection of the courts, and the preservation of a pure and independent judiciary, but as a means of upholding the liberty of the press in its true sense. The publication complained of here was a most flagrant abuse of the liberty of the press, and was justly punished as such.

Certain technical objections to the proceedings of the court below, including the form of the judgment, are raised and discussed at some length by the petitioner, but none of them are well taken. Writ denied, and prisoner remanded.

Ex parte TAYLOR. (No. 20,733.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—VALIDITY OF CITY ORDINANCE—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

1. Const. Cal. art. 11, § 6, provides that municipal corporations shall not be created by special laws, and that all charters heretofore granted shall be controlled by general laws. Pen. Code, § 370, and Civil Code, § 3479, declare the obstruction of a street a public nuisance, and Pen. Code, § 372, provides that one who maintains a public nuisance is guilty of a misdemeanor, when the punishment for the offense is not otherwise prescribed. Pen. Code, § 19, declares that, "except in cases where a different punishment is prescribed by this Code, every offense declared to be a misdemeanor is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail," etc. Held, that section 9 of the charter of San Jose, empowering the city council "to define, prevent, and remove nuisances," and to fix penalties by fine or imprisonment, is constitutional, and one imprisoned for maintaining a nuisance in a street contrary to an ordinance made in pursuance thereof, and providing a penalty of the same character, though less in degree than that prescribed by the statute, will not be released on habeas corpus.

2. But, even if the charter and ordinance are unconstitutional, the prisoner is not entitled to be discharged, since maintaining a nuisance in a public street is an offense under the above statutes, and the indictment charges that the acts were done "contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California."

Morehouse & Tuttle, for petitioner.
William B. Hardy, for respondent.

Fox, J. The petitioner is convicted of violation of an ordinance of the city of San Jose, in relation to streets and sidewalks. It is claimed that the ordinance is void because in conflict with the constitution, and with general law; by reason whereof the city council had no authority to pass the same. The city of San Jose is a municipal corporation, existing under a special charter, passed before the adoption of the present constitution. By section 9 of that charter, the council is authorized and empowered "to pass all necessary and proper laws, * * * to lay out, alter, vacate, improve, cleanse, water, and repair streets and sidewalks, * * * to define, prevent, and remove nuisances, * * * to impose and appropriate fines, penalties, and forfeitures for any and all violations of city ordinances, and, for a breach or violation of any city ordinance, may fix the penalty by fine or imprisonment," etc. The ordinance referred to forbids the obstruction of the streets or sidewalks, and provides a penalty for the violation thereof. It is not contended that the act of the petitioner, for which he was arrested and convicted, was not a violation of the terms of the ordinance, or that the penalty imposed is in excess of or different from that authorized by the ordinance. Reference is made in support of the petition, to section 6, art. 11, of the constitution. This is the section which provides that municipal corporations shall not be created by special laws, and that all charters heretofore granted shall be controlled by general laws. Upon the faith of this provision, it is claimed that a municipal corporation has no authority to determine and declare what shall constitute a nuisance upon a public street, and to provide for the punishment of one who maintains such a nuisance, because the general law has provided for the same. In support of that proposition, we are cited to sections 370 and 372 of the Penal Code, and 3479 of the Civil Code. Section 370 of the Penal Code, and 3479 of the Civil Code, declare the obstruction of any public park, square, street, or highway, a public nuisance; and section 372 of the Penal Code provides that one who maintains a public nuisance, or willfully omits to perform any legal duty relating to the removal of a public nuisance, is guilty of a misdemeanor, when the punishment for the offense is not otherwise prescribed. Punishment therefor is not otherwise prescribed in that chapter of the general law, but section 19 of the Penal Code declares that, "except in cases where a different punishment is prescribed by this Code, every offense declared to be a misdemeanor is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or both." It thus appears that, under the general law, the obstruction of a street or highway is a nuisance; that a person maintaining a nuisance in the street is guilty of a misdemeanor, and is upon conviction punishable therefor, as prescribed in said section 19. Is the ordinance in conflict with this general law? We think not. The ordinance does not declare the obstruction of the street to be a nuisance, or a misdemeanor; but, proceeding upon the theory that the state law itself so declares and provides, it simply forbids the obstruction, or declares that such obstruction shall be unlawful. In the exercise of its police power, and the authority expressly granted by the charter, it provides for the removal of the obstruction, and prescribes a penalty for refusal to remove it upon the notice prescribed to be given by the municipal authorities having charge of that department of the local government. That penalty is not of a different character from, or in excess of, the one prescribed by the general law, but is of the same character, only less in degree. But why should the municipality legislate upon the subject at all? A brief review of the legislation, both state and municipal, and of the decisions of this court upon the subject, will furnish an instructive answer to this question. Municipal charters have in this state universally conferred upon local municipal governments power to legislate for the maintenance and care of their public streets. It is conceded here, and this court has held, that streets include sidewalks, as well as the road-way, (Bonnet v. San Francisco, 65 Cal. 230, 3 Pac. Rep. 815;) and that the obstruction of a sidewalk is a public nuisance, (Marini v. Graham, 67 Cal. 130, 7 Pac. Rep. 442.) But in the latter case it was also held that a legalized obstruction of the sidewalk was not a nuisance. This was under an ordinance which, by implication, authorized the obstruction of a sidewalk, to the extent of three-tenths the width thereof. It thus recognized the fact that, notwithstanding the statute, the power of the municipality over the streets was such that it might make a legal authorization of an obstruction. The act constituting the offense in this case was the obstruction of the sidewalk for the depth of 2 feet in width and 40 feet in length, of the inner side thereof. The ordinance in this case, from the date of its passage, December 10, 1881, until amended June 9, 1890, by clear implication, authorized the obstruction here made; but on the latter date it was so amended as to forbid it. This obstruction has been maintained for many years, but under the authority of Marini v. Graham, supra, it could not be punished as a misdemeanor because it was a legalized obstruction. Since the amendment, however, it has ceased to be legalized, and is now maintained in direct violation both of the statute and the ordinance. The passage of the ordinance in its original form was necessary to legalize the act, if it could be legalized; and, as seen, this court has held that it could be so legalized, and the parties had the right to act upon the authority of that decision so long as it remained unreversed. The effect of the amendment was to render the act no longer legal, and the continuance of the act thereafter constituted a public offense, for which the party was and is amenable to the law.

A somewhat similar question to the one here under consideration arose under the same general laws, and a municipal ordinance, in the case of Ex parte Casinello, 62 Cal. 538, and the conviction and judgment was there held valid. We are of the opinion that the city of San Jose had authority, under its charter, to pass the ordinance; that the same is not in conflict with the general law; and that a conviction under either is a bar to a prosecution under the other. Even if this is not so, the prisoner is not entitled to be discharged, for it is conceded that the acts charged constitute a violation of the statute in relation to the obstruction of streets. The complaint states facts which constitute a public offense under the statute, and alleges that they were done "contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California," and the judgment is not in excess of that authorized by the statute. Both the offense and the penalty were within the jurisdiction of the justice's court. In Re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. Rep. 405, relied upon by the petitioner, the question whether the judgment was valid, notwithstanding the invalidity of the ordinance, was not raised or considered. The defendant has acquired no right to maintain the obstruction, by prescription, for none such could be so acquired. Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265; People v. Pope, 53 Cal. 437; City of Visalia v. Jacob, 65 Cal. 434, 4 Pac. Rep. 433. Let the writ be discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

WE CONCUR: BEATTY, C. J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

PATERSON, J. I concur in the judgment on the ground last stated by Mr. Justice Fox.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment. The defendant was convicted of placing, and suffering to remain, on the inside of a sidewalk something which obstructed the free passage of said sidewalk; and I do not think that an ordinance making such act an offense is in conflict with the general law of the state found in section 370, which declares the obstruction of a lake, river, park, street, highway, and other enumerated places, to be a public nuisance, and the person who maintains it to be guilty of a misdemeanor. There are many matters connected with streets, sidewalks, awnings, trap-doors, etc., which are particularly within the scope of municipal regulation, and which cities and towns may legislate about without intruding upon any general law now in existence. The charter of San Jose giving power to pass the ordinance in question was enacted after said section of the Code; and it is evident that the legislature, by passing a law preventing nuisances on public highways throughout the state at large, did not intend to prohibit the municipality from dealing further with streets and sidewalks within its corporate limits. The matter involved in the Sic Case, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. Rep. 405, was smoking opium, and maintaining places where that vice might be practiced; and the legislature had legislated upon that subject in great detail. The crime was the same in all parts of the state. But it is quite apparent that acts, which would be of little consequence if done on public roads running through sparsely settled regions, might be very serious evils if done on the crowded streets and sidewalks of populous towns and cities. But I agree, also, that, in this particular case, the judgment can be sustained under the state law, even though the ordinance be considered invalid.

INSURANCE—CONDITIONS OF POLICY—BREACH—WAIVER.

1. Where a fire insurance policy refers to a survey of the insured premises and the application as a warranty on the part of the insured, the right of the company to rely on such application and survey is not defeated by the fact that they were not furnished until after the policy was delivered, and that they were written on blanks prepared for the use of another insurance company.

2. In an action on a policy, evidence that the insured premises were idle for two months, during which time the insured employed only one watchman, who habitually slept in a building 300 feet away, with the approval of the insured, shows a failure on the part of the insured to comply with a condition of the policy requiring him to employ a watchman "to be in and about the premises by day and night" during the time that they are idle, and not merely negligence on the part of the watchman in performing his duty, and is a good defense to the action.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN W. ARMSTRONG, Judge.

Action by Ira P. Rankin and others against the Amazon Insurance Company on a fire insurance policy. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals.

T. C. Van Ness and Huggin, Van Ness & Dibble, for appellant. Doyle, Galpin & Scripture, (Philip G. Galpin, of counsel,) for respondents.

FOX, J. 1. The policy of insurance upon which this action was brought was applied for November 21, 1884, and was written up assuming the risk from 12 o'clock noon on that day, for the term of one year, but was counter-signed by the general agents at San Francisco, November 24, 1884, and presumably was not delivered until that day. When delivered a part of the written portion thereof was on a rider attached and properly authenticated, the blank being insufficient to furnish room for all the written portion. On that rider, and as a portion of the written part of the policy, was the following: "Reference is hereby made to a survey and diagram, on file in the office of J. C. Mitchell & Son, which is made a part of this policy, and a warranty on the part of the assured." The court below evidently concluded, and in that conclusion we concur, that in fact there was no survey and diagram on file in the office of Mitchell & Son, either on the 21st or the 24th of November. But the uncontradicted evidence is that Mitchell & Son were the insurance brokers who acted for and on behalf of the assured in getting the insurance, and that they promised that such a survey and diagram should be prepared, and a copy thereof furnished the insurers. Such a survey and diagram was prepared by the engineer of the Owens River Mining & Smelting Company, owners of the property covered by the insurance, and was on file in the office of Mitchell & Son, on the 4th day of December, 1884; but the evidence still leaves it uncertain whether it was so on file on the 3d day of December, 1884, at which time the policy was taken to the office of the insurers, and the written portion thereof rewritten upon another rider, which was duly authenticated and attached, increasing the amount of insurance allowed by $600, and winding up with the same expression as before: "Reference is hereby made to a survey and diagram on file in the office of J. C. Mitchell & Son, which is made a part of this policy, and a warranty on the part of the assured." At some time, but at what precise time does not appear, a copy of this survey and diagram, dated December 4, 1884, the survey constituting a voluminous document consisting of questions and answers, and written upon a blank prepared for the use of another insurance company, and not of this defendant, was presented to and filed with the agents of defendant, as and for a copy of the survey and diagram, and as and for the application, referred to in the written portion of the policy, which the brokers had agreed to furnish. This document was offered in evidence. It was signed "Owens River Mfg. and S. Co., by Hoyt & Son, Applicants." The policy ran to the Owens River Mining & Smelting Company, "loss, if any, payable to Rankin, Brayton & Co." To this evidence "plaintiffs objected, upon the ground that at the time when the papers were presented to the company the insurance had already been effected, and the rights of Rankin, Brayton & Co. had vested; and upon the further ground that there was no authority upon the part of Hoyt & Son to make any contract on behalf of the Owens River Smelting & Mining Company; and upon the further ground that the paper was dated December 4th, and was made the day after the policy was made, according to the date of the last rider in the policy." This objection was sustained, to which ruling the defendant excepted, and it is now assigned as error. The question as to the authority of Hoyt & Son was unimportant. This policy, though taken in the name of the mining and smelting company, was for the immediate benefit of these plaintiffs, and the policy on its face was made, "loss, if any, payable" to them. The authority of Mitchell & Son to effect the insurance for them was amply proved, and uncontradicted. It is also uncontradicted that they promised to procure and place on file the survey and diagram. The only question is whether the fact that it was not on file when the policy was delivered defeats the right of the defendant to rely upon it, and inroduce it in evidence as a part of the contract. If this question depended solely upon the clause of the policy written upon the riders, and hereinabove quoted, the right of defendant to rely upon the diagram and survey as a part of the contract of insurance, and introduce it in evidence as such, might be seriously questioned, and there are several authorities which might be cited in support of the negative of that proposition, some of which are more directly in point than Caldwell v. Center, 30 Cal. 543, cited and relied upon by respondents. But appellant does not rest its right either solely or mainly upon that clause. There is in the policy another clause which provides: "For further particulars reference is made to an application and survey No. —, furnished by and a warranty on the part of the assured, which is hereby made a part of this policy." Mitchell testifies that when he procured the policy he promised to procure and furnish such an application and survey, and that he did procure and furnish this one in compliance with that promise, and it is contradicted that he did so, and that this was the only one furnished. The contract was to be in two parts, as all these contracts are, each dependent upon the other. One of the parts was finished at one time, and in this instance, either the other was finished at another time or has never been finished. If finished, they constitute one contract; if never finished, there was never any contract. This paper, which was furnished by the agent of the insured in pursuance of his promise, answers the calls of the other part of the contract; is in the form of an application and survey, accompanied by a diagram illustrating the survey, and furnishes the ordinary information upon which the insurer's part of such a contract is usually based. It was furnished and accepted as the basis of the insurers' part of the contract in this case. That the delivery did not occur at the same time, and that it was written upon a blank prepared for the use of another corporation, makes it none the less a part of the contract upon which this action is brought, and as such it was error to refuse to admit it in evidence. The fact that it was not made at or before the execution of the policy may have deprived it of the quality of an express warranty by operation of law, under section 2605 of the Civil Code, but it still operates as evidence of representations made as inducement for the issuance of this policy, (Civil Code, §§ 2571-2577,) and as such it was proper matter to submit to the jury. Whether warranty by operation of law or not, it was declared such upon the face of the contract, and unless unlawful the court has no power to eliminate it from the contract. In either event, whether warranty or mere representations, the defendant was entitled to have it go to the jury; particularly so since, even if mere representation, and found to be false in a material point, it gave the injured party a right to rescind the contract (Id. § 2580) at any time previous to the commencement of the action, (Id. § 2583,) and it was admitted that, before the commencement of the action, the defendant had tendered a return of the premium, and notified the parties that the policy was canceled.

2. The next point urged by appellant is that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction asked by appellant, and in giving the instruction which it did give, in reference to what is called the "watchman clause" of the policy. The policy, as originally written or printed, contained this clause: "It is understood and agreed that, during such time as the above mill is idle, a watchman shall be employed by the insured to be in and upon the premises day and night." This clause was changed at the instance of the insured, by striking out the word "upon," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "about." The clause as thus framed and accepted was an express promissory warranty on the part of the insured, and that it was made and accepted with full notice, and not merely an oversight on their part, is evidenced by the fact that the change was made at their instance. The question for the jury to determine was whether or not this promissory warranty was kept on the part of the insured. Exception is taken to the refusal of the court to give each of three separate instructions asked by appellant, but only one of these exceptions is urged in argument in this court,—the first. We think that instruction, as written, was correctly refused, not because it did not correctly state the law as applicable to such contracts, but because it not only stated the substance of certain evidence, but undertook to state the effect of the whole evidence tending to prove whether or not the contract had been complied with in that regard. In the instruction which the court did give, it correctly declared that the clause of the policy above quoted was a warranty that the insured would employ a watchman to be in and about the premises day and night, when the mill was idle, and that if they had failed to do so they could not recover. Neither do we think the court erred in what it subsequently said on the subject of the effect of an omission of the watchman to do his duty by negligence. That portion of the instruction is in harmony with section 2629, Civil Code, and the authorities cited in Deering's note to that section.

3. The verdict is not supported by the evidence, and is against the law as laid down by the court in its instructions, and as established by the authorities. Insurance contracts, like others, must be enforced according to the intention of the parties. Wells v. Insurance Co., 44 Cal. 406, 407. There is no ambiguity about this contract in this particular. The insured covenanted to employ a watchman to be in and about the premises day and night, during such time as the mill was idle. There is no dispute in the evidence touching these facts: That for two months before this fire occurred the mill was idle; that the mill, "frame buildings, adjoining and communicating," with the machinery and property therein, was the immediate subject of the insurance; that during the two months the mill had so remained idle, up to and at the time of the fire, but one person had been or was employed as watchman; that he had no special instructions as to watching, either day or night; that as matter of fact he did not watch the whole of any night, but habitually, and with the knowledge and approval of the superintendent, slept at night in a building 300 or 400 feet away from the mill, and was sleeping there when the fire occurred. This building was situate upon land belonging to, or in possession of, the mining and smelting company, but it would do violence to common sense to hold that it was "in" or "about" the insured property, or that a man who habitually and nightly slept in it was, while sleeping there, a watchman in or about the insured property 300 or 400 feet away. And if, as shown without contradiction, he habitually and nightly slept there, with the knowledge and approval of his employer, it is too much to say that he was a watchman employed to be in or about the insured premises during the night-time. An employment which knowingly and habitually suffers such a course of procedure is not such an employment as is demanded by the terms of this contract. These facts do not show mere negligence in the performance of duty, but rather failure to employ for such performance. The evidence of a failure to comply with the conditions of this clause of the policy is much stronger than it was in the case of Trojan Min. Co. v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 67 Cal. 27, 7 Pac. Rep. 4, and there it was held that recovery could not be had because of such failure. The facts here disclosed justify and call for the adoption and repetition of the language used in Wenzel v. Insurance Co., 67 Cal. 440, 7 Pac. Rep. 817: "It is apparent from the uncontradicted evidence in the case that Lynch [McMurray] was not employed as a watchman of the premises, within the sense and meaning of the contract." There is nothing in Sierra, etc., Min. Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 76 Cal. 236, 18 Pac. Rep. 267, cited by respondent, in conflict with this view. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

CRIMINAL LAW—INFORMATION—DEMURRER—VERDICT—JUDGMENT.

1. A demurrer to an information will be overruled where the information is sufficient without the part excepted to.

2. On an information for grand larceny, a verdict of "guilty as charged" is a conviction of grand larceny.

3. Where one has been convicted on an information for grand larceny, a judgment that for the crime of which he was charged and convicted he be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for the term of nine years is sufficient.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; MURPHY, Judge.

Carroll Cook and J. E. Foulds, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, for respondent.

Fox, J. 1. The demurrer to the information was properly overruled. All that part of it to which exception is taken may be stricken out, and it still remains a good information under the statute. The presence of the language excepted to does not prejudice the defendant, or affect the validity of the information.

2. The information is for grand larceny, and a verdict of "guilty as charged" is a conviction of grand larceny. People v. Whitely, 64 Cal. 211; People v. Price, 67 Cal. 350, 7 Pac. Rep. 745.

3. The judgment roll shows a full compliance with the requirements of section 1200 of the Penal Code at the time of the arraignment for judgment.

4. The information was for, and the conviction was of, grand larceny committed in the city and county of San Francisco. The judgment of the court was that for the crime of which he was so charged, and for which he had been so convicted, it is "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said Antonio Perez be punished by imprisonment in the state-prison of the state of California at San Quentin for the term of nine (9) years." This was sufficient, under the statute. Judgment affirmed.

MARTIN et al. v. COOPER et al. (No. 12,862.)

BOUNDARIES—NATURAL MONUMENTS—COURSES AND DISTANCES.

The patents for two grants of land did not call for each other as coterminous boundaries, and neither was described with reference to the other, but each grant was described as being bounded, along the sides nearest the other, by a river, one by the left bank and the other by the right bank, and in each courses and distances were given as the meander line of the bank referred to. In an action to establish the boundary between the two grants, the court below found that the river had changed its channel considerably since the patents were issued, and that the banks, as they then existed, could not now be found or traced. Held, that it was error for the court below to adopt, as the boundary between the two grants, a line established by plaintiffs' surveyors by running the courses and distances along the river bank as called for by defendants' patent, and then, for the purpose of establishing the line of plaintiffs' grant, laying off a line parallel to the line of defendants' grant so surveyed, and a uniform distance of seven chains therefrom, allowing that to be the width of the river running between the two grants, where the testimony is undisputed that the river, now and of old, varied in width at different points. BEATTY, C. J., and SHARPSTEIN, J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Fox, J. This is an action to quiet title to a tract of land which the plaintiffs allege lies within the Rancho Rincon de las Salinas, for which they are the owners, as tenants in common, seised in fee. The defendants deny that the plaintiffs are the owners of said tract of land, and aver that the same is a part of the Rancho Moro

Cojo, of which the defendants are the owners in fee. The court found in favor of the plaintiffs upon all the material issues, and decreed accordingly. Defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied, and from that order, and from the judgment, defendants appeal. It was incumbent upon the plaintiffs to prove that the lands in controversy are within the Rancho Rincon de las Salinas. Whether they are or not depends upon the location of the north-easterly line thereof, which, according to the patent issued to the plaintiffs' grantor, is along the left bank of the Salinas river. The Rancho Moro Cojo, under which defendants claim, lies upon the opposite side, and is bounded by the right bank of the river. The patent of neither rancho calls for the other as a coterminal boundary, but each is described as being bounded along the sides which are nearest each other by the river, one by the left bank and the other by the right bank, and in each course and distances are given as the meander line of the bank referred to. In each case, if the bank can be found, courses and distances must yield to the natural monument. The survey for the patent of the Rancho Rincon de las Salinas was made in 1861; that for the patent of the Rancho Moro Cojo some three years earlier. The court finds that since these surveys the course of the river has been subjected to several sudden, violent, and considerable changes, caused by freshets, cutting away its banks, and changing its channel. There is evidence sufficient to support this finding. But the court also finds that the left bank of the river, as it existed in 1861, cannot now be found or traced, and it therefore assumes to adopt the courses and distances given in the patent as establishing the boundary line, upon the theory that this is the next best evidence that is attainable for the purpose. The theory is correct, if the facts warrant its adoption; but we do not think that the evidence supports the finding that the left bank of this river, as it existed in 1861, cannot now be found or traced. While the testimony given on the part of plaintiffs shows that there has been a marked change in the course and banks of the river, and there is some evidence tending to show that at certain points the old banks have been washed away, it does not appear, even from this testimony, that there is not left sufficient evidence of the location and general course of that old bank so that it may be traced with reasonable certainty and accuracy. It does appear affirmatively that the surveys made on the part of the plaintiffs for the purposes of this trial were not made, or attempted to be made, on or along either bank, and that the surveyors were not instructed so to make them. Their instructions were to survey and plat the courses and distances, as given in the patent; and they were not instructed to find, or to attempt to find, the old bank of the river. And they did not even follow these instructions, but instead, they surveyed and ran the courses and distances along the river bank as given in the patent of the Rancho Moro Cojo, and platted the same, and then, for the purpose of establishing the line of the Rancho Rincon de las Salinas, they laid it off upon the map by a line parallel to the line of the Moro Cojo so surveyed, and a uniform distance of seven chains therefrom, allowing that to be the width of the river running between the two ranchos; and this, even though the witnesses testified that the river, now and of old, varied in width at different points. We do not think that such testimony as this will support a finding either that the left bank of the river cannot be found and traced or that the survey adopted as and for that boundary is correct. The engineer who made this survey and map himself says that he would not have made it as he did if he had been instructed to find and survey the river bank. On the other hand, another engineer, who seems to be equally competent and disinterested, testifies that he has examined the banks and course of that river, and that, in his opinion, the old bank can be found and traced. He has made a plat, showing the present bank, and points out diverse places where the line of the old bank is distinctly traceable. His evidence is, perhaps, not sufficiently full, and his work not sufficiently complete, to furnish the basis of a finding for a final settlement of the case; but to our minds it confirms a conclusion already reached from the testimony given on the part of plaintiff, upon whom the burden rested, that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, either that the survey of courses and distances adopted is accurate or that circumstances existed which authorized the adoption of courses and distances in place of the natural monument. The judgment and order must therefore be reversed, and it is so ordered.

WE CONCUR: THORNTON, J.; PATERSON, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment, but I do not concur in the main reason given for it in the leading opinion. Upon this present record I think that the court below was justified in finding that the bank of the Salinas river, as it existed in 1861, cannot now be found or traced; and that, in the absence of that monument, it was proper to adopt the courses and distances given in the patent as establishing the boundary line. The evidence was not only conflicting on the point, but the weight of it was, in my opinion, with the finding. I think, however, that the evidence (although I am not without doubt on the subject) was not sufficient to support the conclusion that the true line of the Salinas rancho, run by courses and distances, is where the judgment establishes it to be. That line was never actually run by the surveyors who testified to it, but it was calculated and assumed from other data which I do not think sufficient to support the conclusion. They seem to have fixed a new line rather than to have found an old one. The case is a difficult one; and I doubt if a judgment will ever be obtained more favorable to appellants than this one from which they appeal. It is evidently a proper case for a compromise; but neither the court nor the surveyors can make a compromise for the parties which they will not make for themselves.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. The evidence in my opinion fully sustains the conclusion that neither bank of the Salinas river, as it existed in the years 1858-61, could be traced on the ground at the time this controversy arose. The course of the river had very greatly changed. At some points it had cut off portions of the Moro Cojo ranch; at others it had cut off portions of the Rincon de las Salinas; and these changes had been suddenly wrought during high floods or freshets. At the places where the current had left the old channel, the space between the banks had been filled with sediment, and overgrown with willows. The existing banks of the river no longer constituted the true boundaries of the respective tracts, and the old banks were no longer to be found. If the owners of the Moro Cojo, the appellants, extended their possession to the right bank of the river, they would take land of the respondents, owners of the Rincon de las Salinas, and vice versa. Such being the case, I know of no means of determining the rights of the parties except to retrace the patent lines of the two ranches by following courses and distances according to the field-notes between such natural or other monuments on the ground, and called for in the field-notes, as are still capable of identification. This is what the parties attempted to do. Each employed a competent surveyor to trace out and re-establish the lines. The surveyors went on the ground, and, by actual survey from a known monument, established the original south-eastern corner of the Rincon de las Salinas ranch. At the time of the patent survey, this corner was on the left bank of the Salinas river, but was found at the time of the last survey to be a considerable distance beyond the opposite or right bank. An attempt was then made to run out the north-eastern boundary of the Rincon de las Salinas by following the courses and distances called for in the field-notes of the patent, but for some reason the attempt was abandoned as impracticable. The two surveyors then located by survey from natural monuments the north-west and south-west corners of the Moro Cojo ranch, and retraced the line between them; that is to say, they meandered a line which started from the north-west corner and closed upon the south-west corner, but in running this line they were compelled to depart from the courses called for in the field-notes of the patent by 1 deg. 47 min. It is contended that they failed to correctly trace the south-west boundary of the Moro Cojo by reason of this departure from the course called for in the patent. But since it is conceded that the fixed and ascertained corners must govern, and as they could not be connected without departing from the courses given in the field-notes, this contention seems to fail. In my opinion all the testimony goes to confirm the correctness of the survey of the south-west boundary of the Moro Cojo. But it is said this does not afford any certain or reliable means of fixing the northeast boundary of the Rincon de las Salinas, because the two tracts of land being on opposite sides of the river, not coterminous, and neither being described by reference to the other, the location of the Moro Cojo does not fix the location of the Rincon de las Salinas. The force of this objection must be conceded, but it is much diminished by the facts that the field-notes of the river boundaries of the two ranches are connected by a call for a common object,—a township line; that the river is shown to be seven chains in width; that it is not shown to have undergone any changes between the dates of the respective patent surveys; and that there is so close a correspondence between the calls of the meandered lines of the two tracts along the river that their relative position as surveyed is perfectly demonstrated. There can be little doubt, therefore, that a line projected parallel to the river boundary of the Moro Cojo, and distant seven chains to the south-west, is, with reasonable exactness, the original river boundary of the Rincon de las Salinas, and cannot include any land to which the defendants have shown title, or any appreciable quantity of land to which the plaintiffs have not shown title. Besides, the south-eastern corner of the Rincon de las Salinas was, as above stated, established on the ground by actual survey, and connected by actual survey with the south-western boundary of the Moro Cojo, as surveyed; and, although no attempt was made to survey the north-eastern boundary of the Rincon de las Salinas on the ground, the line of said boundary, as platted on the map of the line surveyed, shows very clearly that it would include a very considerable amount of land that the decree excludes, and would exclude a very trifling quantity that the decree includes, so that the error in the method resorted to for establishing respondents' line, conceding it to have been erroneous, is shown to have been without prejudice, inasmuch as it gives the appellants more land than a correct survey would give them. It is for this reason, that the error in the method pursued was harmless to appellants, that I think the judgment and order should be affirmed.

VENDOR AND VENDEE—RECOVERY OF PRICE—JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS.

Plaintiff made a payment under a contract with defendant wherein the latter obligated himself, as soon as he procured the legal title to certain land, to convey it to plaintiff, and in case of a defect in the title to return the payment. In an action to recover such payment, the complaint alleged that plaintiff had demanded a conveyance of the land, and that defendant had refused on the ground that the title was defective, and that the title was and is defective. The answer denied each of these allegations, and stated that he expected soon to obtain the legal title. Held, that these pleadings raised material issues which defendant was entitled to have tried, and that it was error to give judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Fresno county; J. B. CAMPBELL, Judge.

Church & Cory, for appellant. Firman Church, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. Defendant demurred to the complaint, and his demurrer was overruled. He then duly served and filed a verified answer; whereupon plaintiff moved for judgment upon the pleadings, and judgment was accordingly given for plaintiff upon the pleadings alone. From this judgment defendant appeals. The practice of moving for judgment upon the pleadings in proper cases has been sanctioned by this court; but we think that in the case at bar the answer contained denials of material averments of the complaint, waiving the question of the sufficiency of the complaint itself. The action is to compel defendant to return to plaintiff the $484 which constituted the first payment made by plaintiff to defendant on the following contract: "Fresno, January 19, 1888. Received of H. Widmer the sum of $484 as a deposit on lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, in block 3, of the Donahou addition to the town of Fresno; the purchase price of said lots to be $1,450, payable as follows: $484 cash; $483 six months from date, and $483 twelve months from date, deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from date until paid. This receipt is to be taken up and deed given, and mortgage and notes received, as soon as the undersigned shall receive deed to said addition. In case of defective title from any cause, I agree to return said deposit. [Signed] J. M. MARTIN." The complaint contains a number of averments about what plaintiff did in performing his part of said contract, which are denied in the answer, and which are now claimed by plaintiff to have been immaterial; but, waiving the questions thus presented, it is clear that there is a denial of matter in the complaint that is material. It is apparent that the "defective title" mentioned in the contract did not refer to any title which defendant had, or professed to have, at the time the contract was made. The contract is based upon the mutual understanding that defendant then had no title, but was to get one through a certain "deed," which he was to receive in the future, and that he was to convey the property to plaintiff, and the latter was to give notes and a mortgage, "as soon as the undersigned shall receive deed to said addition." No one would seriously contend that plaintiff could have maintained an action for the return of the first payment on the very next day after the date of the contract on the ground that defendants' title was defective. Now, the complaint nowhere avers that the title which would come through said deed is defective, or that defendant cannot, or does not, intend to procure said deed, or had not exercised due diligence in trying to procure it, or that defendant had been guilty of unreasonable delay or neglect in the premises. The only averment in the complaint upon the subject, is that on a certain day plaintiff demanded of defendant a deed to said lots, and that defendant "then and there failed and refused to make and deliver said deed to said lots of land, alleging that the title to said land was in dispute, and defective, and the plaintiff says the title was and is defective." But these averments are specifically denied. The defendant in his answer "denies that plaintiff demanded of said defendant a deed to the lots of land, in said receipt described, at said time, or at any time; denies that he (defendant) said at that time, or at any time, that the title to said land was defective; denies that the title to said land is defective." The answer, in addition, states how defendant expects and will be able soon to obtain the legal title. The parts of the pleadings above referred to—waiving the other points made by appellant—clearly raise material issues, which defendant is entitled to have tried. A single material issue precludes a judgment on the pleadings. The judgment is reversed.

APPEAL—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

There being a conflict of evidence, the findings of the court will not be disturbed on appeal.

On rehearing. For former reports, see 23 Pac. Rep. 874, 12 Pac. Rep. 570.

S. M. Buck, H. L. Smith, John A. McQuaid, and W. C. Belcher, for appellant. Wilson & Wilson, S. M. Wilson, J. D. H. Chamberlin, G. W. Gunter, and W. L. Duff, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This case was heard in bank, and decided after being twice orally argued, and thoroughly and exhaustively briefed. 23 Pac. Rep. 874. A rehearing was granted mainly because it was thought that the court below, and this court, had not given sufficient weight to a certain letter written by the respondent's intestate containing certain admissions against his interest. This may have been so as to the court below, but it was not so as to the writer of this opinion, who wrote the opinion upon which the case was decided. In opposition to this admission, which was not by any means conclusive against the author of the letter, was the sworn admission of one of the defendants, at least, as a witness in a former case, to the effect that his brother, the deceased, was the owner of the property. It is true that in the litigation referred to it was to the interest of the defendant mentioned to establish the fact that the property was the property of the deceased, and that he may have testified falsely in that case in order to shield the same from the claims of other parties against him and his father, but the court below had the deposition containing these admissions before it, and, in connection therewith, heard the testimony of the defendant to the contrary in this case, and must have known better than we can know how much weight to give to the testimony of the defendant on both of these occasions, and to the admission contained in the letter above referred to in the light of such admissions and testimony. Here were opposing admissions by the parties adversely interested. Why should one be considered absolutely conclusive and the other disregarded? We can see no reason. Nothing more can be said, even if these admissions were the only evidence on the point, than that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence, and this court cannot, under the well-established rule, disturb the finding of the court below. For the reasons here given, and those contained in the former opinion, the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: MCFARLAND, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; PATERSON, J.

Fox, J., (dissenting.) Upon a careful examination of the record in this case upon rehearing, it does not appear to me that the deposition referred to in the foregoing opinion contains a contradiction of the admission made in the letter referred to. I am also satisfied that there was no proper foundation laid for the introduction of said deposition, and that its admission was in violation of the law of the case, as established on the former appeal. 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. Rep. 570. It may be that a different judgment would never be reached in the cause, but for the reason stated, and under the rule established in this particular case on the first appeal, I cannot concur in the foregoing conclusion.

MCPHAIL v. BUELL. (No. 13,784.)

REAL-ESTATE AGENT—CONTRACT—COMMISSIONS.

Defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a commission for selling land when the vendees paid defendant a certain sum, and gave their notes and mortgage for the balance. The vendees executed their notes, but never paid the money. Held, that plaintiff could not recover.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

Cope & Boyce, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondent.

WORKS, J. The appellant brought this action to recover for commissions alleged to have been due him for making sale of certain real estate for the respondent. The complaint is in different counts, one upon a special contract agreeing to pay the commissions, and the others relying upon a verbal contract, and upon the quantum meruit. There could be no recovery on either of the last two counts because the Code of this state requires that to entitle a broker to recover commissions in this class of cases his contract therefor must be in writing. Civil Code, § 1624; McCarthy v. Loup, 62 Cal. 302. It is equally clear to our minds that the appellant was not entitled to recover on the written contract. The agreement was that the defendant would pay the plaintiff when the vendees paid to him (the defendant) the sum of $20,000 on account of the price of said sale, and executed to him their notes and mortgage for the balance of the purchase money. The purchasers executed their notes and mortgage, but failed to pay the sum of $20,000, either at the time of making the deed, or upon the notes given afterwards. Although the defendant extended the time of payment, and used all reasonable means to procure the money, he was finally compelled to take back the property. Their failure to pay the money was a complete bar to any claim of the appellant to commissions. The appellant contends that certain errors were committed by the court below in its rulings upon the admission of evidence, and in its instructions; but, conceding this to be so, the case could not be reversed on account of such rulings, as, for the reasons given, the appellant could not recover in any event. Judgment and order affirmed.

1. It may be shown by evidence altunde that a document offered as a dying declaration was made under a sense of impending death.

2. The fact that the attending physician told declarant that he was going to die, and that the declarant himself, on another occasion, said he knew he was going to die, and wanted to talk privately with his cousin, was sufficient proof that a dying statement was made under a sense of impending death.

3. Where an attending physician took notes of the declarant's statements as he made them, and then retired to another room and wrote them out, after which he read the writing, sentence by sentence, to declarant, who affirmed it as being what he wished to say, the writing is shown to be the declarant's declaration, although the words used are not in all cases the same as those employed in the oral relation.

Clark & Aram, Craig & Hawkins, and J. E. Strong, for appellant. Geo. A. Johnson, Atty. Gen., and C. W. Thomas, for the People.

SHARPSTEIN, J. Upon the trial of the defendant, upon an information in which he was charged with murder, a document purporting to be the dying declaration of the deceased was offered in evidence by the prosecution. The defendant objected to its introduction. The objection was overruled and defendant excepted. The grounds of objection appear to be: (1) The declaration does not show that it was made under a sense of impending death. It commences as follows: "I, Mat Faigle, aged 43, and a native of Germany, believing my life to be in great danger, being shot in the left side above the heart by a ball from the pistol in the hands of one John Wahlfrom, do now, before my God and the undersigned witnesses, make the following true statement, believing it to be my last." Whether the statement alone would be sufficient to satisfy the rule that the declaration must be made under a sense of impending death need not be decided in this case, as there was other evidence that it was so made. Prof. Greenleaf says: "It is essential to the admissibility of these declarations, and is a preliminary fact to be proved by the party offering them in evidence, that they were made under a sense of impending death; but it is not necessary that they should be stated at the time to be so made. It is enough, if it satisfactorily appears, in any mode, that they were made under that sanction; whether it be directly proved by the express language of the declarant, or be inferred from his evident danger, or the opinions of medical or other attendants, stated to him, or from his conduct, or other circumstances of the case, all of which are resorted to, in order to ascertain the state of the declarant's mind." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 158. Allunde the written declaration there is sufficient evidence that it was made under a sense of impending death. Three or four hours after declarant had received the fatal wound, he was told by his attending physician that he was going to die. And on one occasion decedent told those who were present at his bedside that he knew that he would die, and he wanted to talk privately with his cousin, who was also present. There is much more evidence of similar import.

Another ground of objection is that the declaration introduced in evidence is not the one made by the dying man. The manner of taking the declaration, as detailed by Dr. Dillon, by whom it was taken, is as follows: He sat on the side of declarant's bed and took notes of what declarant said. After taking said notes witness withdrew to an adjoining room, and from such notes wrote out the statement introduced as a dying declaration. After that was prepared he returned to the bedside of declarant and read him each sentence as he went along, and asked him if that was just what he meant, and he said "Yes;" and in that way the whole paper was read to declarant before he signed it. All this occurred in the presence of eight persons, who signed the declaration as witnesses. That this document was not literally copied from the notes taken by Dr. Dillon he admits. Nor is the language precisely that employed by the declarant in his oral statement to Dr. Dillon. But the doctor testified that he endeavored to give the substance of the statement made to him by the declarant, and he thinks he succeeded, although the written declaration contains some words that were not used by the declarant in his oral statement. However that may be, the declaration introduced in evidence is nevertheless the dying declaration of the declarant. It was read to him sentence by sentence, and the accuracy of each sentence was assented to by him; and, after hearing it all read in that manner, he signed it in the presence of witnesses. It then became his dying declaration. If he made another declaration inconsistent with or contradictory of this, it did not render this inadmissible, but might be urged to the jury as affecting his credibility. Upon the facts disclosed by the record, we think the document which purported to be the dying declaration of Mat Faigle was properly admitted in evidence.

Under repeated decisions of this court, the ruling of the court upon the challenge of the juror, H. H. Smith, for actual bias, cannot be remedied here. People v. Riley, 65 Cal. 107, 3 Pac. Rep. 413; People v. Cotta, 49 Cal. 166; People v. Vasquez, Id. 560; People v. Taing, 53 Cal. 802. No exception can be taken to the disallowance of a challenge to a juror for actual bias. Pen. Code, § 1170. It was not error to permit the prosecution to peremptorily challenge the juror Hall after he had been sworn, good reasons being shown therefor. Pen. Code, § 1068; People v. Montgomery, 53 Cal. 576.

Instruction No. 10, given at the request of the prosecution, gives a lengthy definition of "a reasonable doubt," and contains this clause: "It must not be one that is merely fanciful, created ingeniously in your minds to escape the consequences of an unpleasant verdict. It must be an honest doubt; such a doubt as strikes the conscientious mind, and one that clouds the understanding of those who are honestly seeking to arrive at the truth; such a doubt as would induce a man of reasonable firmness and judgment to act upon it in matters of importance to himself." In People v. Brannan, 47 Cal. 97, "the jury were told that it was their duty to convict if they should be satisfied of the guilt of the defendant to such a moral certainty as would influence the minds of a jury in the important affairs of life." This was held to be error. The court said: "The judgment of reasonable men in the ordinary affairs of life, however important, is influenced and controlled by the preponderance of evidence. Juries are permitted and instructed to apply the same rule to the determination of civil actions involving rights of property only. But in the decision of criminal cases, involving life or liberty, something further is required. There must be more than a preponderance of evidence. There must be in the minds of the jury an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge, derived from a comparison and consideration of the evidence. They must be entirely satisfied of the guilt of the accused." In People v. Ah Sing, 51 Cal. 372: "The court below, after instructing the jury that the defendants on trial upon an indictment for murder are presumed to be innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, proceeded as follows: 'A reasonable doubt is that state of a case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot feel an abiding conviction, to a moral certainty, of the truth of the charge. The doubt must not be vague and shadowy. Absolute certainty is rarely attainable, and is never required. If the evidence is such that a man of prudence would act upon it in his own affairs of the greatest importance, then there cannot remain a reasonable doubt within the meaning of the law. The defendants excepted to so much of the instruction as is italicized." The court said it is certainly a mistake to say that there cannot remain a reasonable doubt when even the evidence is such "that a man of prudence would act upon it in his own affairs of the greatest importance." Upon the authority of these cases we are bound to hold that so much of the instruction in this case as we have italicized is erroneous.

Instruction No. 4 is not erroneous. There is no indorsement showing whether instruction No. 24 was given, and in the absence of such indorsement we cannot review it. We fail to discover anything in the other points discussed by counsel that requires consideration here. But the errors which we have pointed out require that the judgment and order be reversed. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

FLICKINGER v. SHAW. (No. 12,609.)

EXECUTED LICENSE—REVOCATION—INJUNCTION.

There was a parol agreement between plaintiff and defendant by which defendant gave plaintiff a right of way for a ditch over his land, plaintiff to survey, excavate, and keep in repair the ditch, which should be used by both plaintiff and defendant in irrigating their lands. Held, that plaintiff having constructed and kept in repair the ditch, and it having been used by both parties, the agreement became an executed license, which defendant would be restrained from revoking.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Santa Clara county; D. BELDEN, Judge.

T. H. Lalne, for appellant. J. C. Black, for respondent.

THORNTON, J. That the object to be attained by the agreement between Flickinger and Smith on the one hand, and the defendant (Shaw) on the other, was to acquire by purchase a right of way over the land of the latter for the ditch constructed by the first-named parties, is, in our judgment, a fair, legal deduction from the facts disclosed in this case. Flickinger and Smith were seeking to acquire something more than a mere license or authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land, without possessing any estate therein, (Potter v. Mercer, 53 Cal. 673,) and which right might at any time be revoked by the licensor. In this case, the agreement between the parties is, in substance, that Shaw gives the right of way for a ditch over his land; that Flickinger and Smith survey and excavate the ditch and keep it in repair, the ditch, when completed, to be used for the benefit of all the contracting parties in irrigating their respective tracts of land. Let it be observed (and it is so found) that Shaw agreed that Flickinger and Smith should have a conveyance of and give a right of way over his land for the ditch, and one-half of the water to be diverted thereby. The above facts clothe the transaction with the character of a purchase by one party and sale by the other of a right of way for a ditch. The license under which Flickinger and Smith entered was vested in them by a contract of purchase for a valuable consideration. Under this agreement Flickinger and Smith did survey and construct the ditch, and kept it in repair, and both parties made use of it for the purpose for which it was constructed, viz., the irrigation of their lands. Thus the agreement between the parties was executed. The license here given to Flickinger and Smith was one for the acquisition of an interest in land by purchase of Shaw, for which they paid by doing what they had agreed to do. After the ditch was constructed, it was used by all parties under the agreement for four or five years. Now, it would be highly inequitable, after the work has been done and money expended by Flickinger and Smith, to allow Shaw to recall his consent, fill the ditch, and cut Flickinger, who has succeeded to all the rights of Smith under the agreement above stated, off from the use of the ditch and the water flowing therein; nor should any such proceeding, in our view, be upheld by a court of justice. In Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 271, a case in some respects similar to the one under consideration, came before the supreme court of Pennsylvania. The case was one concerning the legal effect of an executed license. It was an action on the case to recover damages for diverting a water-course by which the plaintiff lost the use of his saw-mill. The facts were as follows: Kern, the plaintiff below, being about to erect a saw-mill on a stream designated as the "right-hand stream," a better seat for the mill was found by his mill-wright on what was termed the "left-hand stream." Kern thereupon applied to Rerick for permission to turn the water of the other stream into the left-hand stream, which was granted. In consequence of this permission, Kern built the mill on the left-hand stream. The mill was rendered a third more valuable by the union of the two streams than it would have been with the right-hand stream alone. No deed was executed, nor was any consideration given, but Kern, in consequence of the permission given by Rerick, built a very good mill, which did a great deal of business, and which he would not have built on the left-hand stream, if the permission had not been given. In this case, as will be observed, there was no element of purchase. The defense set up was that the permission to Kern was a mere license, which was revocable under all circumstances, and at any time. To this, it was said, in the unanimous opinion of the court, by GIBSON, J.: "But a license may become an agreement on valuable consideration, as, where the employment of it must necessarily be preceded by the expenditure of money; and, when the grantee has made improvements or invested capital in consequence of it, he has become a purchaser for a valuable consideration. Such a grant is a direct encouragement to expend money, and it would be against all conscience to annul it, as soon as the benefit expected from the expenditure is beginning to be perceived. Why should not such an agreement be decreed in specie? That a party should be let off from his contract on payment of a compensation in damages is consistent with no system of morals, but the common law, which was in this respect originally determined by political considerations, the policy of its military tenures requiring that the services to be rendered by the tenant to his feudal superior should not be prevented by want of personal independence. Hence, the judgment of a court of law operated on the right of a party and the decree of a court of equity on the person. But the reason of this distinction has long ceased, and equity will execute every agreement for the breach of which damages may be recovered, where an action for damages would be an inadequate remedy." The same rule has been applied in case of an executed license, in Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 565, and also in Swartz v. Swartz, 4 Pa. St. 358. The principle on which these cases proceed is, as was said in Swartz v. Swartz, supra, "that the revocation would be a fraud, and that to prevent it a chancellor would turn the owner of the soil into a trustee ex maleficio." The case under consideration presents a stronger ground of relief than either of these above cited. Principle and authority in our judgment show that the plaintiff has rights here which should be protected by injunction. The facts show plaintiff's right to a specific performance. The statute of frauds is not in the way. There has been part performance and possession under the agreement, as far as the plaintiff could obtain possession, and though the agreement rests in parol, under the circumstances above mentioned, a party is entitled to a specific performance. Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 272. To refuse specific performance under the circumstances would be to sanction fraud, and to allow a statute passed for the prevention of frauds to become the means of accomplishing a fraud. To complete the purchase, nothing remains to be done but the execution of a conveyance of the right of way, and a proper proportion of the water to Flickinger. His equity to a deed is perfect, (Morrison v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 495,) and, when such is the case, a court of equity, in accordance with its familiar rules considering that as done which ought to be done, will protect it as readily and as fully as a legal title. If the legal title would be protected by an injunction, a perfect equitable title should also. In conformity with these views, in our opinion, the judgment should be affirmed.

MCGIVNEY v. PIERCE. (No. 12,271.)

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS—COMMON COUNCIL—CONTEST.

The provision of the city charter of Oakland, granted in 1854, giving the common council exclusive jurisdiction to determine an election contest for the office of councilman, was impliedly repealed by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1111 et seq., providing that any elector of a county or city, or of any political subdivision of either, may contest for causes therein stated, and that such contest must be determined by a special session of the superior court.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Clunie & Young, for appellant. Metcalf & Metcalf, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. The appellant inaugurated a contest in the superior court of Alameda county for the office of councilman of the city council of Oakland, under section 1111 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. The respondent demurred upon the ground of want of jurisdiction, and the court sustained the demurrer, and entered judgment dismissing the contest. From said judgment this appeal is taken. The judgment was rendered upon the ground that the act reincorporating the city of Oakland, which was enacted in March, 1854, gave to the common council of Oakland exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine an election contest such as is involved in this proceeding. Waiving the question whether the language of the charter is broad enough to include the subject-matter of the present litigation, and waiving the constitutional question as to the authority of the legislature to grant such judicial power to the common council, it is clear to our minds that the sections of the Code above referred to, which were enacted long after the charter, necessarily repeal the provision of the charter here invoked. Section 1111 provides that "any elector of a county, city and county, city, or of any political subdivision of either, may contest the right of any person declared elected to an office to be exercised therein for any of the following causes." Then follows an enumeration of various grounds of contest, including those set up in the complaint or statement in this case. The succeeding sections provide that an elector wishing to institute such a contest must file with the county clerk a written statement setting forth certain specifications of grounds of contest; that the clerk must inform the superior court of the filing of such statement; that the court must call a special session at a certain time at the courthouse to hear the contest; that a citation must be issued, etc.; and that "the court must meet at the time and place designated to determine such contested election, and shall have all the powers necessary to the determination thereof." It is further provided that "the court must pronounce judgment in the premises either confirming or annulling and setting aside such election." Of course a general statute does not always, by implication, repeal a special one. It is always a question of intention, to be gathered from the language used, and from the subject-matter of the legislation. With respect to the matter before us we think that the legislature, when enacting the sections of the Code above mentioned, clearly intended to adopt a uniform rule for all election contests about the officers named in section 1111, and necessarily repealed all former statutes inconsistent with that intention. The judgment appealed from is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

WHITE v. PATTON et al. (No. 12,876.)

FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS — CROSS-COMPLAINT — JUNIOR MORTGAGE — NOTICE.

A junior mortgagee, who becomes a party defendant to a foreclosure proceeding, and prays a foreclosure of his mortgage, must serve the mortgagors with a copy of his cross-complaint, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 442; and, in the absence of such service, a foreclosure by default is erroneous, although the mortgagors, after proper service of summons in the original complaint, failed to appear at all in the case.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; JOHN G. PRESSLEY, Judge.

T. L. Carothers, for appellants. J. A. Cooper, J. K. Chambers, and C. W. Rohrbough, for respondent.

FOX, J. Proceeding for foreclosure of mortgage. Defendants Patton, the mortgagors, made default, but the defendant Thomson, who was alleged to make some claim as a subsequent mortgagee, answered, setting up a junior mortgage made by the same mortgagors, and prayed that, after the satisfaction of plaintiff's mortgage, the proceeds of sale should be applied to the payment of the amount due upon such junior mortgage, and for judgment for deficiency, if any there should be, against the Pattons. The court rendered judgment accordingly, and the Pattons appeal.

Appellants claim that the answer of Thomson was really a cross-complaint. Such really was its effect, and for the purposes of this appeal we shall treat it as such. It prayed for, and under it there was granted to him, affirmative relief against his co-defendants Patton; and the question is whether the proceedings were such as gave the court jurisdiction to grant that affirmative relief. It is not pretended that the allegations of the pleading were not sufficient to support such a judgment; but the claim is that the court never acquired jurisdiction to render the judgment and decree of foreclosure of this second mortgage, for want of proper service, or of any service, upon the defendants against whom the judgment ran. In this contention we think appellants are correct.

By the service of the summons issued upon the complaint of plaintiff, the court acquired jurisdiction of the parties, and control of all the subsequent proceedings. Code Civil Proc. § 416. But what is meant by those words, "all the subsequent proceedings?" Manifestly it means proceedings upon that complaint, and for that cause of action. It had jurisdiction to hear and determine the rights of all the parties as to the questions involved in the cause of action stated in that complaint. It could ascertain and determine the amount due to plaintiff, and enter a decree foreclosing his mortgage, as against the claims of all the defendants; or if it had found the mortgage of defendant Thomson to be a prior mortgage, instead of a subsequent one, it could have granted him proper relief as against the plaintiff, provided the plaintiff had been properly served with the cross-complaint. But quoad the plaintiff's cause of action, defendants Patton, the mortgagors, who alone were personally liable in the action, had a perfect right to make default, and let the plaintiff have the relief he prayed against them without contest. It did not follow that their default upon the plaintiff's summons would give the court jurisdiction to enter another, further, and different judgment against them, in favor of another and different party, upon another and different cause of action, and of which they were in no manner put upon notice, against which they had no "day in court." Such a proceeding, even if authorized by statute, would be in direct violation of a right guarantied by the constitution, and one depriving the parties of their property "without due process of law." But such a proceeding is not authorized by the statute. Thomson was a proper party defendant. He might have made default, like his co-defendants, and like the defendant Marks, who was also sued as a junior mortgagee, allowed his right to be foreclosed at the same time that the right of the mortgagors was; but he elected to come in. In coming in, he might have set up his mortgage, by way of showing his right, and then contented himself with contesting simply the right, or the priority of the right, of plaintiff. But he attempted to go further, and seek to foreclose, in the same action, and against, not the plaintiff, but all his co-defendants, his mortgage, and to secure a deficiency judgment against the defendants Patton. This, too, the statute gives him the right to do, but not without giving notice to the persons against whom he sought affirmative relief. Even if those persons had been present in court, actively contesting the claim of plaintiff, they would have been entitled to actual and full notice of the claim set up by defendant Thomson, and of the affirmative relief which he demanded, and to an opportunity to defend against it. They were entitled to service of the cross-complaint, and to demur or answer thereto. Such is the express provision of the statute. Id. § 442.

The statute does not, in express terms, require that a summons should be issued upon the cross-complaint, and we are not disposed to hold that one should have been so issued in this case; but there should be at least the notice required by the statute,—service of the cross-complaint. This presented a new cause of action, in favor of a new party, and until the party to be affected by that cause of action was brought in by such notice as the statute prescribed, the court failed to acquire jurisdiction to adjudicate upon or determine the same. The record fails to furnish proof of any such service. There is no appearance upon or response to this cross-complaint, nor any default for want of appearance; and the court has not found, nor certified in its decree, that any such service was ever made, although it has, with great particularity, recited the fact of service of summons "issued upon the complaint," and "of default in that behalf." This cross-complaint is as clearly a complaint against the Pattons as was the original complaint filed by plaintiff. It has not been answered, and is therefore one of the papers which must constitute a part of the judgment roll, under the first subdivision of section 670, Code Civil Proc. And although, for the reasons already shown, there was no summons issued upon it, the law requires that it must be served upon the party affected thereby. This being the law, the same subdivision requires that the judgment roll must contain the affidavit or proof of service, with a memorandum indorsed thereon, of the default of the defendant thereto, for want of answer. Nothing of the kind appears in this case. The court was, therefore, without jurisdiction to enter the judgment which was entered in favor of said defendant Thomson for affirmative relief against the defendants Pattons. The Pattons possibly might have moved the court below to set aside this portion of the judgment, on the ground of surprise, but this could only be done within six months from the date thereof. Section 473, Id. But it does not appear that they had any notice of the judgment within six months. The error was one against which they also had a right of appeal at any time within one year. That remedy they have taken, and on the appeal we are satisfied that they are entitled to have the error corrected. It is therefore ordered that so much of the judgment and decree entered in this cause as directs the foreclosure of the mortgage in favor of David Thomson against the defendants Milo and J. H. Patton, and directing judgment for deficiency against them in favor of said Thomson for any deficiency that may remain after the sale of the mortgaged premises, and the application of the proceeds thereof, be reversed, and the case remanded.

In re MAN WO CHAN'S ESTATE. (No. 14, 019.)

APPEAL—REVIEW.

In a contest over the probate of a will there was judgment for contestant. On motion for a new trial, petitioner for the probate of the will presented a statement containing the evidence and proceedings on the trial. Then, over objections of petitioner, facts which had previously been shown in a contest over the estate between petitioner and the public administrator, and which were adverted to on the argument in the will contest, were made a part of the statement. Held that, though the judgment would have been sustained had only the evidence at the trial been considered, still the matters improperly made part of the statement by the court being such as may have had weight with the court in coming to its conclusion, the judgment would be reversed.

Nourse & Short, Goucher & Jones, Theodore H. Hittell, and Edw. J. Pringle, for appellant. Hinds & Merriam, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by W. W. Gray, petitioner for the probate of a proposed will of Man Wo Chan, deceased, from a judgment denying the admission of said will to probate, and from an order denying a new trial. The only evidence in the case was that introduced by the appellant. Two persons testified that they were subscribing witnesses; and their testimony (if they were credible witnesses) might be sufficient to establish the due execution of the proposed will. Another witness also testified with some degree of positiveness that the signature to the will was that of the deceased. The contestant, E. H. Cox, who had been appointed and was administrator, did not introduce any evidence. Still, the court must have believed that the will was a forgery, for the only finding of fact is "that the will propounded by said Gray is not genuine, and was not executed by said Man Wo Chan, deceased, in his life-time." Of course, the court below, sitting as a jury, was the judge of the credibility of the witnesses; and if the court had decided the issue upon the evidence before it, and had based its judgment upon a disbelief of the witnesses, we would not disturb it. It is evident, however, that the court considered matters not before it at all. Appellant presented a statement on motion for new trial which included the evidence and proceedings introduced and occurring on the trial of this contest between the appellant and the contestant Cox. The statement then contains the following: "On motion of counsel for contestant, Cox, and against the objection of counsel for respondent, Gray, the following amendments and facts that had been previously shown in the case, viz., the estate of Man Wo Chan, and were adverted to on the argument of the will contest, were made a part of this statement, to the allowance of which amendments counsel for respondent duly excepted. The amendments are as follows." Then follow statements that Ah Qui, a brother of the deceased, had on a former occasion signed a request that Cox be appointed administrator; that there had once been a contest between Cox and the public administrator in which it had been shown by testimony that Mr. Hinds, attorney for Cox, had made particular search among the effects of the deceased for a will, and had made inquiry about it of said brother Ah Qui and others, and that this will in contest was not produced, but that a certain other document was produced which was not attested; and that the widow of deceased also requested the appointment of Cox as administrator, but died before the said contest between Cox and the public administrator had been heard. Of course these amendments should not have gone into the statement; for they confessedly contain things which did not occur at the trial. If contestant considered these things relevant and material he should have offered to prove them, and appellant would have had the opportunity to object, or to disprove or explain them. The fact, for instance, that Ah Qui, who was a brother of deceased and interested in the estate and named in the proposed will, and who, according to the subscribing witnesses, was present when the will was made, and took possession of it, made no mention afterwards of said will, and requested that Cox be appointed administrator upon the theory that there was no will, may have had, and possibly did have, great weight with the court. And, as the court put these amendments into the statement, it must be presumed that the court, in coming to its conclusion, considered the things which the amendments contained. It is apparent, therefore, that there was not a fair trial of the case. The appellant is entitled to have the issue as to the validity of the proposed will determined upon evidence introduced at the trial of such issue, and upon such evidence alone. For this reason the judgment and order must be reversed. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF RIVERSIDE V. HOLT et al. (No. 13,686.)

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE—COMPLAINT—DEMURRER
RAISED BELOW.

1. A complaint to foreclose a mortgage alleged that defendants executed their promissory note to plaintiff on December 24, 1888, payable three months after date, "which note is in the words and figures following, to-wit," following which was a copy of the note, and after the signature the following words and figures:

"Due March 24, 1889. Indorsed:
"January 19, 1889, on B. note, $107.30
"March 26, 1889, on G. note, 216.00
"May 22, 1889, paid 268.44."

The complaint alleged that $591.74 had been paid on the note. Held, on special demurrer, that there was no uncertainty in the averments of the complaint as to whether the indorsements following the signature were part of the note at the time of its execution, or afterwards written thereon, or whether the note set forth was a copy of the one executed.

2. The mortgage provided that in the event of foreclosure, "reasonable attorney's fees, to be taxed by the court, shall be allowed to the plaintiff." Held, that an averment that $300 is a reasonable attorney's fee, "for the collection of said promissory note, and for the foreclosure of the said mortgage," was simply an averment that said sum was a reasonable attorney's fee in said foreclosure suit.

3. Even if the allegation as to attorney's fees were uncertain, it would not render the complaint demurrable, as the allegation is not necessary.

4. Even if from the finding of the court that there was due plaintiff from defendants a certain sum for "costs, percentage, and necessary disbursements," and the fact that this sum was included in the judgment, it appeared that any part of the sum allowed was for percentage, still, want of authority in the court to allow percentage cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court; San Bernardino county; JOHN L. CAMPBELL, Judge. W. J. McIntyre and H. Goodcell, Jr., for appellants. E. B. Stanton, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage. The defendants demurred to the complaint and their demurrer was overruled. They failed to answer within the time allowed, and thereupon judgment was entered against them, from which they appeal. The demurrer was upon the grounds of ambiguity and uncertainty, and it specified three particulars wherein it was claimed that the complaint was defective.

The first specification is that it does not appear whether the indorsements on the promissory note, set forth in the complaint, were part of the note at the time of its execution, or afterwards written thereon, or whether the said note is a copy of the note executed by the defendants. The complaint alleges that the defendants executed their promissory note to the plaintiff on December 24, 1888, payable three months after date, "which note is in the words and figures following, to-wit," and then sets forth a copy of the note, with the following words and figures after the signatures:

"March 26, 1889, on M. D. Godfrey note.... 216 00

It is argued for appellants that the words and figures following the signatures appear, according to the averment, to have been a component part of the note, and yet that they show three dates, all later than the date, and two of them later than the maturity, of the note, which, without explanation, convey the idea that the indorsements were not part of the note as originally made, but were added subsequently; and it is said that this idea, being contrary to the apparent averment, and there being no explanation, makes the complaint uncertain in this respect. It is also argued that it does not appear whether or not the note set forth, with or without the indorsements, is a copy of the note executed by the defendants, because, from the averment that the "note is in the words and figures following," it is only a matter of inference that it was in the same words and figures at the date of its execution; and it is said that an averment which has to be helped out by inference is insufficient as against a special demurrer. We see no real uncertainty in the averments complained of. The indorsements were evidently intended to represent payments made and credited upon the note at the dates shown thereon. These payments aggregate the sum of $591.74, and the complaint alleges "that the said defendants have paid upon the note hereinbefore set forth * * * the sum of five hundred and ninety-one and 74-100 dollars, and there is now due and unpaid upon the said promissory note, from the said defendants to the said plaintiff, the sum of sixteen hundred and sixteen and 63-100 dollars, together with interest," etc. The last-mentioned sum is just the amount of the principal of the note, less the amount of the payments indorsed thereon. Looking, then, at the whole complaint, it is clear that there was no such uncertainty in its averments as could create or leave in the minds of the defendants any reasonable doubt as to their meaning; and, this being so, the complaint must be held sufficiently certain to meet the requirements of the law. The objection that it does not appear that the note set forth in the complaint is a copy of the note executed by the defendants is not even plausible. The complaint alleges that, on the 24th day of December, 1888, the defendants "made, executed, and delivered to the plaintiff their promissory note, bearing date on that day, which note is in the words and figures following." This certainly leaves no room for doubt or cavil that the note set forth is a copy of the note executed.

The second specification is that "it does not appear at what time the $591.74 credited upon the note was paid, and it therefore does not appear upon what amount, or from what time, interest should be computed thereon." This objection is sufficiently answered by what has already been said; and, besides, the payments were credited upon the principal of the note, and there was therefore no uncertainty as to how the interest on the balance should be computed.

The third specification is that "it does not appear what would be a reasonable attorney's fee for the plaintiff in this action." The mortgage, as shown by the complaint, provides that, in the event of foreclosure, "reasonable attorney's fees, to be taxed by the court, shall be allowed to the plaintiff," and it is alleged "that two hundred dollars is a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed to the plaintiff for the collection of the said promissory note, and for the foreclosure of the said mortgage." In this state there can be but one action for the recovery of any debt secured by mortgage. Code Civil Proc. § 728. The obvious purpose of this action was to recover the amount due on the note set out by a foreclosure of the mortgage, and the sale of the mortgaged property; and it was only to aid the plaintiff in accomplishing these ends that the allowance of an attorney's fee was authorized by the mortgage, and was asked for in the complaint. The averment that the sum claimed was a reasonable fee for the collection of the note and foreclosure of the mortgage was limited to the action in hand, and was therefore neither ambiguous nor uncertain. Besides, if the averment were uncertain, as claimed, still that fact would not aid the appellants here, for the reason that no averment as to what would be a reasonable fee was necessary. Carriere v. Min-turn, 5 Cal. 435; Monroe v. Fohl, 72 Cal. 571, 14 Pac. Rep. 514.

The court found that there was due to the plaintiff from the defendants the sum of $162.15, for "costs, percentage, and necessary disbursements, including attorney's fees," and this sum was included in the judgment. It is objected that there was no provision of law authorizing the court to add a percentage to the costs and disbursements, and that the judgment is therefore, in this particular, clearly erroneous. But it does not appear that any portion of the sum allowed was for percentage; and, if such was the fact, the defendants should have raised the point in the court below, where the error, if any, might readily have been corrected. We see no error in the record, and therefore advise that the judgment be affirmed.

We concur: HAYNE, C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

(No. 12,768.)

EJECTMENT—VERDICT—NEW PARTIES—EVIDENCE.

1. In ejectment, the verdict was that plaintiff was "entitled to the possession of the land described within the following boundaries," etc.; but there was nothing to show that the verdict referred to the land described in the complaint or answer or the patents and deeds introduced in evidence, and no natural monuments were mentioned in the boundaries given. Held, that the verdict and judgment based on it were insufficient.

2. A new plaintiff was substituted for the original plaintiff, who had conveyed to him pending the suit, by an order which declared that all the allegations and denials of the pleadings should apply to such new plaintiff. Among the allegations of the complaint to which the new plaintiff was thus committed was one that plaintiff at the time the action was brought was entitled to the possession of the land in dispute. Held, that it was error to admit in evidence the deed from the original plaintiff to the new one, as it was irrelevant to any issue made by the pleadings.

3. Evidence of the location of a house on the land which was one of the calls in the patent was admissible.

J. B. Relustein, J. M. Seawell, and Reinstein & Eisner, for appellants. L. B. & L. Mizner and E. R. Chase, for respondent.

Fox, J. Action in ejectment. Judgment for plaintiffs; motion for new trial denied, and defendants appeal from both the judgment and order. Plaintiffs deraign title under a certificate of purchase of tide-lands from the state, issued November 9, 1871, to L. B. Mizner, followed by patent issued June 14, 1877. Defendants deraign title under a United States patent for the Rancho Canada del Hambre de Bolsas, and a deed conveying the land in Little Bull valley down to the shore of the straits of Carquinez, in Contra Costa county. There is no question but that the patents are coterminous—the lands described in the one being bounded by the lands described in the other—at and along the point under investigation in this case; but the point is, where is that coterminous line? Both patents give as a general description “the shore of the straits of Carquinez,” and in both patents this general description is followed by a specific one of courses and distances, and each corresponding to the other in such courses and distances. As matter of law,—and that seems to be conceded as law in this case,—if there is a conflict between the natural boundary, or shore line, and the line as given by courses and distances, the latter must yield to the former. The correct location of the shore line is therefore the matter to be ultimately determined in this case, but it will have to be determined upon another trial; for the verdict rendered upon this trial, in our judgment, determines nothing, and cannot stand. As the case will have to go back for a new trial, we suggest, preliminarily, that either the verdict or the complaint is all awry as to the points of the compass at the place under consideration. The exhibits which are brought up to us indicate that the first fault is in the complaint. If so, the new proceedings in the court below ought to commence with an amendment of that complaint, for it can hardly be expected that a judgment can ever be reached which will settle rights between litigants, unless the pleadings are framed to support it. It may also be found advisable to amend it for another reason, which will hereafter become apparent.

1. The first point made by appellants is that the verdict and judgment are erroneous for uncertainty of description. The verdict reads as follows: “We, the jury, find that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the land described within the following boundaries: Commencing at point (A) on the west line of railroad right of way, running west at right angles with the right-of-way line (70) seventy feet, thence a south-easterly direction to a point on the west line of right of way, thence northerly along said right-of-way line (180) one hundred and eighty feet to the point of beginning.” That is all there is of the verdict, save the signature of the foreman. There is nothing in the complaint, or in any part of the judgment roll, which corresponds in any particular with this verdict, or from which it could be determined that the verdict referred to the whole or any part of the land described in the complaint, or in the answer, or even to any lands described in either of the patents, or any of the deeds offered in evidence. Place the description given in any of the pleadings, or of the title papers offered in evidence, side by side with this verdict, and it would be impossible to tell even that the lands were located in the same state, much less that they or any part of them were the same. Point A is not a monument, and there is nothing of record anywhere by which it can be located. The judgment conforms to the verdict, and does not improve upon it, in this regard. This verdict, and the judgment based on it, is clearly insufficient under the rule laid down in Crosby v. Dowd, 61

Cal. 602, affirmed in Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 621,<sup>1</sup> and in Hill v. Wall, 66 Cal. 132, 4 Pac. Rep. 1139. But it is claimed that Crosby v. Dowd was overruled in De Sepulveda v. Baugh, 74 Cal. 470, 16 Pac. Rep. 223. In the latter case it was held, modifying Crosby v. Dowd, that a judgment is not void for uncertainty because of the fact that it refers to some other paper for description. But it was still held that such a judgment may be erroneous, and subject to correction on appeal, even though it could not be held void on collateral attack, so long as there was some other paper, matter of record, to which reference might be had for description. But even under that decision this verdict is not good, for it refers to nothing of record or elsewhere, to which resort may be had for the purpose of locating the lands here attempted to be described. Respondent says the jury had before them during the entire trial, and in their jury-room, a diagram, upon which point A was distinctly marked. Suppose they had. They have not referred us to that diagram, and, if they had, the diagram is not a part of the record; it may be found to-day, it may be impossible to find it to-morrow, and when found it would be impossible to apply it with absolute certainty to any particular tract of land.

2. The action was commenced by the Northern Railway Company and A. J. Bryant as plaintiffs. Some time afterwards, upon the request of Bryant and of Floyd-Jones, the latter was substituted in the place of Bryant as plaintiff, and it was ordered that the name of Bryant be stricken from the complaint, and the action continued in the name of Floyd-Jones as plaintiff, “and that all the allegations and denials of the pleadings apply to said Floyd-Jones, and not to said Bryant, and that the said complaint be amended by striking out the name of said Bryant and inserting in the place thereof the name of said Floyd-Jones.” Floyd-Jones having succeeded by transfer to the interest of Bryant, he had a right to be substituted as plaintiff if he desired to do so, (Code Civil Proc. § 385,) but the method of doing it was a singular and unfortunate one. It left him to stand upon an allegation, and bound to prove, that he was the owner, or at least entitled to the possession, at the time the complaint was filed, neither of which was true. The court did err, therefore, in admitting in evidence, under the pleadings as they stood, the deed from Bryant to Floyd-Jones. It was incompetent, irrelevant, and inadmissible for the purpose of proving any issue in the cause. The difficulty would have been obviated by a proper supplemental complaint.

3. It was not error for the court to admit evidence tending to show the location of the John Travers house. That was one of the calls of the United States patent, and the parties were entitled to show where it was if they could. Whether the evidence was sufficient to prove the fact was for the jury to determine.

4. We do not think the point that the verdict is against law, because in disobedience

ence of the instructions of the court, is sustained. The jury are of course bound to take the law from the court, but it does not appear that they did not do so in this case. Under the instructions, the real question was one of fact,—where was the high-water mark? It does not follow, because the jury and the counsel do not agree upon that question of fact, that the jury disregarded the instructions of the court.

5. The point is also made that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. As the case must be tried anew, we deem it improper for us at this time to discuss that question.

6. It is also claimed that the certificate of purchase and state patent to Mizner are void. We regard this contention as settled adversely to appellant by the decision in Upham v. Hosking, 62 Cal. 250, a case which seems to be directly in point.

INGERMAN v. MOORE et al. (No. 12,733.)

NEGLECT OF MASTER—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff, an adult, had worked about defendant's saw-mill for about four years, and for nearly a year as helper to the sawyer at an "edger," consisting of eight circular saws arranged upon a table four feet high. Under the table, six inches below the saws was a revolving shaft, with a collar upon it fastened by a projecting set-screw. Plaintiff testified that on several occasions he had run the edger himself, by direction of his employer, after telling him that he did not understand machinery; that the saws were stopped and started at will by pulling, respectively, two ropes which hung near; that the morning of the accident was quite dark, but there were no lights; that he had been directed to run the machine, and, while doing so, a sliver dropped upon the shaft, which he attempted to remove, as he had seen the sawyer do, without stopping the saws, and while doing so his sleeve was caught by the set-screw, of whose existence he was ignorant, and his hand cut off. Held, that there was no evidence of negligence, and that he was guilty of contributory negligence. BEATTY, C. J., and McFARLAND, J., dissenting.

WORKS, J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries brought by an employe against his employers. The defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was denied. There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $12,500, a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and the defendants appeal. The facts are stated in the appellants' brief as follows: "In the month of January, 1884, the defendants were the owners of a saw-mill at Port Discovery, Washington Territory, and the plaintiff was one of their employes, engaged in their saw-mill in running an edger, or scantling machine, which was used for shaping lumber, and cutting it in various widths and thicknesses. The edger was about seven or eight feet in width, and from three to four feet in length, and had arranged upon it, at intervals upon its longest dimension, eight circular saws. These saws were moved by means of an engine, belt, and pulley, and made 860 revolutions a minute. The plaintiff stood in front of this machine, and, with the aid of a helper, who stood a few feet in the rear of him, ran the lumber through this edger to the rear thereof, where it was removed by others from the mill. About six feet to his rear, and close by his helper, was a rope, by pulling which, whenever it was necessary to stop the machine, the belt connected with it could be thrown off the pulley, and the movement of the saws stopped. The plaintiff commenced working at the mill in the year 1880, and from that time was continually employed there until the 14th of February, 1884. He had been at work on the inside of the mill, in connection with different saws, from the latter part of the year 1880. His special function from March, 1883, was that of an assistant to one Libben, who had charge of this edger or machine, and it was customary, when Libben was absent, for the plaintiff to take charge of the machine, with the aid of an assistant, who was detailed to help him. From the time he commenced his position as assistant to Libben, in March, 1883, he had at various times taken charge of and run the machine, at one time for several weeks in succession, and had been running it for several days prior to the accident. On the 14th of February, 1884, and for four days prior thereto, he was in charge of the machine, Libben being sick and absent, and, with the aid of his helper, one Hansen, was running the machine himself. On the morning of that day, at about half-past seven o'clock, a sliver had become detached from one of the planks that he was running through the saws and fell beneath the saws into an open box or frame upon which the saws were supported, and interfered with the free working of the machine. Beneath the saws, and six and a half inches below them, was a parallel shaft, revolving eighty-four times a minute, upon which this sliver rested. The floor underneath was open, for the purpose of allowing the chips and sawdust to fall through into the lower part of the mill. At the left-hand end of this parallel shaft, as you face it from the front, was a set-screw, which held a collar to it, and was placed there for the purpose of preventing its vibration. This screw projected about half an inch from the surface of the shaft, and was itself about half an inch square. When the plaintiff observed that the sliver had fallen into the box of the machine, instead of signaling his helper to stop the machine, he went around to the rear of it, while it was still moving at its usual velocity, and attempted to move the sliver with his hand. Instead of attempting to take it out with his right hand, he rested his right hand upon the frame of the box in which the machine was inclosed, and, with his left hand, reached across his body to the right-hand end of the machine, for the purpose of removing the sliver, when suddenly his hand was taken off, and his arm broken so that amputation became necessary. His hand was cut directly across at the wrist without any scratch or mutilation of any character, and, with some scraps of his clothing, fell down into the chute below the machine, where it was several hours afterwards found."

The plaintiff testified with reference to his employment in running the machine and the way in which the accident occurred, as follows: "I am 29 years old. I commenced to work at the mill of the defendants on the 24th of May, 1880. The mill was then owned by Mr. Mastick. The defendants took charge of it in 1881 or 1882. When I first went there I worked on the lumber pile. Then I commenced to work on the rollers inside, taking the lumber from the big saw. I did this kind of work about two years and a half. Then I went to work with John Libben on this scantling machine, where I got hurt. I had been at work on that machine about nine months before I was hurt. This machine was about seven or eight feet wide, and three or four feet long. Question. How was that machine worked? What kind of power? Answer. Steam power. Q. By a belt? A. Yes, sir; by a belt. Q. With a brake or wheel? A. We had a rope to pull. Six feet away from me was a rope to pull, and generally the man who was helping had to pull that rope when they wanted to stop the machine. Q. What did you do when you started it? A. Well, there were two ropes, one to start, and one to stop. Q. So you pulled one to start, and one to stop? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you ever run that machine? A. Yes, sir, I did. Q. When was the first time you ran it, about as near as you can recollect? I will ask you first how many times do you remember running it before the time you got hurt? A. I ran it three times. Q. As near as you can remember, tell me the first time you ran it. A. The first time I ran it about four days. Q. How long before you got hurt, as near as you can tell? A. About five months before I was hurt. Q. How long did you run it that time? A. About four days. Q. How did you come to run it at that time? A. Mr. Libben was sick and absent. Q. I want to get at who, if anybody, asked you to run it, or directed you to. A. Well, Mr. McCann told me to go there. Q. Tell the jury how, just exactly how, it happened. A. Mr. McCann told me to go and run the machine; that is all. I did not know much about machinery. He thought I could do it. I said: 'I will do my best.' He said: 'Go ahead; I think you can run it.' Q. What else, if anything, was said? A. Nothing more said at that time. He told me to go there, and I had to go there. Q. Did he give you any further instructions or directions? A. No. He gave me no instructions whatever. Q. How long did you say you ran it at that time? A. I ran it about four days. Q. How soon was that after the first time? A. About a month or six weeks after. Q. You say you ran it two days. How did you come to run it then? A. Well, Mr. McCann came and told me to run it. Q. What was said? Tell the jury all that was said about it. A. Well, I always told Mr. McCann I was no machinist, and didn't know much about machinery, so he had to take somebody else, and he always told me he thought I was able to run it, and I had to go there. Q. I am getting at the second time. You have told about the first time. Now I want to get at the other, as near as you can remember. A. Well, that is as near as I can remember. I always told Mr. McCann I did not know much about machinery. Q. Well, then, you went for about two days, you say? A. Yes, sir. Q. Then when did you run it again before you were hurt, if you did? A. I think I ran it some time in November. What time, I could not exactly say. Q. In November, before you were hurt? A. Yes, sir. Q. How long did you run it then? A. About nine days. Q. Where was Libben at that time? A. He was sick. * * * Q. Now, tell the jury what you were doing when you got hurt. A. I was trying to take the sliver out of the machine, and my hand got caught by the set-screw, and tore off. Q. Where was this sliver? A. Right underneath the machine,—right underneath the saw. It prevented me. I could not lift the rollers up to put the lumber into the machine. Q. How did you come to pull the sliver out, or be pulling the sliver out? A. I could not lift the rollers, so I had to get behind the machine, and try to get the sliver out; and it was a dark morning, the lights were out, so I tried to get the sliver out, and got my hand in the machine, and caught in the set-screw. I could not see the set-screw. I didn't know the set-screw was there. Q. What did the set-screw catch on, if anything? A. It caught my jumper, my outside shirt. Q. One of those strong jackets you wear outside to keep off the dust, was it? A. Yes, sir, and that caught inside, and pulled my arm around the shaft, and tore my hand off and broke my arm, and then I got out again. Q. Had you ever pulled a sliver out of there before? A. Not in that place, a good many other places. I done just exactly as I saw Mr. Libben do. I saw him pull slivers out of the same place."

It is contended by the appellants that the nonsuit should have been granted for two reasons, viz., that the evidence failed to show negligence on the part of the defendants, and that it did show contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. We feel constrained by the evidence, as it appears in the transcript, to agree with the appellants in this contention. We think the evidence fails to show negligence on the part of the appellants; but if there is any question as to this, there can be none as to the contributory negligence of the respondent. By counsel for respondent much stress is laid upon the fact that he was not regularly employed to run the machine which caused the injury, and was not competent to run and manage it; but his own testimony shows that he had been a helper on the machine for several months, and had himself run it a number of times for several days on each occasion. Besides, the accident did not occur, in this instance, because of any mismanagement of the machine, but was the result solely of carelessness on the part of the plaintiff in attempting to remove the sliver from the machine by placing his hand in close and dangerous proximity to the running saws. It was wholly unnecessary for him to run this risk. He testifies that his machine could be stopped by pulling a rope, and started by pulling another. He was a man of mature years, and was bound to know the risk and danger of taking the course he did, and as it was unnecessary for him to do so he was guilty of negligence which must prevent a recovery in this case.

It is contended that there was negligence on the part of the appellants in not having the room in which the machine was operated sufficiently lighted, but, if this be conceded, the act of the respondent in putting his hand near the saws in the dark only proves his negligence more clearly. Again, it is contended that there was negligence on the part of the defendants in having a set-screw on the shaft connected with or near the machine. But it appears from the evidence that the set-screw was necessary for the proper running of the machinery, or a part of it, and, besides, the accident, which it is claimed occurred on account of the set-screw being there, could not have occurred but for the negligent act of the plaintiff above mentioned. For these reasons the court below erred in overruling the motion for a nonsuit, and in denying the defendants a new trial. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

We concur: FOX, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; THORNTON, J.

I dissent: MCFARLAND, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. There was, in my opinion, sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of defendants to go to the jury, and not sufficient evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff to justify the court in granting a nonsuit on that ground. It is clear that the machine was dangerous to a man unfamiliar with its construction, and ignorant of the proper method of keeping it in order. If the plaintiff had expressly represented himself as competent to run and manage it, or had impliedly done so by seeking the employment, there might have been no duty resting upon the defendants to instruct or warn him as to the dangers involved in its operation. But the plaintiff's evidence showed that, so far from seeking the employment, or leading the defendants by any express or implied representations to suppose that he was competent to operate the machine, he accepted the employment unwillingly, protesting that he did not understand machinery, and that some one else should be put in charge. When a man is set to work upon a dangerous machine, under such circumstances, I think the employer is guilty of negligence if he fails to give proper instructions as to the method of operating the machine safely, and he is more specially guilty of negligence if he instructs the employe to operate it in a manner that is dangerous. Now, in this case, the only instruction ever given to the plaintiff, according to his evidence, was to do as he had seen Libben do, and in following this instruction he incurred the injury complained of. In this view of the case, a nonsuit would certainly have been improper, and the verdict of the jury is sustained by the evidence.

Ex parte HODGES. (No. 20,739.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EXTERMINATION OF SQUIRRELS—ORDINANCE.

1. Under County Government Act Cal. § 25, subd. 28, giving boards of supervisors power to provide for the destruction of squirrels or other wild animals, such boards have no authority to require land-owners, under a penalty, to exterminate within 90 days the ground-squirrels on their respective lands, and thereafter to keep the lands clear thereof.

2. Neither does Const. Cal. art. 11, § 11, providing that any county may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws, authorize such a regulation, as it is not a police, sanitary, or kindred regulation.

In bank.

Latimer & Brown, for petitioner. W. S. Tinning, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus. The board of supervisors of Contra Costa county enacted the following ordinance: "An ordinance to provide for the extermination and destruction of ground-squirrels in the county of Contra Costa. The board of supervisors of the county of Contra Costa do ordain as follows: Section 1. Ground-squirrels infesting lands in the county of Contra Costa are hereby declared to be a public nuisance. Sec. 2. All owners and occupants of lands within the county of Contra Costa are hereby required, within ninety days after the taking effect of this ordinance, to exterminate and destroy the ground-squirrels on their respective lands, and thereafter to keep said lands free and clear therefrom. Sec. 3. Any person violating any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Sec. 4. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force on the 30th day of November, 1889." The petitioner was convicted of a violation of this ordinance, sentenced to pay a fine, and, in default of payment, was committed to the county jail. He now prosecutes this proceeding, and asks that he be discharged.

The question as to the constitutionality of the ordinance is gravely and learnedly discussed by counsel on both sides, and Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, Potter & Dwarrie on Constitution, Sedgwick on Constitutional Law, and other constitutional authorities and decided cases innumerable, are cited in aid of and against its validity. It is certainly a most effective means of abating a nuisance, viz., the squirrels, and bringing about a very desirable end. We regret exceedingly that we cannot see our way clear to uphold and enforce such an important and original piece of legislation. Indeed, it would give us great pleasure to see the power here assumed applied to snakes, tarantulas, ants, flies, fleas, and other reptiles, insects, and pests, which tend to make man's life a burden, and to have it exercised and enforced in every county in the state. But we are unable to see by what right or authority of law a board of supervisors can impose upon a land-owner the burden and expense of exterminating animals feræ naturæ on his own land or elsewhere. It is true the county government act (section 25, subd. 28) gives boards of supervisors power to "provide for the destruction of gophers, squirrels, other wild animals, noxious weeds, and insects injurious to fruit-trees, or vines, or vegetable or plant life;" and this is a power that should be upheld in all cases where the means employed are reasonable, and not otherwise objectionable. But certainly this authority cannot be so far extended as to require a land-owner, under a penalty, to exterminate wild animals, of which he is not the owner, and over which he cannot, in the nature of things, have any control or dominion. From our limited knowledge of the nature of the squirrel tribe in this state, such a task would seem to us to be almost, if not quite, impossible. The ordinance requires that all occupants of lands, "within ninety days," exterminate and destroy the ground-squirrels on their respective lands, and "thereafter to keep said lands free and clear therefrom." This might be successfully done by the free and judicious use of poison, and perhaps by some other means, on very small tracts of land, but on large tracts it would certainly require eternal vigilance, if it could be accomplished at all; and if, after the extermination of the intruders on his own land, one, only one, should come over from the land of his neighbor, the ordinance would be violated. The occupant of lands bordering on another county, where no such regulation prevailed, and the pesky squirrel was allowed to propagate and grow unmolested, would be in a most unfortunate condition. Such an ordinance differs materially from laws requiring an occupant of lands to keep it free from noxious weeds, or such as make it the duty of an owner of diseased domestic animals to kill them in order to prevent the spread of the disease. These are matters over which the property owner has control, and the requirements are reasonable and just.

The respondent attempts to sustain the ordinance by and under section 11 of article 11 of the constitution of this state, which provides that "any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce, within its limits, all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws." But the ordinance is not intended to preserve the peace and quiet of the county, or to prevent the use of one's property to the injury of another, or for the protection of the lives, limbs, or comfort of all persons, or to prevent the propagation or spread of disease, nor is it, in any proper sense, a police or sanitary regulation. What is meant by "other regulations" in the section cited may be a question, but it must certainly be limited to objects similar to those denominated "police" and "sanitary." If the board of supervisors had no authority to pass such an ordinance, then no offense was committed by the petitioner; the act or omission on his part was not a crime; the court had no jurisdiction to try or convict him; and he is entitled to his discharge. We know of no law which can be held to authorize a board of supervisors to enact such an ordinance, and we are quite clear that it cannot be enforced for the reason that it is unreasonable and burdensome in the extreme. Let the petitioner be discharged.

We concur in the judgment: PATERSON, J.; MCFARLAND, J.

Mont. art. 8, § 12, provides that "the state shall be divided into judicial districts, in each of which there shall be elected by the electors thereof one judge of the district court. * * * Any judge of the district court may hold court for any other district judge, and shall do so when required by law." Held, that this section does not of itself confer authority to grant an injunction in chambers on a judge who is holding court in a district other than his own.

2. Where a district judge is holding court for another, as allowed by Const. Mont. art. 8, § 12, and adjourns the trial of a cause from Saturday until Monday, when he proceeds with it, he is not in the mean time a judge of the court in that district, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 172, which provides that an injunction may be granted "by the court in which the action is brought or by the judge thereof," and hence he cannot grant an injunction in chambers.

HARWOOD, J. The application for writ of certiorari in this case was heard and determined at the July term of this court. See 24 Pac. Rep. 626. Petition for rehearing was filed and granted. The jurisdictional question upon which the case was determined is worthy of the careful and extensive consideration which it has received; and in finally announcing our conclusions, some observations will be made upon the authorities cited and the reasons urged by plaintiff's counsel for a different construction of the constitutional provision governing the question than that announced in the original determination of the case. The authorities cited in support of plaintiff's position are so far distinguished, and rest upon constitutional or statutory provisions so radically different and so ample in scope, that such authorities tend strongly to support the conclusions originally announced in this case.

follows: "There shall be seven circuit judges appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate, who shall hold office for eight years. The state shall be divided into seven judicial circuits, the limits of which are defined in this constitution, and one judge shall be assigned to each circuit. Such judge shall hold two terms of his court in each county within his circuit each year, at such times and places as shall be prescribed by law. The chief justice may, in his discretion, order a temporary exchange of circuits by the respective judges, or any judge to hold one or more terms in any other circuit than that to which he is assigned. The judge shall reside in the circuit to which he is assigned." The system there provided for bears a very close resemblance to the provisions controlling the appointment of our judges for the territorial government, which so lately prevailed here, and which our statute laws and our practice were adapted to; but that system bears no resemblance to that provided by our state constitution for the establishment of our district courts and the election of judges thereof. In Florida, the judges were appointed by the governor, with the concurrence of the senate. This appointing power acted for the state at large, and the judge was appointed for the state, but assigned, of course, to one circuit, with power given to the chief justice to direct exchange of circuits, or to direct a judge assigned to one circuit to go into another and hold a term or terms of court. The likeness to our territorial system is so striking that no comment is needed to show the similarity. This suggestion is made because counsel for plaintiff insists that the practice they contend for has always been the practice "under our statutes." It may also be observed that the differences between the establishment of our territorial district courts and the state district courts are so striking as to need no comment; and for that reason, to cite the practice under our former territorial system, or the Florida authority, lends no aid in determining the question before us. Our state constitution defines the boundaries of eight judicial districts. Section 13, art. 8. The judges of the district courts are not chosen by the electors of the state at large, or appointed by the governor and senate, acting for the state at large, and assigned to one district; but our district court judges are elected for each district defined by the constitution, by the electors of such district. Section 12, art. 8. The only authority of law now in force by which one district judge may exercise his office in and for a district other than that for which he is elected is the clause in section 12, art. 8, that "any judge of the district court may hold court for any other district judge, and shall do so when required by law." The jurisdictional question involved in Clark v. Rugg, supra, arose in this way: Judge WALKER was the regular judge assigned to and resident in the second circuit, in which was Leon county. Judge VANN, of the third circuit, was assigned to hold the spring term in Leon county. During said term, while Judge VANN was presiding in Leon county, Judge WALKER, the resident judge in said second circuit, made an order at chambers appointing a receiver in an action pending in Leon county. The point raised was that Judge WALKER was not the circuit judge for that county during said spring term, and hence that the appointment of a receiver, in an action pending in said county, by Judge WALKER at chambers, was void for want of jurisdiction. This was held to be so. In passing upon the point, the court say: "The decision of a case in North Carolina, in respect to the status and jurisdiction of the judge where one is assigned to hold a term in the place of another, seems to meet the first question in this case. It is there decided by the court that when the governor requires a judge to hold a term of court, regular or special, for some county outside of his own district, the authority of the judge is special; the jurisdiction of the proper judge is superseded by the substituted judge in that county during the specified term, in respect to all cases pending in the specified county. Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 511. This concise statement of the law is so appropriate to the circumstances and the constitutional provision of our own state, [Florida,] we adopt it as expressing the view of this court. Judge VANN, having been designated, agreeably to the terms of the constitution, to hold the specified term in Leon county, became, pro hac vice, the judge of the circuit for Leon county during the continuance of the term, as to all cases pending in that county in the circuit court, and the authority of the resident judge as to such causes was in the mean time superseded."

In the case of Bear v. Cohen, supra, it appears that the governor, under authority of a provision of the constitution of North Carolina, had directed Judge WATTS, of the sixth judicial district, to hold the spring terms of court in Wilson and Craven counties, which were in the third district. While so holding court, he made an order in a case pending in Wayne county in the third district, but in a county where he had not been directed to act. It was held that Judge WATTS had no jurisdiction to make said order affecting a case pending in Wayne county, and that the order was therefore void; and it was further held that Judge WATTS superseded the resident judge in the counties where he was directed to hold court, while he presided there.

We have quoted from said cases to show how far the same are distinguished from the case at bar by reason of the different constitutional provisions controlling the decisions, and also to show that following those cases would lead directly to the conclusion that Judge HUNT was superseded and his judicial powers suspended, so far as his own district was concerned, while Judge GALBRAITH was temporarily holding court in Lewis and Clarke county, which is the first judicial district. It would also follow that Judge HUNT's judicial acts, while Judge GALBRAITH was there holding court, were of course null and void. This, we think, would be a violent construction of our constitution, not contemplated or intended by the framers thereof. The record shows that Judge HUNT also presided in his court, to dispose of general matters pending, on the 23d day of June, and Judge GALBRAITH on the same day proceeded with the trial of the cause which had been on trial before him on the Saturday preceding.

We are cited to the case of Morriess v. Insurance Co., 8 S. E. Rep. 383. In that case the judge whose jurisdiction was questioned was the judge of the hustings court of the city of Richmond, acting as the judge of the chancery court of Richmond. He acted as such, however, under the following statute: "During the absence of the judge of said chancery court, or the inability of said judge from any cause to hold a term of his court, or to sit in any particular case, or discharge any duty required by law, the said term may be held, or said cause may be tried, or said duty may be performed, by any circuit judge, or by the judge of the hustings court of the city of Richmond." It is difficult to see where the room is left in which to thrust an objection to the jurisdiction of the judge of the hustings court to lawfully perform any duty or function of the judge of said chancery court, under said statutes, whenever the event happened which made it lawful for the judge of the hustings court to act as judge of the chancery court. But an objection was made, and the supreme court of appeals, in passing upon such objection, said: "The answer is that, when the judge of the hustings court was, by authority of law, sitting as the judge of the chancery court, and holding a term of that court, or trying a case therein, he was the judge of that court. He became such by authority of the law by which he lawfully ascended the bench. And any law which referred to the judge of that court, and granted any powers, granted such powers to him. Any other construction of the law would be unreasonable." The court here referred to the law which has just been quoted, which provided that when the regular judge of the chancery court was absent, or unable from any cause to hold a term, or to sit in any particular case, or discharge any duty required by law, the said term may be held, or said cause tried, or said duty performed, by the substituted judge. The objection that the substituted judge acting under such law did not have power to exercise all the judicial functions and perform all the duties of judge of the chancery court of Richmond might justly be characterized as unreasonable. If we had a statute or constitutional provision of such amplitude before us there could be no difficulty in settling the question of jurisdiction involved in the case at bar. The case has no bearing in support of plaintiff's position. The only inference we can draw from it bearing upon the case at bar is that, if such a provision of law was necessary to authorize the substituted judge to perform all the duties of the regular judge in vacation as well as in holding court in that case, then is not such a provision of law necessary in this case to sustain the jurisdiction of a judge of the district court in performing all the duties of another district judge, both in holding court and in vacation?

Plaintiff's counsel cite the case Ex parte Angus, 28 Tex. App. 293, 12 S. W. Rep. 1099, a case arising in Texas, where one district judge heard a writ of habeas corpus at chambers for another district judge. The jurisdiction of the judge who heard the writ being questioned, the court of appeals said: "It may be contended that, BURKE being absent, TUCKER, to obtain jurisdiction, must issue the writ himself, and make it returnable before him. (TUCKER.) We answer this by this proposition: BURKE being absent, if TUCKER could issue and hear the writ, he evidently could hear a writ which had been legally issued by BURKE. In support of this proposition we refer to article 1124, Rev. St.: 'Any judge of the district court may hold court for or with any other district judge, and the judges of the several district courts may exchange districts whenever they may deem it expedient to do so.' If these judges could lawfully exchange districts, then in that way the judge of one district could become the judge of another district throughout the whole extent thereof, for all the courts thereof, and for all judicial and ministerial purposes devolving upon the judicial office. This of course would include any duties to be performed at chambers. In addition to that, any district judge was authorized to hold court for or with another district judge. The law controlling the decision in this case renders it inapplicable to the case at bar. The case of Land, etc., Co. v. Engley, (Colo.) 23 Pac. Rep. 452, and the case of Wyers v. State, 21 Tex. App. 448, 2 S. W. Rep. 816, shed no light on the question involved in the case before us. In the former case the sole question raised was as to which judge should settle and authenticate the bill of exceptions. It was held that the same should be done by the judge who presided at the trial and made the rulings excepted to. In the latter case it appears that the only question was as to whether it appeared by the record that the judge who presided was authorized to preside at the trial. The court answered that question by observing that the record showed that the judge who tried the cause was presiding in exchange with the regular judge of the district. This was held a sufficient showing.

A case more nearly in point than any other brought to our attention is the case of People v. O'Neil, 47 Cal. 109, cited by respondent's counsel. In that case the court say: "The order recites that the writ was returnable before the undersigned district judge of the fourteenth judicial district, presiding in the sixth judicial district court; but it appears from the order of Justice SPRAGUE, ordering the writ to be returned before Judge REARDON, that it directs the return to be made before the Honorable T. B. REARDON, at the district court room, in the city of Sacramento, and omits any reference to the fact that he was then presiding in the sixth judicial district court. But it further appears that at the time when the habeas corpus case was being heard before Judge REARDON the district court for the sixth judicial district for Sacramento county was in session, presided over by Judge RUMAGE, the judge of that court." Under that state of facts the court observed: "It is legally impossible that Judge REARDON, when he made the order, was presiding judge of the sixth judicial district court, which was at the time in actual session, presided over by its own judge, and the order was improperly placed among the files of the court." The contempt proceedings for the violation of the order were declared null and void for want of jurisdiction. It is proper to observe that a question of practice decided in that case is decided otherwise in a later California case, (Tyler v. Connolly, 65 Cal. 23, 2 Pac. Rep. 414,) but the soundness of the reasoning and the conclusion reached upon the point under consideration has never been questioned by any court to our knowledge, and had the case been brought up by certiorari, the same result would have been reached, and no question of practice involved.

The case of Gale v. Michie, 47 Mo. 326, involving a question of jurisdiction, which was determined by construing a provision of the Missouri constitution, we think has a strong bearing by analogy upon the case at bar. The point in controversy, as well as the conclusion reached by the supreme court of that state, is stated by Judge PHILEMON BLISS as follows: "The question then arises, whether the judge of the Gasconade circuit court, being himself interested in the cause, had a right to call upon a judge of a neighboring circuit, who was present, to sit and determine said cause. If he had such right, he must have obtained it from the constitution of the state, for it will not be pretended that considerations of convenience or of fairness merely will control the jurisdiction of a court, or point out the judge who is entitled to hold it. Relliance, doubtless, was had upon section 17, art. 6, of the constitution, which reads as follows: 'If there be a vacancy in the office of judge of any circuit, or if he be sick, absent, or from any cause unable to hold any term of court of any county of his circuit, such term of court may be held by a judge of any other circuit; and at the request of the judge of any circuit, any term of court in his circuit may be held by the judge of any other circuit.' In this case both judges evidently construed the authority given a judge of another circuit to hold one of the terms of the Gasconade circuit court, at the request of its judge, as also giving authority to sit in a particular cause at his request, the term being held by himself. But no such authority is contained in the section, either directly or by implication." If, then, the power to call in another circuit judge to hold a term of court gives no authority, expressly or by implication, to call in such judge to hold part of a term, or try one cause, a fortiori it must be said that the authority to call in another district judge "to hold court" does not confer authority on the substituted judge to exercise powers and discharge duties not involved in holding court; that is, to exercise the powers of the resident judge of the district at chambers in vacation. Under our system, any district judge has power to go into another judicial district and hold court for another district judge. But we are confident that the framers of our state constitution did not contemplate that the judges of the district court should exercise concurrent jurisdiction in one district until the authority so to do was given by legislation—First, because the constitution provides (section 12, art. 8) that one judge shall be chosen in each district by the electors thereof; secondly, because the constitution provides that the legislative assembly may increase the number of judges in any district, (section 14, art. 8.) If this view is correct, there could have been only one district judge of the first district when the order in question was made; and if Judge GALBRAITH was the judge of said district to all intents and purposes, not only to hold court, but to exercise the judicial functions out of court in vacations, between adjournments of court, until the completion of the trial or trials which were progressing before him, it follows that Judge HUNT was superseded during that time. The record shows that when Judge GALBRAITH issued said order of injunction at chambers, Judge HUNT was in his district in the city of Helena, where the district court for the first district was held; and, further, that while Judge GALBRAITH was there after the trial of the cause before him had commenced, Judge HUNT presided in his own court to dispose of general matters pending when Judge GALBRAITH was not actually occupying the bench, and when Judge HUNT left the bench Judge GALBRAITH proceeded with said trial.

It is contended by counsel for plaintiff that the statute authorized Judge GALBRAITH to issue said order at chambers, and the following provision is cited: "An injunction is a writ or order requiring a person to refrain from a particular act. The order or writ may be granted by the court in which the action is brought, or by a judge thereof; and when made by a judge may be enforced as the order of the court." Section 172, Code Civil Proc. To support the position of plaintiff's counsel, it is contended that, because Judge GALBRAITH held court in the first district on Saturday, and court having adjourned until Monday, and Judge GALBRAITH not having finished the trial of the cause on trial before him, and presided again on the following Monday, thereby he was judge of the said court during the interim from the adjournment, on Saturday, until court convened, on Monday; or, in the language of the statute, he was "a judge thereof,"—that is, judge of the court wherein the action was pending in which injunction was sought,—and therefore the statute referred to him. We will dwell upon this proposition a moment, although the record shows, as before observed, that Judge HUNT was in his district, at the place where the first judicial district court is held, at the time the order of injunction was issued, and that Judge HUNT convened his court on the following Monday morning, passed upon motions and demurrers, and thereafter Judge GALBRAITH held court and proceeded with the trial which had been progressing before him on the preceding Saturday. If the trial proceeding before Judge GALBRAITH in the first district had been finished on Saturday, and he had no further engagement to hold court in the first district at that time, it would hardly be contended that when he descended from the bench, having finished his engagement there, he would still have held judicial authority in the first district, although he may have remained in the city of Helena some time. But because he had not finished the trial of said cause,—that is, because he proposed to hold court for the judge of the first district at a future time,—he still held the judicial power in and for the first district during the interim, and could issue orders in vacation, in other cases pending there, until that intention was fulfilled. But how would it be if that intention to hold court at a future time never was fulfilled by that judge? Suppose the parties during the interim should settle the controversy and dismiss the action, independently of such judge, by causing the clerk of the court to enter an order of dismissal in the register, as could be done under section 242, Code Civil Proc.; or suppose that from sickness of the judge or his family, or of some of the litigants, counsel, jurors, or from other cause, the further progress of the trial had been postponed for say 10 days; or suppose again that at the close of such trial a motion was made to arrest judgment, or a motion of some other character, which the judge reserved under advisement for a fortnight, and under some such conditions Judge GALBRAITH left off holding court, and Judge HUNT proceeded with the regular business of his court, which is, under the constitution, "always open for the transaction of business except on legal holidays and non-judicial days," (section 17, art. 8.)—would Judge GALBRAITH still have been judge of the first judicial district court during the interim? He would according to the theory of plaintiff's counsel, and would be authorized to issue orders at chambers in cases pending in the first judicial district court. But suppose again that while the judge was presuming to hold such ephemeral jurisdiction by virtue of a precarious link of unfinished business which connected his judicial power with such other district the parties should, without his knowledge, settle the controversy and dismiss the action, such judge would have no unfinished matter requiring him to return to that bench; thereby would be broken the uncertain tenure, whereby such judge was presuming to hold a jurisdiction and was acting at chambers upon other matters pending in such district; and such judge would be thereby divested of all judicial power in such foreign district. We do not think that, after careful consideration of the subject, it will be seriously argued that under such convertible, capricious, and uncertain conditions and contingencies the judge of one district can retain his jurisdiction as judge of a court in another district in vacation, when he is not holding such court. We are irresistibly drawn to the conclusion that such a theory is untenable, and that the proper construction of the constitutional provision in question is that, when a judge of one district goes into another to hold court, he is judge of the latter court while he presides; and, further, that it requires legislation to enable the district judges to go into districts other than their own, and become the judges of such other districts to all intents and purposes for temporary occasions.

Many suggestions are made in the petition for rehearing which rest wholly upon considerations of convenience. We do not regard these suggestions as entirely out of place in illustrating the effect, where two reasonable constructions are possible. 1 Bl. Comm. 68, and notes. This court was not unmindful of those considerations when this case was originally determined. We fail to see, however, that the conditions or circumstances surrounding the litigants in question were inconvenient at the time said order was made. Judge HUNT, of the first district, was in his district at the time, empowered by law to issue the order in vacation at chambers, while another district judge was presiding over the court of that district the same day on which the order was issued, and such order could have been issued as a court order. The suggestion addressed to this court that "there might be a suspension of the writ of injunction indefinitely," or that the writ would be unavailable as a safeguard to protect the rights of property, by reason of the jurisdiction of the district judges, as we regard the constitutional provisions on that subject, is equally specious. When we consider that the constitution provides for eight judicial districts in the state, and a district judge resident in each district, with provision that in case of vacancy the governor may fill the same by appointment, with the provision that in districts comprising only one county the district court shall always be open for the transaction of business except on holidays and non-judicial days, and in districts composed of more than one county the judges may fix the terms of court, which shall not be less than four per annum, with the provision that any judge of the district court may hold court for any other district judge, and the statute providing that the resident district judges are empowered to issue the order of injunction at chambers as well as by way of a court order, and that said order may be issued by a non-resident district judge as a court order when holding court in another district,—under such conditions as these the criticism is without force or justification. If the framers of our constitution had intended to provide that the district judges might exchange districts ad libitum, and thereby the district judge of one district become invested with all the judicial power in and for another district, of course they would have so provided. It is fair to presume that they had before them the constitutions of other states, framed on the theory of establishment of district courts and the jurisdiction of such courts and the judges thereof, as well as knowledge of the construction of such provisions by the courts; but they adopted no such language. It will be observed that authority to "exchange districts" involves infinitely more than authority to "hold court for any other district judge." Under authority "to exchange districts," Judge HUNT, whose district comprises only one county, might exchange districts with Judge GALBRAITH, and thereby become immediately invested with all the judicial power of district judge of a district comprising three counties, not only to hold all courts of such counties, he could exercise all judicial power devolving upon the office of district judge of the latter district in holding court and in vacation; whereas, if he was called upon to "hold court" for Judge GALBRAITH, it might be for a day, or for the trial of one cause, in Jefferson county only, and Judge GALBRAITH might proceed to hold court in another county of his own district and exercise his judicial power in vacation throughout his own district. Is it to be presumed that the framers of our constitution adopted language without duly weighing its import and scope of meaning, as distinguished from other forms, especially where other forms have been construed? Mr. Cooley, upon this subject, says: "In interpreting clauses we must presume that words have been employed in their natural and ordinary meaning. As MARSHALL, C. J., says, the framers of the constitution and the people who adopted it 'must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense, and to have intended what they have said.' This is but saying that no forced or unnatural construction is to be put upon their language, and it seems so obvious a truism that one expects to see it universally accepted without question; but the attempt is made so often by interested subtlety and ingenious refinement to induce the court to force from these instruments a meaning which their framers never held that it frequently becomes necessary to redeclare this fundamental maxim." Cooley, Const. Lim. (5th Ed.) 71. Again, the same author observes: "Every such instrument is adopted as a whole, and a clause which, standing by itself, might seem of doubtful import, may yet be made plain by comparisons with other clauses or portions of the same law." Id. 70. Although the framers of our constitution went far in providing for the convenient administration of justice in our state, a study of that instrument plainly shows that they left to the legislative assembly the further enactment of provisions to render the administration of justice still more convenient and speedy, by providing in detail for supplying temporary vacancies or absence or disabilities occurring in respect to the office of district judge, (sections 12-14, 17;) and we cannot supply all that may be needed by construction. Indeed the clause in question is so direct, plain, and concise there is no room for interpretation between two or more possible constructions. Nor is the position plaintiff's counsel contend for supported by any implication to be found in said clause by any authorized rule of interpretation. We think the construction or implication contended for by plaintiff's counsel would involve greater inconvenience, uncertainty, and derangement in the working of our judicial system than is involved in following the plain meaning expressed in the clause in question. We leave the clause to be given its fullest scope and import in the investiture of any district judge with power to hold court in another district, and with every implication necessary to clothe such judge with every power and attribute which can be exercised in fulfilling the office of presiding over or holding court in another district.

The exercise of no such power is questioned in this case. After much careful study of the constitution and authorities in reference to this subject, we see no reason why an enactment similar to the Virginia law referred to supra may not be put in force in this state, with some further provisions to authorize a state officer by requisition to call upon a district judge to hold court and perform all other duties of district judge of another district when the judge of such district is unable from any cause to discharge the same. In order to give weight to the argument of counsel for plaintiff, it has been questioned that if the jurisdiction contended for has not been given by the constitution the legislature has no power to pass such an act as suggested. If the legislature cannot so provide, it is because the constitution prohibits it. The legislature is the supreme law-making power for the state on all rightful subjects of legislation, except as restricted by the constitution. Cooley, Const. Lim. (5th Ed.) 105-109. There is no such prohibition in that instrument. There is express authority given to the legislature to change the boundaries of judicial districts. Thereunder a county may be taken from the jurisdiction of one judge and placed permanently under the jurisdiction of another judge, for all judicial purposes. Cannot that which may be done permanently be also done temporarily? Moreover, it may be said, upon authority, that the legislature is competent to add statutory jurisdiction to constitutional jurisdiction, provided that the statutory jurisdiction is in harmony with and does not infringe or curtail the constitutional jurisdiction. Harris v. Vanderveer's Ex'r, 21 N. J. Eq. 424; Supervisors v. Arrighi, 54 Miss. 668; Martin v. Harvey, Id. 685; Bank v. Duncan, 52 Miss. 740; People v. Hurst, 41 Mich. 323, 1 N. W. Rep. 1027; Wells, Jur. 54.

Some suggestions herein may be subject to the criticism of being mere dicta; but this subject has been argued with such zeal and ability by the learned counsel, and engages such interest on the part of the judiciary and bar of the state as well as able gentlemen who aided in framing the constitution so lately adopted, that we have felt justified in giving the subject a broad and extended discussion. From all the points of view from which the subject has been examined, following authority, sound rules of interpretation and reasoning, we must adhere to the conclusions originally reached in this case.

BLAKE, C. J., concurs.

DE WITT, J., (dissenting.) The facts of the case are fully stated in the opinion of the court upon the original hearing, July term, 1890. Upon the rehearing the respondent has more fully presented the question of jurisdiction, upon which point the case was originally decided, and cited authorities which have led me to reform my views by virtue of which I concurred in that decision. In the learned opinion of the majority of the court just read, the original conclusion is affirmed. I regret that I cannot agree with my associates in that result, and will state the grounds of my dissent. Against the views of the majority of the court a serious argument ab inconvenienti may be made. Some suggestions in that direction are as follows: Under article 8, § 37, Const., a judge may, if he be not otherwise prohibited, legally absent himself from the state for a limited period. If a judge avail himself of this permission, or if he be temporarily disqualified, by illness or otherwise, the important writ of injunction cannot at all times be set in motion. If a judge be holding court for another, under the provision of section 12, art. 8, Const., a premium is held out to the evil minded to commit outrages, during the periods between the sessions of the court, which the judge is powerless to prevent. In the temporary disqualification or absence of the judge, or a vacancy in his office, a vast amount of formal work done at chambers would be suspended. The argument ab inconvenienti cannot prevail, nor is it of weight in the face of positive law; but in doubtful cases, and where two constructions are possible, it avails much. People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 379; Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 513. If the constitution and laws can be so construed as to save the ever-present invocation of the great remedy of injunction, I am of opinion that it is the duty of the court to follow such construction. I feel that I must be amply satisfied that the framers of the constitution so intended before I can consent, that at any time the people shall be deprived of the beneficent operation of this writ. With these views, I seek a construction of the constitution that will protect the rights of property and not leave them to wanton destruction. The constitution, § 20, Schedule, § 1, is as follows: "All laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the territory of Montana, and in force at the time the state shall be admitted to the Union, and not inconsistent with this constitution or the constitution or laws of the United States of America, shall be and remain in full force as the laws of the state until altered or repealed, or until they expire by their own limitation." At the time the state was admitted to the Union there was in force the following law of the territory: "An injunction is a writ or order requiring a person to refrain from a particular act. The order or writ may be granted by the court in which the action is brought, or by a judge thereof, and when made by a judge may be enforced as the order of the court." Section 172, Code Civil Proc. This provision of the law seems to me to be devoid of ambiguity. When it says that the writ or order may be granted by the court in which the action is brought, or by a judge thereof, it may not mean that it may be granted at chambers by any judge of any district court in the state, whether he be the regular judge of the particular court or not, (as to this I express no opinion;) but it does certainly mean that it may be granted by a judge of the court in which the action is brought.

Two inquiries present themselves: (1) Was Judge GALBRAITH, when he issued the order, a judge of the first judicial district court? If he were, it must follow, under section 172, Code Civil Proc., cited above, that he had jurisdiction to issue the order, provided (2) that said section 172 is not inconsistent with the provisions of the constitution in reference to the jurisdiction and organization of the district courts and the powers of the judges thereof. My associates are of the opinion that Judge GALBRAITH was not a judge of the first judicial district court, in the full sense of that term, but that his authority was limited to simply presiding over an open session of that court. I believe that a broader view must obtain. In discussing the cases where my learned brother writing the opinion of the majority has quoted the text, I will not repeat that which is cited by him, but will comment upon his conclusions. Section 12, art. 8, Const., provides, among other things, as follows: "Any judge of the district court may hold court for any other district judge, and shall do so when required by law." The action in which the injunction order was granted was commenced in the first district court June 21, 1890. Judge GALBRAITH, of the fifth district, pursuant to the provision of the constitution above cited, held court in the first district, for Judge HUNT, during the court hours of that day, which was Saturday. All that appears in reference to Judge HUNT on that day is that he was present in the city of Helena, where said court was held. He did not hold any court that day, nor exercise any judicial functions. Judge GALBRAITH continued to hold court on the Monday following, June 23d. Between the adjournment of Saturday and the convening of Monday he was of course not on the bench, or doing the work which is done in court. During this period, and on Saturday afternoon, at chambers, he issued the injunction order complained of. During the whole of this period—this Saturday, Sunday, and Monday—he was doing all that is understood as "holding court." He left the bench for the night, and for a non-judicial day; but on these days he was "holding court" in the full sense of the term. He could have done nothing further which would have rendered a fulfillment of the definition of the term "holding court" any more complete. What was the character, official or otherwise, of the individual Thomas J. Galbraith, when he was thus "holding court," as described? Was he a referee? Was he a trier of a single cause, by stipulation or otherwise? Were his functions limited by any order assigning him to this court, or was he a judge of the court? And let it be remembered that the statute (section 172) says that the writ or order may be granted by "a judge," "a judge of the court." The words "a judge" occur twice in the statute, and give the air of deliberation to the expression. It need not be "the judge" of the court. The article "a" seems to me to be suggestive. If the law read "the judge," there would be more reason in contending that it meant the regularly elected or appointed judge of the particular court. But the article "a," in itself, carries the idea of more than one judge. It is equivalent to "any," and seems to exclude the application of the statute to the one judge of the court. I cannot but conclude that Judge GALBRAITH, "holding court," as he was, when he issued the order, was a judge of the court, whether I regard the common understanding of language or the history of legal proceedings.

I am not without support in my views in the decisions of the highest courts of sister states, if I interpret correctly the letter and spirit of these decisions. The difference between the members of this court in their views of those cases has largely led to the divergence in this decision. I will treat those cases in the same order pursued by my associate.

First, as to the Florida case, (Clark v. Rugg, 20 Fla. 861.) My associates seem to hold that the only force of this case as an authority is its application to our late territorial judicial system; and they note that counsel have urged upon our consideration what has always been the practice in the territory. I in no way rely upon the territorial practice, but look only to the state constitution, and the laws adopted thereby, and apply the reasoning of the Florida case to such constitution and laws. The applicability of the Florida case to the case before this court is disposed of by the majority opinion in this argument: that in Florida the circuit judges are appointed by the governor for the state at large, but assigned to a circuit, whereas with us the district court judges are not chosen by the electors of the state at large, or appointed by the governor for the state, but are elected for a district by the electors of that district. In the view of the court, there would seem to be something sacred in this election of a judge by the people of his district, something by virtue of which the people of the district, by such vote for their judge, excluded a judge of a foreign district from coming among them with any powers except those granted by the constitution. This of course we grant, without regard to the manner of the selection of the judge. The judge, whether in a foreign district or his own, has no powers but those granted by the constitution, either expressly or by necessary implication. But the sovereign people who elect the judge of the district are the same sovereign people who made the constitution. The people of a district who declare their wishes in the election of a judge have also, in a more solemn manner, declared themselves in the constitution. Therefore, the people of the first district, who elected Judge HUNT, also, at the same election, as it happens in this instance, expressed their permission that Judge GALBRAITH should "hold court" (Const. art. 8, § 12) for Judge HUNT; and we have only to arrive at what the people intended in their constitution by the words "hold court." In this view, the Florida case applies as forcibly to our situation as to the Florida system. And let it go even to the extent of the temporary suspension of Judge HUNT's judicial functions. It establishes Judge GALBRAITH's power to issue the order. The condition of affairs is better if Judge GALBRAITH be the judge, and the whole judge, and Judge HUNT be in temporary suspension, than if jurisdiction be temporarily divided between the two officers, and litigants be uncertain as to which department of the court their business is properly classified in. In the Florida case the judge was assigned to "hold a term" for another. There was not an order for him to "exchange circuits" under the constitution of that state, which, perhaps, might imply more power than "holding a term." The expression of our constitution, "hold court," seems to have as great a significance as "hold a term." The North Carolina case of Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. C. 513, is to the same effect, and need not be reviewed. I am of opinion that each of these cases holding that the substituted judge had jurisdiction sustains my view,—that Judge GALBRAITH had power to issue the order in question.

In order to make clear my views of the Virginia case, it will be necessary to cite a little more fully from the opinion of the court, as follows: "The first error assigned is that the vacation decree rendered by A. B. GUNON, judge of the hustings court of Richmond, acting as a judge of the chancery court of Richmond, was a nullity, and all acts under it void, because there was no authority found in the law for a judge to render a decree in vacation, which power is not given by the authority to render such decree in term. * * * Section 53, c. 167, Code Va. 1873, provides: 'Chancery causes may hereafter, by consent of parties given in open court, and entered of record, be submitted to the judge of the court in which such cause is pending for decision or decree to be made therein in vacation, and all decrees so made hereafter and entered by the clerk in vacation shall be deemed and taken to be as valid as though they had been made and entered in open court.' This act was passed in January, 1873; but it is contended that this act only gave such authority to the judge of the court in which the cause is pending, and that the judge of another court, sitting in such court, could not thus acquire the needed authority. It is provided by the act of assembly of July 11, 1870: 'During the absence of the judge of said chancery court, or the inability of the said judge, from any cause, to hold a term of his court, or to sit in any particular case, or discharge any duty required by law, the said term may be held, or said cause be tried, or said duty may be performed, by any circuit judge, or the judge of the hustings court of the city of Richmond.' But the argument is still further pressed that if the judge of the hustings court was thus authorized to sit as judge, under the act of July 11, 1870, the act of January 14, 1873, which authorized the judge of that court to render decree in vacation when the parties consented, did not apply to the substituted judge, because the terms of the act did not include them; that the authority is given to the judge of that court, and none other. The answer is that, when the judge of the hustings court was, by lawful authority, sitting as judge of the chancery court, and holding a term of that court, or trying a case therein, he was the judge of that court. He became such by authority of the law by which he lawfully ascended that bench. And any law which referred to the judge of that court, and granted any powers, granted such powers to him. Any other construction of the law would be unreasonable." Morris v. Insurance Co., 8 S. E. Rep. 386. It will be observed that, by the Virginia statute, if the chancery judge was disabled (1) to hold a term, (2) to sit in a particular case, (3) to discharge any duty, then the judge of the hustings court might (1) hold that term, (2) sit in the particular case, (3) discharge any other duty. The rendering of the decree, in question in the case by the hustings judge would come under the third classification of powers. If it appeared that the chancery judge was from any cause unable to render this decree, the judge of the hustings court might do so. It does not appear in the case that the chancery judge was unable to render the decree, or that the hustings judge rendered it for that reason; but it does appear that the judge of the hustings court had been holding a term. The decision of the supreme court does not proceed upon the ground that the hustings judge could render the decree by reason of the inability of the chancery judge, as permitted in classification 3, supra; but the decision is placed upon the ground that the hustings judge had power to render the decree because he had held the term and was judge of the court, and that laws referring to the judge of the court referred to him. Although the Virginia statute is infinitely broader than our constitutional provision, the decision of that case does not rest upon that additional breadth, but rather upon reasons above remarked, and reasons entirely applicable to the case now before this court. I therefore refer to the case with approval, as sustaining my position in the case at bar. And, returning to that case, it is not questioned that Judge GALBRAITH was lawfully upon the bench of the first district court on those days in June. Consequently, under the Virginia case, any law or constitutional provision which granted powers to the judge of that court granted those powers to him.

Article 1124, Rev. St. Tex., provides: "Any judge of the district courts may hold courts for or with any other district judge, and the judges of the several district courts may exchange districts whenever they may deem it expedient to do so." The court of appeals in Re Angus, 12 S. W. Rep. 1100, in construing that provision, said: "If a district judge may hold court for another judge, has he not the authority to hear a habeas corpus case for him at his request, the other judge being absent from the district? We will not discuss this proposition, deeming it too plain for discussion."

It may be observed that in this case the writ was made returnable at chambers and not before the court, and that the supreme court base the decision, not upon the ground of an exchange of districts, which perhaps would in itself mean an exchange of all judicial functions, but upon the ground that the substituted judge was "holding court," and, so "holding court," had the authority in question at chambers.

Section 12, art. 6, Const. Colo., substantially the same as ours, is as follows: "The judges of the district courts may hold courts for each other, and shall do so when required by law." The supreme court of that state (Land, etc., Co. v. Engley, 23 Pac. Rep. 452) held that a judge so holding court for another was the proper judge to settle a bill of exceptions in a case so tried by him. It does not appear whether such bill of exceptions was settled in chambers or in court; but if the former, it would not seem to be correct, if the view of the majority of the court in the matter before us obtains.

The case of People v. O'Neill, 47 Cal. 109, is in no way adverse to the view which I hold. In that case Judge REARDON, of the fourteenth district, was temporarily in the city of Sacramento, in the sixth district. While so there he heard and determined a matter in chambers, and made an order thereon. The opinion says: "The order recites that the writ was 'returnable before the undersigned district judge of the fourteenth judicial district, presiding in said sixth judicial district court.' But it appears from the order of Justice SPRAGUE, ordering the writ to be returned before Judge REARDON, that it directs the return to be made 'before Hon. T. B. REARDON, at the district court room in the city of Sacramento,' and omits any reference to the fact that he was then presiding in the sixth judicial district court." The fact was, as appears by the decision, that Judge REARDON was not holding court, or presiding in the foreign district. In that vitally material fact the case is wholly distinguished from that now under consideration. But Judge GALBRAITH was holding court in the first district, and upon that fact I find sufficient foundation upon which to lay the structure of my conclusions herein.

The application made in the opinion of the majority of the court herein of Gale v. Michie, 47 Mo. 326, meets neither my assent nor my understanding. The opinion of the Missouri court is sufficiently cited for my purposes, and I will not requote it. The authority conferred by the Missouri constitution is wholly different from that by the Virginia statute considered above. The latter gives the substituted judge the power to hold a term, and separately and independently, and when not holding a term the power to try a particular cause and perform particular acts. The Missouri constitutional provision gives the judge power only to hold the term, and, in holding the term, to hold the whole term; that is to say, he may try the particular case and do the special act when he is holding the term, but cannot try the particular case or do the specific act when he is not holding the term, or as segregated from the holding of the term. The supreme court, in the case being reviewed, as a matter of course, held that, the judge not holding the term, he could not perform the partial and segregated act of a term,—to-wit, try one particular case. He might do the whole under the authority of the constitution, and, doing the whole, he may do all the parts. The whole includes the parts. But, not doing the whole, or called upon or assigned so to do, and exercising no power over the whole, he had no power over the part. If he were exercising the power over the whole, that power would go to the part; that is, the particular case. These are very elementary principles of logic. Applying the Missouri decision to our constitutional situation, the opinion of the majority of the court makes this argument: "A fortiori it must be said that the authority to call in another district judge 'to hold court' does not confer authority on the substituted judge to exercise powers and discharge duties not involved in holding court; that is, to exercise the powers of the resident judge of the district at chambers in vacation." The statement of this argument is in the nature of a begging of the question. The point at issue and to be proved is that the person "holding court" was the judge of the court, and as judge of the court had power to issue the injunction order under discussion. The argument of my learned brother assumes the non-existence of the ultimate fact to be arrived at, and from that assumption argues the conclusion which he has already assumed. But, granted that the authority to call in another judge to "hold court" does not itself confer upon that judge authority to do acts of which the act in controversy is one. But the exercise of that authority, the calling in of the foreign judge, the fait accompli of his "holding court," confers upon him the power to be, and make him, a judge of the court; and as judge of the court he has the powers of a judge, one of which was to issue the order, the subject of the controversy.

The cases of Klause v. State, 27 Wis. 463, Owens v. State, Id. 456, and American L. & T. Co. v. East & West Ry. Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 182, have been cited against the view I endeavor to express; but their inapplicability is too apparent to require discussion.

As a result of this review of the cases, and the reason of the matter as it addresses itself to my mind, I am of opinion that section 172, Code Civil Proc., cited above, must be construed to the effect that Judge GALBRAITH was a judge of the first judicial district court on June 21, 1890, and as such judge had jurisdiction to issue the order under discussion, unless said section 172 is inconsistent with the constitution of the state. Into that inquiry I will now proceed. Enough has been already said to open a short road to the conclusion which I hold.

The portions of the constitution applicable to this discussion are that part of section 11, art. 8, as follows: "Said courts, [the district courts] and the judges thereof shall have power, also, to issue, hear and determine, writs of man- damus, quo warranto, certiorari, prohibition, injunction and other original and remedial writs, and also all writs of habeas corpus on petition by, or on behalf of, any person held in actual custody in their respective districts." I take occasion to say that the punctuation in the above citation is correct, as it appears on the original constitution on file in the office of the secretary of state, which is not the case in the published copies, with which the printer, as is usual, has taken liberties to suit his own taste. I cite also section 12, art. 8: "The state shall be divided into judicial districts, in each of which there shall be elected by the electors thereof one judge of the district court, whose term of office shall be four years, * * * and until their successors are elected and qualified. Any judge of the district court may hold court for any other district judge, and shall do so when required by law."

It is not necessary here to determine whether the judge of the fifth district at chambers, when he is not holding court in the first district, has power to issue an order of injunction in a case pending in the first district court. As we have above seen, the judge of the fifth district was, in the case before us, holding court in the first district. Sections 11 and 12, supra, give the judge of a district court at chambers power at least to issue an order of injunction in a case brought in the court of which he is judge. Following this proposition, I find that the last paragraph of section 12 gives the judge of the fifth district court power to hold court in the first district, which he was doing when he granted the order.

Taking the next step in the argument, it is seen from the construction of similar constitutional and statutory provisions in other states, in cases above quoted from, when a judge of a district "holds a term," or "holds court," in a district other than his own, he is judge of the court of that district. I therefore conclude that on June 21, 1890, Judge GALBRAITH was a judge of the first judicial district court. Then apply to him the provisions of section 172, and he, as a judge of that district court, had power to issue the order which he did. It is not within my understanding to consent that section 172, Code Civil Proc., is inconsistent with the constitution in this particular. I believe that the law and the constitution are in harmony, and may stand together for the preservation of the writ of injunction.

My learned associate suggests that inconveniences and derangements of the judicial system would be greater under the application of the doctrine that I venture to hold than under that promulgated by the majority of the court. I am willing to go to the whole length of the cases reviewed and hold that Judge HUNT's judicial functions were temporarily suspended in the first district; and even then I am of opinion that the judicial system would be a more smoothly working machine if the substituted judge were a whole judge than it would were he a fractional part thereof.

Another objection that I have to the position of the majority of the court is that it suggests a doubt whether the difficulty is remediable without a constitutional amendment. The constitution says that a foreign judge may hold court for another. It further says that he shall do so when required by law; that is to say, he must do so when the legislature passes an act so requiring him. At present, he simply may hold court, perhaps as a courtesy to a brother judge. If the construction of the majority of this court of the words "holding court" is to obtain, then may the legislature, in addition to requiring a district judge to hold court for another, also extend the signification of the words "holding court" so that they shall include what the majority of this court now say they do not include? This is an interesting inquiry. It occurs to me that the present disagreement between my associates and myself in this case is the old difference in the doctrines of construction that has employed the thought of constitutional writers from the foundation of the American government, the history of which is luminously written through the reports of the supreme court of the United States. It is a rule of construction of the constitution of the United States, evolved through the broad views and comprehensive genius of America's greatest American, Chief Justice MARSHALL, that if the court will closely scrutinize the grant of a power to ascertain whether it exists, then, when it is determined that the power is granted, the court will liberally and broadly construe the means of carrying that power into effect. The power being found to exist, there must be with that power the habiliments wherewith to clothe it in perfect symmetry, and the weapons with which to arm it in invincibility. The constitution of the United States may be read in a half hour. A perusal of the literature of its construction is a life work. And that construction, triumphing over constant and vigilant enemies, has evolved the national doctrine that the power once granted to exist, there spring into being all the necessities of the life, health, and strength of the power. Any other doctrine would have left the constitution of the United States a shivering, unclothed foundling on the highway of time, instead of developing the robust, magnificent manhood which now holds its head above the nations of the earth. I do not for a moment lose sight of the fundamental distinction between the constitution of the United States and that of a state. I speak of the doctrine of the construction of the constitution of the United States simply as a forceful illustration of my view of the section of our constitution, (section 12, art. 8,) which is a section conferring power upon the district court judges. My learned associates take the most restricted view of the section. It is my opinion that the principles of our government demand a broader construction; that when we find in the district court judge the power to hold court, we should discover him clothed in the full panoply and attributes of a judge of the court, and that it should not be left to the circumstances of each instance to ascertain, perhaps from doubtful evidence, what were his particular functions at a particular time.

With these views forced upon my mind as they are, seriously impressed as I am that my opinion is in accord with the established doctrines of American government and republican institutions, I cannot refrain from expressing an earnest dissent from the conclusion of the court.

CRIMINAL LAW—NOTICE OF APPEAL.

No appeal in a criminal case can be perfected where the notice served upon the prosecuting attorney recites that defendant appeals from the "verdict." An appeal from a verdict is unknown to the criminal law.

At the May term, 1890, of the eighth judicial district court in and for Cascade county, the defendant was convicted of the crime of perjury. He comes to this court with an appeal, evidenced by the following papers, which are found in the transcript:

"To William M. Cockrill, clerk of the court in and for the county aforesaid: You are hereby notified that the defendant appeals to the supreme court of the state of Montana from the verdict and judgment rendered against him upon the indictment for perjury, May term, 1890, in the district court of Cascade county."

"I accept service of this notice. June 27, 1890. W. M. COCKRILL, Clerk District Court, Cascade County, Mont."

Also:

"To Douglas Martin, county attorney in and for county and state aforesaid: You are hereby notified that the defendant appeals to the supreme court of the state of Montana from the verdict rendered against him upon the indictment for perjury, May term, 1890, of the district court of Cascade county."

"Service of above notice hereby acknowledged, this 27th day June, 1890. DOUGLAS MARTIN, County Attorney."

The statute of this state in reference to criminal appeals is section 398, p. 477, Comp. Laws, as follows: "An appeal is taken by the service of a notice upon the clerk of the court where the judgment was entered, stating that the appellant appeals from the judgment. If taken by the defendant, a similar notice must be served upon the attorney prosecuting." The state now moves that the appeal be dismissed.

Henri J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for the State.

DE WITT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) "Appeals are matters of statutory regulation. There must be a substantial compliance with the statute in order to confer jurisdiction upon the appellate court. The appellant is charged with duty of perfecting his appeal in the manner provided by law, and error in this regard affects the jurisdiction of the appellate court." Territory v. Hanna, 5 Mont. 246, 5 Pac. Rep. 250. The defendant in the case at bar served his notice of appeal upon the clerk of the court. He served upon the attorney prosecuting a notice of appeal from the verdict, nothing more. An appeal from a verdict is unknown in the criminal law of this state, and such notice of appeal is a nullity. There does not appear any appeal, nor notice thereof to the attorney prosecuting, from the judgment, or any appealable order. We refer to Territory v. Hanna, above, and Territory v. Harris, 7 Mont. 384 and 429, 17 Pac. Rep. 557. The appeal is dismissed, but without prejudice to the taking of another appeal.

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—AMENDING TRANSCRIPT.

Where an appeal has been dismissed because the notice served upon the prosecuting attorney was of an appeal from the "verdict," and it is afterwards shown that the defect was due to a mistake in copying the transcript, such mistake cannot be amended in the appellate court, but the transcript may be withdrawn and corrected below.

Appeal from district court, Cascade county; CHARLES H. BENTON, Judge.

Henri J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case was dismissed, because the record did not show that there had been served on the attorney prosecuting any notice of appeal from the judgment, or an appealable order; the notice being of an appeal from the verdict. Ante, 288. Appellant moves for a reinstatement, and shows that the alleged notice of appeal contained in the transcript was an error of the compiler of the record. He now shows, by the affidavits of the attorney prosecuting, that a notice of appeal from the judgment was served as required by the statute. It is clear that a record of the district court cannot be amended or changed in this court, but steps may be taken by which this court may obtain the true record. It is therefore ordered that appellant have leave to withdraw the transcript from this court, and refile it, so that it may show the notice of appeal which was actually served upon the attorney prosecuting. Counsel should have known the condition of this record, and have suggested the error of the compiler before they submitted the case on the hearing. Their attention was called to the condition of affairs upon the motion to dismiss.

STATE v. GIBBS.

PERJURY—EVIDENCE—REASONABLE DOUBT—IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS.

1. Where, in order to avoid a continuance for the purpose of taking depositions, a party admits that the witnesses would testify to the facts desired to be proved by them, he may reserve the right to impeach their testimony.

2. On a trial for perjury committed while giving testimony in open court parol evidence as to what was then said by the witnesses is admissible.

3. On a trial for an offense, false testimony tending to prove an alibi is upon a material point, and will support a conviction for perjury.

4. Perjury may be proved by one witness, corroborated by circumstances proved at the trial, notwithstanding the declaration of Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 616, that "the direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact, except perjury and treason."

5. A charge that "by 'reasonable doubt' is meant 'actual, substantial doubt.'" It is that state of the case which, after a comparison and consideration of the evidence, leaves the mind of the jurors in that condition that they cannot feel an abiding conviction of the defendant's guilt, and are fully satisfied of the truth of the charge. It is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable, prudent, and considerate man, in the graver and more important affairs of life, to pause and hesitate before acting upon the truth of the matter charged,—"is not prejudicial, when connected with an instruction that the jury must acquit if they entertain 'any reasonable doubt upon any single fact or element necessary to constitute the crime.'"

6. Where counsel for the state, addressing the jury, said that the accused had threatened to assault him, but, upon objection, immediately withdrew the statement, "and was willing to admit that" it "was not a part of the evidence, and was not true," defendant was not prejudiced.

Appeal from district court, Cascade county; CHARLES H. BENTON, Judge.

Henry J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BLAKE, C. J. The grand jury of Cascade county in this state returned, January 24, 1890, an indictment charging the appellant with the commission of the crime of perjury. At that time he entered a plea of not guilty, and was tried by a jury in the following May term of the district court. The transcript has not been carefully prepared by the appellant, and we have been compelled to dismiss this appeal, and also reinstate the case for hearing. Ubi supra. While we cannot notice all the matters which have been urged in the brief of counsel, we will try to review the rulings of the court below which are properly before us.

It is alleged in the indictment that Frank Gray was tried August 26, 1889, in the justice's court of Cascade county before W. H. RACE, a justice of the peace, for the offense of maliciously and unlawfully shooting, August 22, 1889, "four domestic geese," the property of another; that Gibbs testified as a witness for said Gray that he was in the city of Great Falls during the afternoon of the last-named day and saw Gray at different places therein; and that the said Gray and Gibbs were together in a boat upon the Missouri river at the times specified. The testimony which was offered by the respondent upon the trial tended to prove that the crime that was charged against Gray was perpetrated in the afternoon of August 22, 1889, when Gray and Gibbs and two women were in a boat upon the Missouri river, about three miles above Great Falls. Some exhibits concerning the official character of RACE, the justice of the peace, and the complaint against Gray, and the record of the proceedings before the magistrate, were offered in evidence, but are not embodied in the transcript. These documents form the foundation of a number of alleged errors, and it was the duty of the appellant to have had them incorporated in the bill of exceptions. The censure, which appears in the brief of the appellant, relating to the stenographer, is undeserved. In the absence of this evidence, we cannot determine the validity of the objections that were made to their introduction. The appellant maintains that he was not allowed the time to prepare for his trial which is provided by the statute, as follows: "If the defendant, however, desire, he shall have two days after he makes his plea in which to prepare for trial." Comp. St. div. 3, § 275. The plea was entered January 24, 1890, and the trial commenced May 8, 1890; and the position is groundless.

The appellant filed, May 7, 1890, a motion for a continuance of the action, to enable him to procure the depositions of three persons. The following proceedings were then had, according to the transcript: "Thereupon counsel for the state announced to the court that they would admit that the witnesses named in said affidavit would testify to the facts therein stated if they were present, but reserved the right to impeach the testimony of said witnesses in case they deemed it advisable to do so, and thereupon the court overruled the motion." This action is controlled by the cases of Territory v. Perkins, 2 Mont. 467, and Territory v. Harding, 6 Mont. 323, 12 Pac. Rep. 750. We are asked by the counsel for the appellant to reconsider the interpretation of the statutes which govern the postponement of trials and have received the thoughtful scrutiny of the supreme court of the territory. No opinions to the contrary are cited, and no new argument is submitted upon this question. Upwards of 14 years have elapsed since the decision was made in Territory v. Perkins, supra, and the legislative assembly had the power to change the construction of this law if it had been deemed erroneous. But no legislation of this nature has been enacted. We therefore reaffirm the cases of Territory v. Perkins, supra, and Territory v. Harding, supra, upon this proposition.

It is contended that the court had no authority to prescribe the condition that the state should have the right to impeach the testimony of the witnesses who are referred to in the affidavit for the continuance. We do not so understand the ruling. The counsel for the state announced what they intended to do under certain circumstances, and the court did not assent thereto, and could not be bound thereby. But, if we take the same view as the appellant, we assert that the respondent declared correctly the law, which allows this privilege without any order of the court.

N. P. Loberg and Hattie Loberg testified in behalf of the state that they were present as witnesses at the trial of said Gray for the offense of shooting the aforesaid geese, before the said RACK, as justice of the peace of Cascade county. They also testified regarding the evidence which was then given by both Gray and Gibbs, as well as themselves. This testimony was admitted after the objections of the appellant that it was immaterial and incompetent had been overruled by the court. The language of the brief is that "parol evidence of what a witness said before an examining magistrate is inadmissible," and authorities are cited in support of the contention. The testimony in regard to the proceedings in the justice's court does not appear in the record, but the officer entered a final judgment in the action. There is no statute which requires the testimony of witnesses given under the conditions set forth in the transcript to be reduced to writing, and the ruling in this respect was correct. An examination of the issues shows that the evidence was material. In Wood v. People, 59 N. Y. 117, Mr. Justice ANDREWS, in the opinion, says: "It must appear, either from the facts set forth in an indictment for perjury that the matter sworn to and upon which the perjury is assigned was material, or it must be expressly averred that it was material, and the materiality must be proved on the trial, or there can be no conviction. A false oath upon an immaterial matter will not support a conviction for perjury." Says Prof. Greenleaf in his work on Evidence: "In proving what the prisoner orally testified, it is not necessary that it be proved ipsissimis verbis, nor that the witness took any note of his testimony; it being deemed sufficient to prove substantially what he said, and all that he said, on the point in hand." Vol. 3, (13th Ed.) § 194. See also, Com. v. Grant, 116 Mass. 17; 2 Bish. Crim. Proc. § 854. The effect of the evidence was to prove the circumstances attending the crime which has been charged against Gray, and the nature of his defense, an alibi. In this way the materiality of the testimony upon the trial of Gray is demonstrated.

It is argued that the following instruction is erroneous: "The matters necessary for the state to prove to the satisfaction of the jury, beyond a reasonable doubt, to authorize you to convict, are: * * * Seventh. That such act of perjury has been established to your satisfaction, beyond a reasonable doubt, by more than one witness, or that the testimony of such witness has been corroborated upon that point by other facts and circumstances proved on the trial. In other words, the direct evidence of one witness alone is not sufficient to convict of the crime of perjury, unless corroborated by other facts and circumstances proved on the trial." The appellant claims that the court ignored the following statute: "The direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact, except perjury and treason." Code Civil Proc. § 616. The instruction seems to be in accord with the modern authorities. In Com. v. Butland, 119 Mass. 317, Mr. Justice MORTON, as the organ of the court, said: "It is not necessary that there should be two living witnesses in contradiction of the statement of the defendant to justify a conviction of perjury. It is sufficient if, in addition to one directly opposing witness, corroborating circumstances sufficient to turn the scale, and overcome the oath of the defendant, and the legal presumption of his innocence, are proved. Com. v. Parker, 2 Cush. 212. And where the defendant's statement is contradicted by a witness who is supported by corroborating circumstances, the evidence must ordinarily be submitted, under proper instructions, to the jury, whose province it is to judge of the weight of such corroborating circumstances." See, also, 1 Greenl. Ev. (13th Ed.) § 257, and cases cited; U. S. v. Wood, 14 Pet. 430, (Lawy. Co-op. Pub. Co. Ed.) notes. A review of the testimony which is conflicting would not be instructive.

The appellant insists that the following instruction is erroneous: "By 'reasonable doubt' is meant 'actual, substantial doubt.' It is that state of the case, which, after a comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction of the defendant's guilt, and are fully satisfied of the truth of the charge. It is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable, prudent, and considerate man, in the graver and more important affairs of life, to pause and hesitate before acting upon the truth of the matter charged." This language should be considered in connection with the instruction which was previously given: "In this case the law raises no presumption against the prisoner, but every presumption of the law is in favor of his innocence, and, in order to convict him of the crime alleged in the indictment, every material fact necessary to constitute such crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt; and, if the jury entertain any reasonable doubt upon any single fact or element necessary to constitute the crime, it is your duty to give the prisoner the benefit of such doubt and acquit him." It is urged for the appellant that the instruction complained of is inconsistent with the rules which have been laid down in Territory v. McAndrews, 3 Mont. 158, and Territory v. Owings, Id. 137. We may remark at this stage our surprise that the learned judge of the court below should seek any other instructions upon this subject than these which have received the careful examination and approval of the supreme court of the territory. This is the most serious question which arises in the case at bar. It is needless to quote at length from the cases supra the law which has been held to be applicable. The appellant did not ask for any instruction upon this branch of the action. The definition of the term "reasonable doubt" which is embraced in the foregoing instruction has been upheld by the supreme court of the state of Illinois in many criminal cases. Miller v. People, 39 Ill. 457; Kennedy v. People, 40 Ill. 488; May v. People, 60 Ill. 119; Earl v. People, 73 Ill. 329; Connaghan v. People, 88 Ill. 460. In Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 614, may be found an instruction which embodies expressions like that under consideration, and Mr. Justice FIELD comments thereon, and refers to the case of Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1. It was there also said that "an instruction to the jury that they should be satisfied of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt had often been held sufficient, without further explanation. In many cases it may undoubtedly be sufficient. It is simple, and, as a rule to guide the jury, is as intelligible to them generally as any which could be stated, with respect to the conviction they should have of the defendant's guilt to justify a verdict against him. But in many instances, especially where the case is at all complicated, some explanation or illustration of the rule may aid in its full and just comprehension. * * * But an illustration like the one given in this case, by reference to the conviction upon which the jurors would act in the weighty and important concerns of life, would be likely to aid them to a right conclusion, when an attempted definition might fail." Without any further discussion, we conclude that the appellant has not been prejudiced by the instructions.

It is shown by the record that, during the argument of the cause to the jury, the counsel for the state asserted that said Gray had threatened to assault him. When the attorney for the appellant made an objection to this statement, the counsel for the state withdrew the same, "and was willing to admit that" it "was not a part of the evidence, and that it was not true." The appellant relies upon this conduct of the prosecuting attorney as a ground of error. The action of the officer was improper, but the obnoxious comment was promptly retracted. The courts view with a jealous eye every remark of this nature which is outside of the evidence, and will weigh its possible effect upon the rights of the accused with the jury. "The conduct of the argument," say the court, in Combs v. State, 75 Ind. 215, "is a matter much within the discretion of the trial court, and it is only where there is an abuse of discretion that appellate courts will interfere." Norton v. State, 106 Ind. 163, 6 N. E. Rep. 126; State v. Wilson, 90 N. C. 736; State v. Degonia, 69 Mo. 485. The reference to Gray by counsel would cease to operate upon an intelligent juror after the proceedings referred to had taken place. The interruption of the counsel for the state by the attorney for the appellant, and the immediate retraction of the offensive observation, would be firmly impressed upon his mind, and remove any prejudice which had been created thereby. We are satisfied that there is no error in the record, and it is therefore ordered that the judgment be affirmed, with costs, and that the same be carried into execution as originally entered in the court below.

HEIPLE et al. v. CLACKAMAS COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. Dec. 1, 1890.)

JURISDICTION OF COUNTY COURT—ALTERATION OF HIGHWAYS.

1. Under our statute the county court is granted original jurisdiction over the subject of county roads, and in a proper case the circuit court may, upon a writ of review, correct its errors.

2. The county court has the authority to lay out, alter, or vacate a road, and this includes the power to reduce the width of a road to less than 60 feet when the facts would justify it.

8. The term "alter" in such connection gives the right or power to extend or diminish so that the width is not beyond that established by the statute.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Clackamas county; FRANK J. TAYLOR, Judge.

C. D. & D. C. Latourette, for plaintiffs.

LORD, J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the court below dismissing a writ of review. The original proceeding was an application to the county court to alter or vacate a part of a county road. The facts, in substance, are these: Some two years ago the resident householders of the locality specified herein undertook to locate and establish a road 40 feet in width; that the road was laid out and established, but by some inadvertence the width of the road was not specified in the record, and by operation of law the road became a 60-foot road instead of a 40-foot, as the petitioners had intended; that the public travel to be accommodated by such road was limited, part of it being through woodland, and, in view of the amount of labor required to keep it in order, and the limited means to do it with, it was thought by those interested that a 40-foot road in width would be sufficient for the public use; that after the road was established, the mistake being discovered, the present application was made in due form to the county court to alter or vacate the road as laid out and established by vacating 10 feet on each side, so as to make the road of a uniform width of 40 feet. The county court dismissed the petition on the ground that it had no power or authority to act in the premises. Without further reference, the only question submitted for our determination is whether the county court is invested with the power or jurisdiction to grant the application and reduce the width of the road as prayed for. Our statute provides that "all county roads shall be under the supervision of the county court wherein the said road is located; and no county road shall be hereafter established, nor shall any such road be altered or vacated in any county in this state, except by authority of the county court of the proper county." Section 4061, Hill's Code. The succeeding section (4062) further provides that "all applications for laying out, altering, or locating county roads shall be by petition in the county court," etc.; and section 4063 provides that "when any petition shall be presented for the action of the county court for laying out, alteration, or vacation of any county road, it shall be accompanied by satisfactory proof that notice has been given * * * that application will be made to the said county court at their next session for laying out, altering, or vacating such road, as the case may be." By these sections original jurisdiction is granted to the county court over the subject of county roads, and in a proper case the circuit court upon a writ of review may correct its errors, but it has no concurrent jurisdiction over the subject. By force of these provisions it has the power and jurisdiction to lay out, alter, or vacate any county road, as the case may be, and, if so prayed for, establish a width less than 60 feet. Section 4070. According to the facts, the court refused to act upon the ground that it had no authority under the statute to grant the application.

The only question then to be determined is whether such power or jurisdiction exists in the county court. This must depend on the construction of the words "alter or vacate." "Alter" means to change or modify; to change in form without destroying identity. Where the power conferred upon a municipal corporation authorized it "to open, widen, or alter public wharves," and made provision for exercising this power, it was held that "a power to alter a wharf would seem to mean a power to extend or diminish it." Tucker v. Railroad Co., 54 Mo. 177. And where a like authority to alter a street or road was conferred upon a municipality, it was held in another case that that included the power to change the grade of the street. Waddell v. Mayor, etc., 8 Barb. 95. So in Ponder v. Shannon, 54 Ga. 188, it was held that the alteration of an old road involves the discontinuance of that part of it which is altered; that under a citation to alter a road it is competent to discontinue that part of the road which is rendered unnecessary by the alteration. Brook v. Horton, 10 Pac. Rep. 204. These decisions indicate the extent to which the word "alter" has been applied in the exercise of a like power, and that as applied to a wharf it conferred the power to extend or diminish it, or to a road, the discontinuance of that part of it which is disused by the alteration, and which as applied to the facts upon this record would authorize or empower the court to reduce the width of the road to 40 feet if in its judgment the public accommodation required it. It results then that we think within the purview of the statute the court has jurisdiction to act, and is not without statutory authority to grant the prayer of the petitioner. We only decide it has such power, but whether the alteration prayed for is or is not of common necessity and convenience is for that court to decide. It results that there was error, and the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded for such further proceedings as may be proper in the premises.

STATE ex rel. PATTY V. MCKEE.

SCHOOL MEETINGS—CHAIRMEN—SECRETARY—POWERS OF MEETING.

1. The words in section 2601, Hill's Code, "oldest in office of the directors present," mean the director who has served the longest time as such under an election, and such director has the authority and it is his duty to preside as chairman at all school meetings of his district.

2. If the clerk of a school-district fail or neglect to be present at a meeting of his district, and to act as secretary thereof, the meeting has power to appoint a secretary pro tem., and the announcement by the chairman that W. was appointed, who accepted the position and acts with the assent of the meeting, is to be regarded as the corporate act of the meeting.

3. If the clerk of a school-district fails to attend a meeting of his district, and to act as secretary thereof, such meeting has the incidental power to appoint any private person a secretary pro tem. for the purpose of making an entry of the business of such meeting, and such entries made by authority of the voters then present are evidence of the proceedings of the meeting.

Appeal from circuit court, Yamhill county; R. P. Boise, Judge.

This proceeding was instituted in the name of the state of Oregon ex rel. G. M. Patty against the defendant to try the right to the office of director in school-district No. 33 and 46, said district being on the line between Polk and Yamhill counties. The complaint alleges, in substance, that G. M. Patty, G. M. Allen, and A. Sheldon are the legally elected and qualified directors of school-districts Nos. 33 and 46, in Yamhill and Polk counties, in said state, to which said office of director said G. M. Patty was duly elected and qualified on the 3d day of March A. D. 1890; that the defendant J. McKee unlawfully usurped and intruded himself into the said office of director of said district to which the said G. M. Patty was elected and qualified, and to which he was entitled, on the 3d day of March, 1890, and has ever since said date continued to usurp and hold said office, and exercise the functions thereof; that the said J. McKee claims to have been elected to said office at a pretended meeting of said district alleged to have been held on the 3d day of March, 1890, but that the proceedings of said pretended meeting were void. The complaint sets out fully the proceedings of the school meeting at which the relator was elected and of the pretended meeting at which the defendant claimed to have been elected, but such allegations need not be repeated here. The answer denies all the material allegations of the complaint, and further alleges that on the 3d day of March, 1890, the defendant was duly elected director of said district, and now is duly elected, qualified, and acting director of said district. The further and separate answer was denied by the reply. The cause came on for hearing before the court, without the intervention of a jury, and after hearing the facts the court found the following conclusion of facts: (1) That on the 3d day of March, 1890, a school meeting was called in district No. 33 and 46 Yamhill and Polk counties, the same being a district situated partly in each county. (2) That G. M. Allen was a director of said district who had held said office for two years. (3) That J. P. Beeler was a director of said district, who had held said office for less than one year, and had been appointed to fill a vacancy in said office caused by the removal of S. T. Munkers from said district, who was, at the time of his removal, a director of said district, whose term of office would have been three years on said 3d day of March, 1890. (4) That at said meeting a controversy arose as to whether said Allen or said Beeler was the legal chairman and entitled to preside at said meeting. (5) That said Allen called said meeting to order, and asked Fred. S. Smith, the then clerk of said district, to read the minutes of the last meeting, but said Smith refused to recognize said Allen as the proper chairman of said meeting, and refused to act as clerk thereof. That thereupon said Allen appointed J. F. Wisecarver to act as clerk of said meeting. That said Wisecarver assumed the duties of clerk, and the meeting then proceeded to elect a director, and G. M. Patty; the relator, was declared elected director. That said election was by a ballot, and the votes were collected by tellers appointed by said Allen, and that said Patty received 20 votes, all the votes cast. (6) While these proceedings were in progress said Beeler, claiming that he was the director entitled to preside at said meeting, called the same to order, and said Smith, the clerk of said district, recognized him as the legal chairman of said meeting; also a part of the voters present at said meeting so recognized said Beeler as chairman, and proceeded to elect a director of said district, and J. McKee, the defendant herein, was declared duly elected as such director, he receiving 17 votes, all the votes cast. (7) The two factions were in the same school-house, and acted separately, each recognizing its chairman. And from the facts so found the court found the following conclusions of law: That G. M. Allen was the oldest director and entitled to act as chairman of said meeting; (2) that said Allen had no authority to appoint J. F. Wisecarver clerk of said district or said meeting; (3) that all the proceedings at said meeting by both factions were illegal and void.

G. G. Bingham, Dist. Atty., and James McCain, for appellant. N. L. Butler, John J. Daly, and W. D. Fenton, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The main question presented by this record is this: Was G. M. Allen or J. P. Beeler the oldest in office of the directors present at the school meeting mentioned, and therefore had the right to act as chairman of the meeting. The meaning of the language employed in the act must determine the question. The section is as follows: "Sec. 2601. The oldest in office of the directors present shall act as chairman of all meetings; and, in case neither of the directors is present, the qualified voters present shall elect a chairman." The findings show when Mr. Beeler became a director, which is subsequent in time to Allen's accession to office. In other words, it appears from the record that Allen was older in office than Beeler, and, unless the force of this fact is broken in some way, the question is resolved in appellant's favor. Counsel concede this in effect, unless the law means the term for which the director is serving; but this construction is too strained and theoretical. The law was enacted for plain practical people, to be applied to their own affairs in the government of the school-districts in the state, and the plainest and most obvious import of the words used is to be preferred. When the law says "the oldest in office," it means the director who has held office for the longest time under an election. The object of this requirement no doubt was that there might be some one in the chair who would be acquainted with business affairs of the district, and able to assist in giving to the transactions of the meeting such intelligent direction and assistance as the wants of the district might require. It results from this construction that Allen was the oldest in office of the directors present, and therefore had the authority, as it was his duty, to preside as chairman at that particular meeting.

2. But counsel for the respondent insist that, though Allen may be the director who was authorized to act as chairman of the meeting, still the meeting was illegal for the reason that the regular clerk of the district, whose duty it was to act as secretary of that meeting, declined to do so, but did act as secretary at another meeting over which Mr. Beeler presided. The fifth finding of fact shows that, when Allen called the meeting to order, he requested Fred. S. Smith, the then clerk of said district, to read the minutes of the last meeting. This Smith refused to do, and recognize Allen as the proper chairman of said meeting. That thereupon said Allen appointed J. F. Wisecarver to act as clerk of said meeting. This action, it is claimed by the respondent, rendered the proceeding of said meeting void from the beginning, and the court below seems to have been of the same opinion, because it found as a conclusion of law that neither meeting was legal. In construing the school law, its object must never be lost sight of. The territory of the state is divided into school-districts, which are public corporations having the same dignity in law as the largest and richest municipal corporations in the state, and the government is confided to the residents therein who are qualified electors under the school law. The object of these corporations is in furtherance of the public policy of the state, to build up and maintain within its borders a system of common schools, whereby all the children of the state may enjoy some reasonable educational advantages. No greater or more sacred trust could have been assumed by the state, and it employs these public corporations as instruments to carry this trust into effect. Viewing the school law in this light, we would not like to hold, if it can be avoided, that either the mistake or caprice of one man could destroy, arrest, or nullify the proceedings which the law requires to be taken at a school meeting. If a school clerk may exercise the sovereign power of withholding his recognition in such case, and thereby destroy the legality of a meeting which would otherwise be legal and proper, he may arrest the proceedings of his district for an indefinite time, and, as long as he remains in office, paralyze the corporate powers of his district, and thus defeat the purposes of the law. But no such power can be claimed for him. On the contrary, if he fails or refuses to discharge his duties, other instrumentalities may be employed. The requirements of the statute in relation to who shall be secretary of the meeting are directory merely, and not mandatory. Higgins v. Reed, 8 Iowa, 298; Burgess v. Pue, 2 Gill, 254; Bank v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat, 69. And section 293, Dill. Mun.

Corp., says: "Corporations have the incidental power, if the regular clerk is temporarily absent, to appoint a private person a clerk pro tem. for the purpose of making the entries of what is transacted at the corporate meeting. His entries made by the direction of the corporate authorities, or entries made by the regular clerk from memoranda furnished by the clerk pro tem., are competent evidence of the proceedings of the meeting." Hutchinson v. Pratt, 11 Vt. 402. But counsel claim that if the meeting when lawfully convened may appoint a secretary pro tem., the chairman has no such power. This is a highly technical objection, and cannot prevail. When the chairman announced the appointment in the presence of the meeting, and the secretary served, without a single objection from any one, the act of the chairman became the act of the meeting. It follows from what has been said that the second and third findings of law by the court were erroneous, as well as the judgment, and must be reversed; but, as no error intervened during the trial up to the findings of law by the court, it is unnecessary to order a new trial, as final judgment may be entered here on the findings of fact. Our conclusions of law are indicated in this opinion. Let judgment of ouster be entered against the defendant, and a further judgment in favor of the relator admitting him into the office of school director named in the pleading.

PEOPLE ex rel. GORMAN v. HAVIRD.

QUO WARRANTO—TITLE TO OFFICE—JURY TRIAL.

1. An action under Act Jan. 30, 1885, to try title to an office to which there are several claimants, is one of legal and not of equitable cognizance. The issues in such action or proceeding are legal ones, and the trial of such issues by a jury is a constitutional right of the parties.

2. That part of section 536 (said act) providing that actions of this nature "shall be tried by the judge of the district court at chambers, and without the intervention of a jury," is held unconstitutional and void.

Proceedings in the nature of quo warranto.

George Ainslie, for appellant. Houston & Gray, for respondent.

BERRY, J. This action is under an act of the territorial legislature of Idaho, passed January 30, 1885, being sections 534-542, inclusive, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and its purpose is to try the title of the respondent to the office of sheriff of Boise county. It has the usual provisions for obtaining jurisdiction of the parties, the formation of issues by pleading, the trial of the issues, and the rendition of judgment, with the further privilege of appeal to this court. The proceeding is called by the act an "action," and it is so treated by both parties, and it must be so considered for the purposes of this appeal. Its purpose, however, is to attain the end reached by a writ of quo warranto at common law, or a writ of right for the king, against him who improperly claimed or usurped an office. Such a writ is not suited to our form of government, and in America it has fallen into disuse, and statutory proceedings in the nature of a writ of quo warranto have, in most of the states, if not all, taken its place. Those statutes vary in the extent of the remedy which they furnish; some, as in Alabama, (St. Ala. Feb. 3, 1840, § 4,) make of the court a mere inquisition to ascertain the regularity of the election. These have been held not to confer judicial power upon the court, as in a suit at common law; hence, that exercise of the right to hear and decide is rather in the character of supervisor of elections, and does not require the intervention of a jury. In other states this statutory proceeding has approximated more nearly in its scope to the writ of quo warranto; still retaining the criminal form of that writ, but using it as a civil remedy only. In our own territory our legislature has gone much further, and includes within its act the full scope of an information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto, including its criminal features and power to punish. Such information in the nature of a writ of quo warranto was properly a criminal method of prosecution, as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of the franchise as to oust him, or seize the office for the crown. Paine, Elect. 710. This law not only provides for supervision of elections, and the correction of errors, but it goes further, and places in the court unmistakable judicial powers. Section 541 provides "that when a defendant, against whom such action has been brought, is adjudged guilty of usurping or intruding into, or unlawfully holding, any office, franchise, or privilege, judgment must be rendered that the defendant be excluded from the office, franchise, or privilege, and that he pay the costs of the action. The court or the judge may also, in its or his discretion, impose upon the defendant a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars." Here are questions not merely as to regularity of an election, but also as to personal guilt or innocence, followed by pecuniary consequences of no small moment. It aims not only at a civil remedy, but also at a criminal trial, personal punishment, and pecuniary fine and loss. The act of willful intrusion into a public office, to which one has not been elected, is declared to be a misdemeanor. Rev. St. Idaho, § 6388.

The section of the act in question, under which the district judge, at chambers, assumed jurisdiction, and tried this case, is section 536, Act 1885, providing, among other things: "And such action shall be heard and determined by the judge of the district court at chambers, and without the intervention of a jury, after due service of the summons, and the expiration of time allowed by law for answering the complaint in a civil action; but no judgment shall be rendered in such action by default." This is an essential provision of the act, and without which the other provisions are inoperative. If this is unconstitutional, as the respondent claims, the remedy under the act fails. This objection was taken by the respondent before the answer was filed. His exceptions to the ruling were then and there settled by the judge, and are incorporated as a part of the statement of the case on appeal. The respondent still stands upon such objection and exceptions in this court. It is true that the court, upon the hearing, found for the defendant, and that the defendant does not appeal. Yet it is not easy to see, if the objection was valid when it was taken, how his failure to appeal from a finding in his favor, where he has all along, and on the appeal, insisted on his objection, should be construed as a waiver of his exception. If, indeed, in any case, it might be so waived, it cannot be so in this case; for the objection goes to the jurisdiction of the court, to the validity of the statute, and not merely to an irregularity. That is not subject to such waiver. If that part of the act is void, the objection may be made at any time, even on appeal. The grounds on which it is urged that this provision is unconstitutional are (1) that it denies the right of trial by jury; (2) that it creates a tribunal unknown and unauthorized by the laws. Section 1868 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended April 7, 1874, prescribing and limiting the powers of territorial legislatures, provides that "no party shall be deprived of the right of trial by jury in cases cognizable by the common law." Again, (Const. U. S. art. 3, § 2,) "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury." Again, (Id. art. 5, Amendments,) "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." And again, (Id. Amend. 7,) "in suit at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved." There seems to have been a disposition in some states, under their own constitutions, to evade these provisions, whether of the United States or state constitutions, or such of them as clearly affect this case. Some courts have gone so far as to deny squarely that proceedings of this nature are of legal, instead of equitable, cognizance. A Missouri case (State v. Lupton, 64 Mo. 415) so holds. But this case is met by the New York court of appeals in People v. Railroad Co., 57 N. Y. 161, in which case the court holds that an action in the nature of a quo warranto, brought by the attorney general, in the name of the people of the state, to try the title to a corporate office, to which there are several claimants, is one of legal and not equitable cognizance; that the issues therein are strictly legal ones; and that the trial of such by a jury is the constitutional right of the parties. The constitutional guaranty of the right of trial by jury in that state goes no further than the provisions of the federal constitution and the act of congress cited, § 1868, as amended, and made especially to apply to our territorial legislature. Nor can the territorial legislature pass any law in contravention of the constitution or the laws of the United States. Rev. St. U. S. § 1851. In other cases, as in the state of Illinois, the statute itself only confers a supervisory power over the regularity of the election, and does not at all apply to much of the ground covered by the statute of Idaho. A Louisiana court, in Joseph v. Bidwell, 28 La. Ann. 382, holds that the federal constitution in that respect can have no application to the state courts. Perhaps, as Louisiana is a sovereign state, that claim may be sustained. Other cases cited by the appellant hold the same. But we are not called upon to discuss that question. Idaho is not a state, but is a territory of the United States, and in all things subject to the constitution of the United States and the laws of congress. Section 1868 of the United States Revised Statutes, as amended, seems to meet this case, and is conclusive. Even were this otherwise, and the question arose under the common law, which is adopted in this territory, (Rev. St. § 18,) the weight of authority is in favor of the construction given by the New York court of appeals in the case in that state above cited, but arising under the state constitution. See, also, Reynolds v. State, 61 Ind. 392; People v. Van Slyck, 4 Cow. 297; People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 103. But it is contended by the appellant that, if the issues here are triable by jury, and the objection was or is properly taken, and for that reason the judgment should be reversed, still a new trial should be granted. The answer to this may be that the proceedings in the court below were under the act in question, and, if wrong, it is because that part of the act on which they are based is invalid, and no valid judgment could be had; that, while the action in its present form cannot proceed, amendment changing its nature and purpose is not authorized by law. We are not called on to decide that point. There is no intimation of a purpose to amend or change the proceeding in any way, even if allowable. The term of office of the defendant expired in January, 1889, and we see no purpose which could now be reached by any proceeding of this nature. All that part of section 536 of the act entitled "An act to amend chapter 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure, being sections 534 to 542 inclusive," approved January 30, 1885, beginning at the words "and such action," in the fourth line thereof, to and including the words "in a civil action," in the eighth line thereof, must be declared unconstitutional and void, and the judgment herein must be reversed.

STATE v. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 1,332.)

(Supreme Court of Nevada. Dec. 13, 1890.)

SCHOOL TAXES—ORGANIZATION OF SCHOOL-DISTRICT—ESTOPPEL.

Where a school-district has been in existence for many years, and during that time has continued to receive money out of the county school fund, and has had several special taxes levied and collected for its benefit, a person on whose property such a tax is levied is precluded from attacking the legality of the organization of the district.

Appeal from district court, Lander county; A. L. FITZGERALD, Judge.

Baker & Wines, for appellant. The Attorney General, W. D. Jones, Dist. Atty., and Henry Mayenbaum, for the State.

BELKNAP, C. J. In an action for the recovery of delinquent taxes, judgment was rendered against defendant for the sum of $24,209.73 for taxes and penalties, together with the district attorney's fees, and costs of suit. Included in the judgment is the sum of $1,106.98, with penalties, the amount of a special school tax levied upon the property of the defendant in the Argenta school-district. One of the objections is that this school-district was not organized in conformity with the provisions of the statutes of the state relating to the formation of school-districts, and that the levy of the school tax was therefore illegal. It was shown that the district had been in existence since the year 1871; that, from that time down to the time of trial, it had received from the school fund of the county, for its support, moneys aggregating the sum of $24,372.90; that three special taxes had been levied and collected for its benefit, and apparently no question of the legality of its organization had ever been made. Upon these facts, defendant is precluded from attacking the legality of the organization of the district. In support of this conclusion we rely upon the principles announced in the case of Stuart v. School-Dist., 30 Mich. 69. In that case, complainants resisted the enforcement of a school-district tax for the reason now urged by defendant. The district had exercised the powers and privileges of a school-district for 13 years, with the acquiescence of the public. The court said: "Whether this particular objection would have been worthy of serious consideration had it been made sooner, we must, after this lapse of time, wholly decline to consider. This district existed de facto, and we suppose de jure also, for we are not informed to the contrary, when the legislation of 1859 was had, and from that time to the present it has assumed to possess and exercise all the franchises which are now brought in question, and there has since been a steady concurrence of action on the part of its people in the election of officers, in the levy of large taxes, and in the employment of teachers for the support of a high school. The state had acquiesced in this assumption of authority, and it has never, so far as we are advised, been questioned by any one until, after thirteen years' user, three individual tax-payers, out of some thousands, in a suit instituted on their own behalf, and to which the public authorities give no countenance, come forward in this collateral manner, and ask us to annul the franchises. To require a municipal corporation, after so long an acquiescence, to defend, in a merely private suit, the irregularity, not only of its own action, but even of the legislation that permitted such action to be had, could not be justified by the principles of law, much less by those of public policy. We may justly take cognizance in these cases of the notorious fact that municipal action is often exceedingly informal and irregular, when, after all, no wrong or illegality has been intended, and the real purpose of the law has been had in view and been accomplished, so that it may be said the spirit of the law has been kept, while the letter has been disregarded. We may also find in the statutes many instances of careless legislation, under which municipalities have acted for many years, until important interests have sprung up, which might be crippled or destroyed if then, for the first time, matters of form in legislative action were suffered to be questioned. If every municipality must be subject to be called into court at any time to defend its original organization and its franchises at the will of any dissatisfied citizen who may feel disposed to question them, and subject to dissolution, or to be crippled in authority and powers if defects appear, however complete and formal may have been the recognition of its rights and privileges, on the part alike of the state and its citizens, it may very justly be said that few of our municipalities can be entirely certain of the ground they stand upon, and that any single person, however honestly inclined, if disposed to be litigious or overtechnical and precise, may have it in his power in many cases to cause infinite trouble, embarrassment, and mischief." Pages 72, 73.

The other objection arises out of an alleged overvaluation, and therefore fraudulent valuation, of defendant's railroad in Lander county. The line of railroad was assessed at $14,000 per mile. The board of equalization reduced the assessment to $12,000. Defendant introduced evidence tending to show that a similar line of road could be constructed in Lander county at a cost not exceeding $9,000 per mile. It is contended that the assessment should not exceed this figure, and that the valuation should be reached by considering the road as an isolated piece of property situated in Lander county, without reference to its connections at either end. The statute, however, requires assessors to estimate the value of railroads with reference to their position, connections and use, and "as an integral part of a complete, continuous, and operated line of railroad, and not as so much land covered by the right of way merely, nor as so many miles of track consisting of iron rails, ties, and couplings." St. 1875, p. 106. Tested by this rule, there is no evidence tending to show an overvaluation of the railroad. The judgment and order of the district court are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of Nevada. Dec. 13, 1890.)

DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION—FEE IN ALLEY.

Where the owner of an alley and adjoining lots conveys part of them, describing them as fronting on a certain street, and "with a depth of 85 feet to an alley fifteen feet in width," the deed carries title to the middle of the alley, with an easement of way over the other half, the grantor having a like easement over the half conveyed.

Appeal from district court, Washoe county; R. R. BIGELOW, Judge.

BELKNAP, C. J. This is an action to abate the obstruction of plaintiff's easement in an alley. Defendant was the owner of the land upon which the alley is located, and of the adjoining land, and made a deed of conveyance to plaintiff's grantor, describing the premises as follows: "The east 85 feet of lots 4, 5, and 6 in block two in Lake's south addition to said town of Reno, county of Washoe, state of Nevada, as known and designated in the map of said Lake's south addition made from a survey by A. J. Hatch in 1872, each of the lots hereby conveyed fronting fifty feet on the west line of Center street, with a depth of 85 feet to an alley fifteen feet in width."

The only question in the case is as to the construction of this language. The case of Lewis v. Beattie, 105 Mass. 410, will serve to show the construction applied by the courts to similar language in conveyances. There the deed described the land conveyed as running to and bounding on a way 40 feet wide. The grantors were the owners of the fee covered by the way. The court said: "Standing by itself, this deed would carry the title to the middle of the strip described as a way, with an easement of way over the other half, and subject to a like easement reserved to the grantors over the half conveyed, as well as to whatever rights of way existed in others at the time." Another principle equally well established and conclusive arises out of the doctrine of estoppel. It is thus stated in Howe v. Alger: "A grantor of land describing the same by a boundary on a street or way, if he be the owner of such adjacent land, is estopped from setting up any claim or doing any acts inconsistent with the grantee's use of the street or way; and such estoppel will apply to his heirs, or those claiming under him." 4 Allen, 211. Judgment affirmed.

ATTACHMENT—DISCHARGE—AFFIDAVIT—ORAL TESTIMONY.

1. The affidavit stated as grounds for an attachment that defendant was about to convert his property into money with intent to place it beyond reach of his creditors, and that he was about to assign and dispose of his property with intent to delay and defraud his creditors. Defendant's motion to discharge the attachment was supported by affidavit denying that he "was about to convert his property into money for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors, or that he was about to assign and dispose of his property with intent to delay and defraud his creditors." Held, that these denials are not sufficient to put in issue the allegations of the affidavit for attachment.

2. Under Laws Wash. T. 1885-86, p. 45, § 32, where defendant has made his motion to discharge an attachment on affidavit, he cannot depart from that mode of proof and support the motion by oral testimony.

Appeal from superior court, Pierce county; FRANK ALLYN, Judge.

Town & Likens, for appellants. A. A. Knight, for appellee.

ANDERS, C. J. This action was brought by appellants against appellee to recover a balance alleged to be due on account of goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by the former to the latter. An affidavit and bond were duly filed, and a writ of attachment was issued on the following statutory grounds, set forth in the affidavit: "That the defendant is about to convert his property into money for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors; that said defendant is about to assign, secrete, and dispose of his property with intent to delay and defraud his creditors." The defendant applied to the court to discharge the attachment, for the alleged reason that the same was improperly issued, and, in support of his motion, filed his own affidavit which contains this allegation: "And says he is not about to convert his property into money for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors, neither is he about to assign, secrete, and dispose of his property with intent to delay and defraud his creditors, as alleged in said affidavit of J. B. Hanson." In addition to the above affidavit, the defendant was permitted, over plaintiff's objection, to introduce oral testimony on the hearing of the motion. Having heard the testimony of the witnesses produced on both sides, the court made an order discharging the attachment, whereupon plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial. The motion was overruled and exception duly taken. From the order discharging the attachment, the plaintiff appeals to this court.

Counsel for appellants claim that the truth of the allegations of the affidavit for attachment was not controverted or put in issue by the motion or affidavit of defendant, and that the attachment should therefore have been sustained. In this we think counsel are correct. The denials of the traversing affidavit should be as direct and positive as if the affidavit were an answer to a complaint in an ordinary action, and must be tested by the same rules of pleading. To allege that the defendant is not about to assign, secrete, and dispose of his property with intent to delay and defraud his creditors is, in effect, to admit that he is about to do any one of the acts mentioned, but not all of them conjointly. Such a denial raised no issue, and the attachment should have been sustained on the grounds set forth in that portion of plaintiff's affidavit thus attempted to be traversed. We are of the opinion that no oral testimony should have been admitted on the part of defendant, for the reason that there was no issue to be tried, and for the further reason that defendant, having made his motion to discharge upon affidavit, had no right to depart from that mode of proof. We do not think our statute contemplates that the defendant in attachment may support his motion to discharge both by affidavits and oral testimony. Laws 1885-86, p. 45, § 32. When the motion is made upon affidavits, the hearing should be had upon affidavits and counter-affidavits. And such is the usual practice. But it would seem that the above is not the only course open to the defendant. Should he not desire to use affidavits on the hearing, we see no reason why he may not set forth specifically in his notice and motion the facts showing wherein the attachment was improperly issued, and prove the same by the testimony of witnesses before the court.<sup>1</sup> The plaintiff would then be at liberty to support his original affidavit in like manner. The order of the court below discharging the attachment is reversed, and the attachment proceedings, remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

WENTWORTH.

(Supreme Court of Washington. Dec. 19, 1890.)
TRIAL.

1. In a notice of a claim of lien for work and materials furnished a corporation, whose name is the "Installment Building & Loan Company," under a contract made with the corporation itself, it is an immaterial variance that the defendant is styled the "Installment Building & Loan Association."

2. As the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien is a proceeding cognizable in a court of equity, the mere fact that defendant in such suit interposes a counter-claim for damages, as he is allowed to do by the laws of Washington, is not sufficient to divest such court of its jurisdiction, and to entitle defendant to demand a trial by jury.

HOYT, J. Plaintiff sought to foreclose a lien for material furnished and labor done for defendant in the construction of a dwelling-house on the land of the defendant. Defendant, in its answer, among other things, set up a claim for damages for breach of the contract by the plaintiff. In the notice of claim of lien the defendant corporation was described as "Installment Building & Loan Association," whereas, in fact, its true name was "Installment Building & Loan Company." The notice of claim of lien is attacked on the ground of this variance between it and the pleadings and proofs. We do not think that the variance was material. The corporation itself was making the improvement, and could not have been misled by the slight error in stating its name. The case might be different if the property of the corporation was sought to be charged for an improvement for which it had not contracted.

The defendant demanded a trial by jury upon the issues raised by its answer and the reply thereto. This was refused by the court, and its action in so doing is relied upon as cause of reversal. That the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien is properly cognizable in a court of equity is not denied, but it is contended that as the defendant had a right under our statute to interpose a legal defense, all rights incident to such legal defense, and the issues made thereon, went with it, including that of a trial by jury. With this contention we cannot agree. A court of equity, having once obtained jurisdiction of the cause, will retain it until final determination. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 181, 183; Rathbone v. Warren, 10 Johns. 587; Martin v. Tidwell.

36 Ga. 332. The circumstance that in the progress of the cause an issue of fact was made that would ordinarily be triable by a jury cannot change this rule. It is true, as claimed by the appellant, that a plaintiff cannot, by joining a legal with an equitable cause of action, deprive a defendant of his right to a jury trial; but that does not aid the appellant in his contention. On the contrary, from like reasoning, it would seem to follow that a defendant, by voluntarily bringing a law question into the case, could not prevent a plaintiff from having his equitable cause proceed to a determination according to the rules applicable to such cases. Defendant in the case at bar could have maintained a separate action for its alleged damages; and if, instead of doing so, it saw fit to plead them in a cause in equity, it could not thereby change the rule of procedure applicable to such cause.

The transcript presents other questions that might be material and worthy of consideration on this appeal, but as they do not go to the jurisdiction of the court, and have not been raised or argued by counsel, we do not feel called upon to discuss them. The judgment and decree of the superior court must be affirmed, and it will be so ordered.

McCARTY v. STATE.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—RETROACTIVE LAWS—INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

1. One charged with a larceny in Washington Territory prior to its admission as a state is entitled under the constitution of the United States to a presentment by a grand jury, and cannot be prosecuted by information under the authority of the constitution of Washington and the act of January 29, 1890, in pursuance thereof, since the substitution of prosecution by information for that by indictment was not a mere change of procedure, but affected a substantial right, which could not be taken away by retroactive legislation.

2. An information for the stealing of "93 railroad passenger tickets of the aggregate value of $120, * * * a more particular description of which * * * is unknown," does not state facts sufficient to constitute the crime of larceny. The separate value of the tickets should be stated so as to enable the degree of the crime to be determined in case a less number of tickets were taken, and should show that they were stamped, dated, and signed, as otherwise they would be worthless, and not the subject of larceny.

Appeal from superior court, Pierce county.

Town & Likens, for appellant. W. H. Snell, Pros. Atty., Charles Bedford, and C. E. Claypool, for the State.

DUNBAR, J. This is a proceeding by information, on a charge of grand larceny for the stealing of 93 alleged railroad passenger tickets. The information alleged that "the said J. C. McCarty, on the 15th day of October, eighteen eighty-nine, at the county of Pierce, and state of Washington, and within three years prior to the filing of this information, ninety-three railroad passenger tickets, of the aggregate gate value of one hundred and twenty dollars, of the chattels and property of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, a company organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York, and doing business in the state of Washington, under and by virtue of the laws of the said state of Washington, a more particular description of which said railroad passenger tickets is to the said prosecuting attorney unknown, feloniously did steal, take, and carry away, contrary to the form of the statute," etc. To this information the defendant interposed a demurrer that "the information did not state facts sufficient to constitute any offense, and that there was no authority for proceeding by information." This crime is alleged to have been committed on the 15th day of October, 1889. Article 1, § 25, of the constitution of the state of Washington provides for proceedings by information. The act of the legislature authorizing proceedings by information was passed January 29, 1890. The constitution, by act of congress as well as by its own terms, did not become operative until the president's proclamation, which was not made until November 11, 1889, so that the date of the alleged commission of the crime antedates not only the enactment of legislature, but also the vivifying of the constitution by the presidential proclamation. The defendant would have been entitled to the United States constitutional guaranty of presentment by a grand jury on the 15th day of October, 1889. Having the right at that time, it could not be taken from him by any retroactive enactment of the state, even had it been the intention of the legislature to make the act retroactive in its operations. When a statute requiring an indictment is repealed, an information will not lie for an offense committed before the repeal. People v. Tisdale, 57 Cal. 104; Bish. St. Crimes, § 194. As tersely stated by Mr. Bishop: "The rule for the construction of penal statutes is that they are to reach no further than their words,—no person can be made subject to them by implication; and all doubts concerning their interpretation are to preponderate in favor of the accused." The effect of the adoption of the constitution, and admission into the union of states under that constitution, and the legislative enactment of January 29, 1890, was to repeal the law which guaranteed prosecution for criminal offenses exclusively by indictment. The right to be presented by a grand jury is not a mere change in the proceedings of the court, which does not affect the substantial rights of the accused, and to which he cannot object. It is a constitutional guaranty which rests upon a basis more secure than acts of the legislature which relate to mere matters of procedure. We do not think the defendant can be held to answer this charge, unless on presentment of a grand jury.

We are also of the opinion that the information failed to state facts sufficient to constitute the crime of larceny. It is not sufficient to charge the taking of "ninety-three railroad tickets," of an aggregate value. Especially is this true when the degree of crime, and the degree of punishment, are determined by the value of the property stolen. In this instance if the proof should show that only a portion of the number of tickets alleged to have been stolen were actually stolen, it would be impossible for the court or jury to determine what degree of larceny the defendant was guilty of. The value of each ticket should have been alleged, and the information should have shown that they were genuine effective railroad tickets, as an unstamped, undated, and unsigned railroad ticket is not the subject of larceny. 1 Whart. Crim. Law, § 879; People v. Loomis, 4 Denio, 380. Without these qualifications the so-called railroad tickets had no more value than the intrinsic value of the paper on which they are printed, with the cost of preparing them. As this information did not charge the value of the paper, it could not be proven. It follows that the judgment must be reversed, and the case remanded to the lower court, with instructions to sustain the demurrer, and it is so ordered.

ANDERS, C. J., and HOYT, STILES, and SCOTT, JJ., concur.

ON REHEARING.

DUNBAR, J. The petition for rehearing in this case is not allowed; but the court desires to say that, in view of the public importance of some of the questions raised, and in view of the fact that the case was submitted without oral argument on the part of the state, in cases arising hereafter it will not be bound by the opinion rendered in this case on the constitutional questions involved.

ZIEGLER et al. v. COLE.

APPEAL—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

A judgment by a trial judge which is neither unsupported by the testimony nor manifestly against its weight will not be disturbed on appeal.

Commissioners' decision. Error to superior court of Denver.

Patterson & Thomas, for plaintiffs in error. Joseph N. Baxter, for defendant in error.

BISSELL, C. This is an action in trover brought by George W. Cole against Ziegler Bros. and William Brandon, to recover the value of certain property, consisting of sleds and a threshing machine, which Cole averred they had wrongfully seized and converted. The answer contained a denial of the various allegations of the complaint, and an affirmative defense in justification of the seizure. This defense contained all the requisite allegations to show a recovery of judgment by Ziegler Bros. against William Cole, and the issuance of process upon the judgment, under which Brandon, the officer, seized the property in dispute as the property of the defendant in the execution. There was no controversy concerning the regularity and sufficiency of the proceedings under the judgment; the only dispute being that which grew out of the evidence concerning the title of the plaintiff, and his brother William. The case was tried to the court without a jury, and, upon these issues, the court found that the title to the threshing and horse-power was in the plaintiff, George W. Cole, at the time of the levy of the writ, and gave a judgment in his favor for the value thereof, which was found to be $100. As to the balance of the property seized, the court held that the plaintiff could not recover because he had failed to show any such title and possession as warranted a judgment in his favor. Evidence was given which tended to show that the title to the threshing and power had been in the plaintiff for some years, and that for a large portion of that time it had been in his possession, having been sent to William, just prior to the levy, simply for the purposes of sale. As to the other property, there was evidence showing that originally it was the property of William, but had been transferred by him to George, in liquidation of an antecedent debt; and, likewise, that the transfer was unaccompanied by such a change of possession as would make the sale effectual as against creditors. The reversal of the case is insisted upon on the ground that the judgment is against the weight of the testimony, and that the court erred in rendering judgment thereon against the plaintiff in error. Other errors are assigned, but this is the only one on which counsel rely. The judgment cannot be reversed upon this ground. The judgment of the court below upon the subject-matter of the controversy finds ample support in the testimony which is contained in the record. The judgment is neither unsupported by the testimony, nor is it manifestly against its weight; on the contrary on the record, as it stands, the judgment of this court would be in harmony with the findings of the judge who tried the case. Under these circumstances, according to the rules which this court has established, and which are held to govern in such cases, it is impossible to disturb the judgment. Kinney v. Wood, 10 Colo. 270, 15 Pac. Rep. 402; Green v. Taney, 7 Colo. 278, 3 Pac. Rep. 423. The judgment should be affirmed.

UNION PAC. RY. CO. v. GIBSON.

GARNISHMENT—EVIDENCE OF INDEBTEDNESS.

In garnishee proceedings to collect from a railroad company money claimed to be due from it to an employee, it appeared that the company was running a quarry in a remote place; that it had established a boarding-house and store for its employees, the company being answerable for their bills, and deducting them from their wages; that at the time of the garnishment the debtor had worked for the company 15 days, and that his bill for board and supplies exceeded the amount which he had earned. Held, that the creditor had failed to show affirmatively, as required by law, that the company was indebted, and that a judgment in his favor would be set aside.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Larimer county court.

Teller & Oranhood, for appellant. John C. Hanna and George W. Bailey, for appellee.

BISSELL, C. This was a proceeding in garnishment, instituted by Bailey, as a judgment creditor of Gibson, to collect from the railway company the money claimed to be due from it to Gibson. In the county court, from which, by appeal, the case comes here, judgment was rendered against the railway company for $30, and costs. Under the law which determines and limits the liability of garnishees, the judgment against the company cannot be maintained. According to the settled rule governing such cases, the liability of the garnishee must be made affirmatively to appear in order to justify a judgment against him. Richards v. Stephenson, 99 Mass. 311; Drake, Attachm. § 452 et seq. The obligation to establish that liability by proof is with the creditor who seeks to obtain the judgment. It is immaterial as to the precise method by which the liability is established. It may appear from the answer of the garnishee, or it may be established by collateral proof, where issue is taken on the denials of the answer. In either event, the duty is precisely the same, and always exists. In this case it did not appear from the answer of the garnishee that it was indebted to Gibson. On the contrary, the answer denied all indebtedness. The only testimony which was introduced to overcome this denial came out of the cross-examination of the agent of the company, who answered as to the indebtedness claimed to exist in favor of Gibson. By agreement of the parties, the answer was taken orally. Upon the direct testimony, the witness answered nondebit. On cross-examination, however, it transpired that the garnishee was engaged in running a quarry at Stout, in Larimer county, which was a place remote from any town, and without other inhabitants than those in the immediate employ of the railroad company. There the company had established a boarding-house, and placed a man in charge. The same person kept a store, and furnished supplies to the men employed. The arrangement under which Clinton ran the place substantially provided that he should board the men at a fixed rate per week, and furnish them with whatever they wanted, and the company would be answerable for the bills thus contracted. From month to month, as the men worked, they were paid their wages, less the board and store bills contracted with Clinton, who was paid directly by the company. Gibson, the debtor, had been in the employ of the company for a couple of years, and this course had been pursued with him ever since his original employment. There was no direct testimony as to the making of a contract with Gibson, but this is of little consequence in the determination of the rights of the parties. In the absence of proof showing the contrary, the contract will be presumed to be in accordance with this usage and habit. It likewise appeared that at the time of the service of the process of garnishment, Gibson had worked the preceding 15 days, and that the amount of his board, and the bills contracted with Clinton, exceeded the amount which he had earned during that period. There was no evidence whatever to show that Gibson worked beyond that time, nor that the company was in any wise indebted to him, unless he was entitled to his wages, notwithstanding his indebtedness to the store-keeper. The denial of indebtedness contained in the answer was not overcome by proof that the wages earned during the 15 days of labor remained unpaid, nor by a showing that the debts contracted with Clinton remained unliquidated, or that the company's liability thereon had been released or discharged. In the absence of satisfactory proof upon these questions, it cannot be said that the attaching creditor has complied with the law in showing affirmatively that the person garnished is indebted. Whatever the presumption may be, it will not uphold the judgment, which must rest upon sufficient proof. In any event, the arrangement between the company, its employe, and the store-keeper is an ample response, under the facts as proven, to the claim made against them. It was entirely competent for the parties interested to make an arrangement of this description, and when made it would be binding upon them. It was clearly established by the testimony that the charges for what was furnished to the men were made directly against the company, with the knowledge and presumed assent of the employes. The material having been furnished and accepted, there was an ample, executed consideration to uphold the original agreement, and render it enforceable as against the persons directly concerned. These considerations make it apparent that Gibson himself could not have maintained a suit against the company for the wages which the creditor is seeking to reach by this process. Proof of indebtedness to the store-keeper equaling the amount of his claim, followed by evidence establishing a contract with the company, binding upon him, which would be operative as an equitable assignment of his rights in favor of his creditor, would constitute a perfect defense to any action which he might commence against the company. Doyle v. Gray, 110 Mass. 206; Taylor v. Railroad Co., 5 Iowa, 115. Since the creditor recovers, if at all, by virtue of the right existing in the debtor to establish and maintain the enforced obligation, it necessarily follows that, if the debtor is barred from recovery, the creditor is without right in the premises. The judgment should be reversed.

RICHMOND and REED, CC., concur.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE, to Use of TRITCH, v. CRAMER et al.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—LIABILITY OF SHERIFF—NEGLECT.

1. Under Gen. St. Colo. § 2166, providing that all actions against sheriffs upon any liability for the omission of any official duty, except for escapes, shall be brought within one year "after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not after that period," a cause of action against a sheriff for negligence in levying an attachment accrues when the alleged consequential injury was suffered, and not when the alleged non-feasance occurred.

2. The complaint in an action against a sheriff for negligence in levying an attachment alleged that the attachment was placed in the sheriff's hands with instructions to levy at once on certain real estate of the debtor; that the sheriff negligently failed to make such levy, until after several judgments had been obtained against the debtor; that executions were issued on these judgments, and levied upon said real estate, which was sold and bid in by the judgment creditors; and that it was necessary for plaintiff to buy the certificates of purchase issued to the judgment creditors, which he did for their face value. Held, that it stated a cause of action.

Error to district court, Arapahoe county.

The complaint averred, among other matters, the following: "That in June, 1886, Tritch commenced his action upon a promissory note against the Bailey Reduction Company to recover the sum of $18,461.27; that at the same time a writ of attachment was at his instance duly issued and placed in the hands of defendant Cramer, the sheriff, for levy; that the sheriff was instructed to attach thereunder all the estate of the company within the county of Arapahoe; that on the same day, or the next, by direction of Tritch, a description of certain specified real estate of the company, which was then wholly unincumbered, was procured from the office of the clerk and recorder and placed in the hands of the sheriff with instructions to levy the attachment thereon at once; that the company possessed no other realty; that the sheriff negligently failed to make said levy upon the real estate mentioned, or upon anything else save some personal property, until the month of September following, at which time, Tritch having procured his judgment, his execution and attachment were together levied upon the premises referred to; that in the mean time, on the 3d day of August, thirty-four days after the attachment had been placed in the sheriff's hands, certain other judgments, aggregating the sum of $7,491, were obtained against the defendant company by one Atterbury and others, and transcripts thereof were at once recorded in pursuance of the statute; that these judgments therefore created prior, and hence superior, liens upon the land in question; that in December, 1886, the property having been duly advertised was sold under Tritch's execution, and purchased by him for the sum of $18,000; that this amount was more than its real value, but was bid by Tritch in order to secure the payment of his entire judgment through the anticipated redemption by other creditors; that on the 7th of February, 1887, executions under the judgments of Atterbury et al. were levied upon the property, and it was sold, being purchased by the judgment creditors, for the amount of their claims with interest; that in September, 1887, Tritch received his sheriff's deed in accordance with his certificate of purchase, and thus became the sole owner of the premises clear of all incumbrances, except the liens created by the said judgments of August 3d, and sales thereunder; and that "it was necessary for Tritch to purchase and acquire the certificates of purchase issued by the coroner to the other said judgment creditors, which he did on the said 2d of September, at and for the face value thereof, to-wit, $7,865.55." The action is against the sheriff and his bondsmen, upon his official bond, to recover the amount which Tritch was required to pay through the negligence, as it is alleged, of this official in failing to levy the writ of attachment until after liens had been acquired by other creditors as aforesaid. To the complaint, a demurrer was duly interposed, upon two grounds: First, the failure to plead a cause of action; and, second, a bar by the statute of limitations. This demurrer was sustained, and final judgment rendered dismissing the action. To review that judgment, the present writ of error was sued out.

HELM, J., (after stating the facts as above.) Both parties agree that the court below sustained the demurrer in this case upon the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. This is the sole question argued by counsel for plaintiff in error, and the principal subject discussed by opposing counsel. Its determination rests upon a construction of the following statute: "All actions against sheriffs and coroners, upon any liability incurred by them, by the doing of any act in their official capacity, or by the omission of any official duty, except for escapes, shall be brought within one year after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not after that period." Section 2166, Gen. St. The precise force and effect to be given this statute is, as we shall presently see, a question of no little difficulty. The provision is evidently framed in the interest of the officers mentioned, and their official bondsmen. Its purpose is to prevent annoyance and injustice through the prosecution against them of stale demands predicated upon official neglect or other misconduct. This purpose is eminently wise; but, in our judgment, the statute should, if possible, be so construed as that, while the persons designated are fairly protected, litigants may not be made thereby to suffer grievous and remediless wrong. Our determination of the present controversy obviously depends upon the view we shall adopt as to the precise point of time when Tritch's cause of action accrued. Was it when the alleged official non-feasance occurred, or was it when the consequential injury complained of had followed? When a contract, express or implied, is violated, actual injury is in law an immediate sequence, and suit may at once be instituted. The damages may be much or little, but the cause of action is complete. If the precise extent of the injury be not immediately apparent, it may nevertheless be approximately computed. So also a tort, if of such a nature as that assumpsit might have been maintained at common law, gives rise to an immediate cause of action, for such torts are always at least quasi ex contractu; as, for instance, where an attorney, by gross negligence or intentional misconduct, violates his implied promise to diligently and faithfully attend to his client's business, and the latter suffers loss. To this class of cases belong that of Wilcox v. Executors of Plummer, 4 Pet. 172, and several others relied on by counsel for defendant in error. See, also, Ang. Lim., (6th Ed.) 123. In all torts, likewise, which constitute a trespass upon person or property, there is at once actual damage of which the law takes notice; for example, an assault upon plaintiff's person, or a physical invasion of his freehold. In such cases, a complete right of action springs into existence upon the commission of the trespass. Where, however, persons are charged by law with certain functions or duties which are primarily of a public nature, though, incidentally, in a special manner affecting private individuals, the doctrine above announced is not always adhered to. Contrariety of judicial opinion appears in the decisions, but the better view, we think, is that in such cases no contractual relation, express or implied, exists between the party thus charged and the individual for whom he incidentally acts. The violation of the duty is undoubtedly unlawful; and, as has been well said, "when its consequences are the invasion of an individual right, (and then only,) it becomes a proper subject of redress by him," (the individual.) We quote further from the same opinion: "The duties imposed upon public officers are analogous to those of moral obligation. Their violation is not necessarily a legal injury to those in whose favor they exist. They must affect some right such as the law is wont to redress before they can be made the subject of a suit. It is the duty of a municipal corporation to keep certain highways free from obstruction. The duty is to the public for the benefit of every individual in the community. If an obstruction is negligently permitted to exist, it may be said that, in a sense, a duty to each individual is violated. But it is not competent for every inhabitant of the vicinage thereupon to bring his action for the breach of duty to himself; not even if he is put to some trivial inconvenience by the obstruction. * * * The mere violation of the public duty, although the duty is to him indirectly, involves no correlative legal right on his part to sue for such violation. It is said familiarly that rights and duties are reciprocal. This is, in a moral sense, and in a properly understood legal sense, true. But it is evident from the illustration just employed that there is no such legal reciprocity between the general duties of public officers and the rights of parties in whose behalf the duties are to be performed, that the right is always actionable when the duty is violated. * * * A suitor's right is not then a right to literal forms of procedure, but to enforce his judgment, and collect his debt by law. Until this right is injured, no right is injured. Until the officer fails to bring the property of the debtor within the power of the law's final process, founded upon a creditor's valid judgment, he has been guilty of no violation of duty in a legal view. So that, if we suppose a direct relation between the plaintiff and the officer, — a legal reciprocity of right and duty between them, — and concede that damages are to be presumed where the former is invaded or the latter violated, it is clear that neither of these incidents occurs until something more than a neglect to attach, or an incorrect return, is imputable to the officer." Bank v. Waterman, 26 Conn. 324. "When the action is founded upon a neglect of official duty, the gist of the action is the injury suffered; and no action can be maintained but one in form, as well as in substance, founded on that injury, unless it be otherwise provided by statute. The relation between an officer and the person for whom he performs an official act is not that arising out of a contract, express or implied." Dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice SHEPLEY in Betts v. Norris, 21 Me. 324. It is hardly necessary to say that the sheriff belongs to the class of public servants last above designated. He is elected by the people, and occupies his office during a term specified by statute. His functions and fees are prescribed by law, and do not depend upon contract with the persons whom he incidentally serves. He is a public officer, and his duties are primarily of a public nature. In the discharge of these duties, he sometimes acts for private suitors, whose right, as above defined, is the judicial collection of their debts, or enforcement of such other legal redress as the law may authorize. If the negligence or misconduct of the officer in no way prevents or retards the vindication of this right, no legal injury results, and, in our judgment, no right of action accrues; as, for instance, — to employ a couple of familiar illustrations, — the sheriff negligently fails to serve a subpoena placed in his hands, but the witness voluntarily, and without any further effort of the suitor, appears at the appointed time and place, and gives the desired testimony, or the official carelessly omits to levy a writ of attachment as directed, but the judgment ultimately recovered is nevertheless promptly paid. Were we to hold that in these and all similar instances a right of action exists in favor of the suitor, and therefore that he may recover from the sheriff or his bondsmen at least nominal damages, the responsibilities of that official would be rendered more onerous, and his position more hazardous, than it is already. Every suitor who could truthfully complain of negligence on the part of the officer, though he be in no wise injured, might harass the official with a judicial proceeding, and mulct him in costs, besides his attorney's fees. We do not think the law contemplates or requires the imposition of this burden, and shall hold accordingly. The majority opinion in Betts v. Norris, supra, has been carefully studied and weighed. It is probably as able a presentation of the subject as can be made upon the side of the question espoused; but, with all due respect to the learned court pronouncing it, we feel that the contrary view taken by Mr. Justice SHEPLEY in his dissenting opinion, and by the majority of the court in Bank v. Waterman, supra, is predicated upon sounder logic, and in harmony with higher considerations of justice. We make no attempt to argue the question at length. For thorough and exhaustive discussion of it, counsel are referred to the opinion just mentioned. Tritch brought the present suit within a year from the time he suffered the alleged consequential injury; and it follows from the foregoing conclusion that the objection predicated upon the bar of the statute of limitations must be overruled.

As to the remaining ground of demurrer but little need be said. Counsel for defendant in error relies, in his printed argument, upon the proposition that Tritch's redemption from the sale under the prior judgments was entirely voluntary, and that therefore he cannot recover in this action. The averments of the complaint are, for present purposes, admitted by the demurrer to be true, and these averments, in our judgment, make a prima facie case in this regard. Under the circumstances, it appears to have been legally necessary for Tritch to exercise his right of redemption before a sheriff's deed to Atterbury et al. undermined his levy and sale, and rendered it impossible for him to realize any portion of his debt from the land in question. Counsel being silent, we express no opinion as to the legal effect of Tritch's bid of $18,000 for the property, knowing that it was subject to liens aggregating nearly $8,000. A portion of his claim remained, in any event, unsatisfied. Upon no view presented in this court can the ruling on the demurrer be sustained.

ANNIS v. WILSON.

DEED—CONVEYANCE TO INFANT DAUGHTER—RESULTING TRUST—EVIDENCE.

1. A father conveyed land to his infant daughter, her heirs and assigns forever, by deed reciting that the same was to be held in trust by her grandfather until she became of age. Held, that title vested directly in the daughter upon delivery of the deed for record.

2. The grantor could not prove by parol that he intended a resulting trust to himself in case of his daughter dying before attaining her majority.

3. A father can by deed direct make a legal conveyance to an infant child.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Weld county.

Appellant brought suit against appellee, who had formerly been his wife, and was the mother of his infant child, and who was afterwards divorced and remarried, and complained as follows: "(1) That on or about the 21st day of July, A. D. 1881, and long prior thereto, plaintiff was the owner in fee-simple of the following real property, situated in the county of Weld, and state of Colorado, to-wit: Lot eleven of the north-east quarter of the south-east quarter of section eight, township five north, of range sixty-five west, containing, according to the subdivisions of lands made by the Union Colony of Colorado, five acres; also, lot two in block seventy-two in the town of Greeley, according to the original plat of said town. (2) That on or about the 21st day of July, 1881, in the county of Arapahoe, in the state of Colorado, in consideration of love and affection, and without any valuable consideration whatever, plaintiff made, signed, sealed, and duly acknowledged and delivered to one Eli Annis, his father, his certain deed, in words and figures as follows: 'This deed made this first day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one, between E. B. Annis, of the county of Arapahoe, and state of Colorado, of the first part, and Erma E. Annis, of the county of Arapahoe, and state of Colorado, of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of one thousand dollars, to the said party of the first part in hand paid by the said party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby confessed and acknowledged, has granted, bargained, sold, and conveyed, and by these presents does grant, bargain, sell, convey, and confirm unto the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns forever, all the following described lots, parcels of land, situated, lying, and being in the county of Weld, and state of Colorado, to-wit: Lot eleven (11) of N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section eight, (8,) township five (5) north, range sixty-five (65) west, according to the town plat of the town of Greeley; also lot No. two (2) in block No. seventy-two (72) of the town of Greeley, in said county and state, according to the original plat of said town of Greeley, (the above-described property to be held in trust by Eli Annis, of the county of Weld, state of Colorado, until the said Erma E. Annis becomes of age; the said Eli Annis to have full control and use of said property by paying taxes and other expenses attending;) together with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof; and all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, and demand whatsoever of the said party of the first part, either in law or equity; of, in, and to the above-bargained premises, with the hereditaments and appurtenances. To have and to hold the said premises above bargained and described, with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns forever. And the said party of the first part, for his heirs, executors, administrators, does covenant, grant, bargain, and agree to and with the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns, that at the time of the enrolling and delivery of these presents he is well seised of the premises above conveyed, as of good, sure, perfect, absolute, and indefeasible estate of inheritance, in law, in fee-simple, and has good right, full power, and lawful authority to grant, bargain, sell, and convey the same, in manner and form aforesaid, and that the same are free and clear from all former and other grants, bargains, sales, liens, taxes, assessments, and incumbrances of whatever kind or nature soever; and the above bargained premises, in the quiet and peaceable possession of the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns, against all and every person or persons lawfully claiming or to claim the whole or any part thereof, the said party of the first part shall and will warrant and forever defend. In witness whereof the said party of the first part has hereunto set his hand and seal the day and year above written. [Signed] E. B. ANNIS. For which deed an ordinary printed blank form was used, and the clause therein following the description of the premises, and relative to the interest of said Eli Annis, was written. And said deed was by the said Eli Annis, on the 25th day of July, 1881, filed for record in the office of the county clerk and recorder of Weld county, and duly recorded in said office in book 31, at page 274 of the records therein. That since said time, until the execution and delivery to plaintiff of the deed hereinafter mentioned, the said Eli Annis was in possession of the real property above described, has paid taxes thereon, and enjoyed the rents and profits thereof. (3) That the said Erma E. Annis mentioned in said deed was the infant child of plaintiff, of the age of about seven years at the time of the execution of said deed. That plaintiff executed and delivered to the said Eli Annis as aforesaid, for the sole purpose of providing his said daughter Erma E. Annis with some property in case she should arrive at the age of eighteen, this said deed, and intended by said deed that the said Eli Annis should hold the title to said real estate for the purpose of conveying the same to the said Erma E. Annis, in case she should arrive at the age of eighteen years, and in case she should not live to that age that he should reconvey the same to plaintiff. (4) That on the 18th day of January, 1886, the said Erma E. Annis departed this life at the age of eleven years, intestate, and leaving this plaintiff, her father, her sole heir at law. That on or about the 14th day of May, 1886, the defendant, Mary E. Wilson, who is the mother of said child, duly received letters of administration upon the estate of said Erma E. Annis from the county court in and for the county of Weld, sitting for probate business. That claims amounting in the aggregate to eleven hundred dollars, or thereabouts, have been by the county court of Weld county, sitting for probate business, allowed against the estate of the said Erma E. Annis. That the said estate of Erma E. Annis has no property, real or personal. (5) That the said Mary E. Wilson, as such administratrix, claims that, by the terms and provisions of the deed hereinbefore set forth, the said Erma E. Annis at the time of her decease was seized in fee of the real property before mentioned, and that the said real property is subject to the payment of the debts allowed by said court against the estate of said Erma E. Annis, deceased; and said administratrix threatens and intends to proceed, pursuant to the statutes, by the filing of a petition in the county court in and for Weld county, to have said lands sold for the purpose of paying such claims so allowed against the estate of the said Erma E. Annis, deceased. (6) That on the 25th day of October, 1886, the said Eli Annis made, signed, sealed, executed, and delivered to plaintiff his certain quitclaim deed, wherein and whereby he conveyed to plaintiff the said real property, for good and sufficient consideration to the said Eli Annis, and in pursuance of the intent of plaintiff in executing and delivering to said Eli Annis the deed before mentioned; and that since the delivery of said deed plaintiff has been in possession of said real property as owner thereof, and is now, by virtue of said deed, the owner in fee-simple of said real property. Wherefore plaintiff prays it may be adjudged and decreed by this honorable court (1) that plaintiff is the owner in fee-simple of the real property hereinbefore described; (2) that said claim of the defendant, as administratrix of the estate of Erma E. Annis, deceased, is without foundation or merit; (3) that the said defendant, as said administratrix, shall be restrained and enjoined from any proceeding to subject the said real property to the payment of the debts of the said Erma E. Annis, deceased, and from, in any manner, interfering with plaintiff's title therein; (4) and for costs of this action. HAYNES, DUNNING & ANNIS, Attorneys for Plaintiff." A demurrer was filed to the complaint, the grounds stated being—First, that it was ambiguous and uncertain; second, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and judgment entered dismissing the complaint. From such judgment this appeal was taken. The errors assigned are—First, that the district court erred in sustaining the demurrer of defendant to the complaint; second, the district court erred in dismissing the action, and entering the final decree in favor of defendant.

E. F. Dunning, H. N. Haynes, and F. J. Annis, for appellant. Jas. W. McCreery, for appellee.

REED, C., (after stating the facts as above.) It is alleged in the complaint "that plaintiff executed and delivered to said Eli Annis as aforesaid, for the sole purpose of providing his said daughter Erma E. Annis with some property in case she should arrive at the age of eighteen, this said deed, and intended by said deed that the said Eli Annis should hold the title to said real estate for the purpose of conveying the same to the said Erma E. Annis, in case she should arrive at the age of eighteen years, and in case she should not live to that age that he should reconvey the same to plaintiff." Such may have been appellant's intention. If it was, his intention evidently was defeated by the execution and delivery of the deed. By the deed in question, the title did not, as supposed, pass to Eli Annis in trust, but passed by the conveyance directly to the child, and the title vested by the execution and delivery of the deed for record. There is no question of execution and delivery. The execution is alleged in the complaint, and also that the deed was delivered to Eli Annis for the purpose of having it recorded. In determining the sufficiency of the complaint, the first inquiry would seem to be whether a father can, by deed direct, make a legal conveyance to an infant child so as to vest the title without creating a trust or the intervention of a trustee. That such a conveyance can be so made is well settled by numerous authorities: Co. Litt., 2b, 3b. In 3 Washb. Real Prop., (4th Ed.) 267, it is said: "The capacity to take as grantee is much less restricted than that required to make a grant. Persons non compotes mentis, married women, infants, corporations, and bodiless politic may take as grantees." See, also, Bank v. Bellis, 10 Cush. 278; Masterson v. Cheek, 23 Ill. 75.

The conveyance to the infant is full, clear, and unequivocal. The intention of the grantor to divest himself of all interest in the property is manifest. There was no reservation, no language from which a resulting trust for his own benefit could be inferred in the event of the death of either the infant or Eli Annis. The child took the full and complete legal title, the grandfather took no title. What he took under the deed was the beneficial use of the property for the payment of taxes until the child should be 18 years old. The allegation in the complaint is directly contradictory of the plain legal effect of the deed. In order to recover under the complaint plaintiff would have to annul and abrogate his deliberate act in making the conveyance, and having the same placed of record, on the allegation that he did not intend to do what he deliberately did do. Deeds absolute on their face, and of record for years, cannot be overthrown on the allegation of the grantor, in a suit to recover the property, that he did not intend to do what he unquestionably did do. There are many cases in the books where the grantor has been allowed to show by parol his intention in reserving a resulting trust to himself, but an examination of them will show that, in every instance, parol evidence was limited to the inquiry of the completion of the conveyance by the delivery or record of the deed to render it operative as a conveyance, and the grantor has been allowed to show non-delivery of the deed, or an intention to retain its possession to defeat its operation; but I can find no case where the grantor was allowed to assert by parol an intention prior to or at the time of the conveyance contradicting his intentions as expressed in the deed and abrogating it. Several cases have arisen where the father purchased and paid for land, and took the title in the name of the children, and the question was whether there was a resulting trust to the father, or whether it was an advancement to the children, and the grantor was made to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that it was intended as a trust and not intended as an advancement. But where the father having the title in himself conveys directly to a child, no case can be found where he was allowed by parol to show that he intended a resulting trust to himself. In Souverbye v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. 240, Chancellor KENT said: "A voluntary settlement, fairly made, is always binding in equity upon the grantor, unless there be clear and decisive proof that he never parted nor intended to part with the possession of the deed; and even if he retains it the weight of authority is decidedly in favor of its validity, unless there be other circumstances besides the mere fact of his retaining it to show that it was not intended to be absolute." In Cecil v. Beaver, 28 Iowa, 246, DILLON, C. J., said: "Where the deed to a child is absolute in form and beneficial in effect, and the grantor and father voluntarily causes the same to be recorded, this is in law a sufficient delivery to the infant, and the title to the lands conveyed will pass thereby." See, also, Robinson v. Gould, 26 Iowa, 92; Mitchell v. Ryan, 3 Ohio St. 377; Masterson v. Cheek, 23 Ill. 72. In Rivard v. Walker, 39 Ill. 413, the grantor conveyed his property to his infant children to prevent its being squandered by the wife, and delivered the deed without reservation for record. Afterwards, the wife procured a divorce, and the grantor filed a bill praying that the deed might be set aside, and alleging that he had never delivered it. The court held that, in the case of infant children, a filing for record was a delivery, and denied the relief asked, and said: "By directing the deed to be recorded, and by its record, he gave to the public the most solemn assurances in his power that he had transferred his title to his children, and he cannot be permitted to resume it at pleasure, because he may have afterwards been inclined to regret the act."

It follows that, under the allegations contained in the complaint, the court could not grant the relief asked in this case,—viz., that it be adjudged and decreed "that plaintiff is the owner in fee-simple of the real property hereinbefore described; second, that the said claim of the defendant, as administratrix of the estate of Erma E. Annis, deceased, is without foundation or merit; third, that the said defendant, as said administratrix, be restrained and enjoined from any proceeding to subject the said real property to the payment of the debts of the said Erma E. Annis, deceased, and from in any way interfering with plaintiff's title therein." It is apparent that the relief sought in the premises is predicated upon the theory that the plaintiff, by the operation of a resulting trust and the death of the child, is reinvested with the title to the property. That, in my view of the case, not being the fact, and the legal title having passed upon the death of the child to her heirs, it is unnecessary to consider what, if any, relief plaintiff might be entitled to in a proper case, growing out of the fact of the reconveyance to him by quitclaim deed of whatever beneficial interest or use Eli Annis had by virtue of the former conveyance. What interest he took, if any, by such conveyance, I do not attempt to determine. That he did not take the legal title in fee is clear; hence, the complaint proceeding entirely upon that supposition, the demurrer was properly sustained. Without being understood as deciding that plaintiff is not entitled to some relief in the premises on proper proceedings, as heir of the child or grantee of Eli Annis, I am of the opinion that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

HUGHES v. SPRUANCE.

EVIDENCE—DECLARATION.

S. went surety on a bail-bond for T., and took as security a certificate of deposit for $1,400 belonging to T., and then in the hands of H., his attorney. In settlement of proceedings upon the bond, S. paid $1,134, leaving in his hands $266, which he turned over to H., taking his note for the amount to cover possible liability in certain garnishment proceedings which were subsequently disposed of. In an action on the note, it was admitted that S. made no personal claim to the money, and a witness for defendant testified that T. and H. came to him and arranged that if he would go security for T., the latter would leave a certificate of deposit as security, and that if any money was left in his hands it was to be paid over to H. for his services. Held, that the testimony was improperly stricken out on the ground that S. was not present during the conversation.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Clear Creek county.

W. T. Hughes and L. C. Rockwell, for appellant. Morrison & Fillins, for appellee.

RICHMOND, C. In this action plaintiff sought to recover the sum of $266, evidenced by the following promissory note: "$266. January 27, 1881. On demand, we promise to pay to the order of William Spruance and Hutchinson $266, without interest. W. T. HUGHES." Defendant answers denying that there was anything due to either Spruance or Hutchinson, and alleges that Hutchinson had no interest in said note, and never had. That the real owner and holder was and is William Spruance. That the mention of Hutchinson's name in the note was an inadvertent act. That on the 21st of February, 1879, one Trevarrow was under arrest, and ordered to give recognizance bonds. That Spruance became the surety on two bonds of the above character in the penal sum of $500 each. That, in consideration of Spruance becoming such surety, there was deposited with Spruance a certificate of deposit, of the value of $1,400, with the understanding that Spruance was to save himself harmless as such surety, and after a full discharge of the obligation arising under the bonds, if there remained any part of the proceeds of the said $1,400, such balance was to be paid to appellant, who was acting as attorney for said Trevarrow in said proceedings. That Spruance has been relieved and fully discharged from any and all obligation arising out of his said suretyship, and that out of the sum of $1,400 he paid on both of said bonds the aggregate sum of $1,134, leaving a balance in his hands of $266. Spruance turned over to Hughes this sum of $266, taking the note sued on to cover any possible liability in certain garnishee proceedings. That the garnishee proceedings were dismissed and Spruance discharged. That Trevarrow was indebted to Hughes for professional services rendered in the various proceedings; and that this balance was due to Hughes and to be applied in payment of his claim for professional services, and that he is entitled to hold the sum of $266, and appellee herein, plaintiff below, is not entitled to recover on the note. The facts as we gather them from the record are, in detail, as follows: Trevarrow was charged with criminal offenses, and was required to furnish bail. Spruance on the night of February 21, 1879, became surety on these bonds, taking as his security a certificate of deposit belonging to Trevarrow, then in the hands of Hughes. Thereafter Spruance returned the certificate of deposit to Hughes. Some time afterwards, when is not positively stated in the record, Spruance received from Hughes and Strousse the certificate of deposit, Trevarrow forfeited his bail, and proceedings were instituted upon the bonds, and in settlement out of the $1,400 Spruance paid $1,134 principal, interest, and costs, leaving in his hands $266 to be accounted for. Hughes claimed the balance, but Spruance being garnished by attaching creditors, Spruance allowed Hughes, pending the garnishment proceedings, to take the $266, giving him his, Hughes', note. The garnishment proceedings being disposed of, nothing further passed between Hughes and Spruance until the institution of this suit on the note, nearly five years after the date thereof, to-wit, July 16, 1886. Verdict of the jury against appellant for the amount sued for. Motion for a new trial was overruled, and judgment entered, to reverse which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The assignment of error is directed to the errors of the court in rejecting evidence, and that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and in overruling motion for a new trial. In the trial of the case Strousse was called on behalf of defendant, and testified that on February 21, 1879, Trevarrow and Hughes came to him and arranged that if he would go security for Trevarrow and Laity that Trevarrow would leave with him a certificate of deposit, which should be held for security for going on the bonds, and that if any of this money was left in his hands the balance was to be paid over to Hughes to pay him for his services. Spruance was not present at this conversation. Plaintiff moved to strike out the conversation between Trevarrow, Hughes, and Strousse, Spruance not being present. The motion was sustained, and defendant excepted. The exclusion of this testimony is assigned for error, and we think in this the court did err. It is admitted that Spruance made no personal claim whatever to the sum of $266, that it was the money of Trevarrow. If this be true, we are unable to conceive why the presence of Spruance was necessary to the conversation detailed by Strousse between Trevarrow and Hughes, as the conversation amounts to an attempt to prove a verbal assignment of any balance remaining of the $1,400 to appellant. Save and except for the purpose of indemnifying him against any possible loss growing out of his obligation as surety upon the bonds, Spruance had no claim to the balance, and when he was discharged from the obligation the amount of money remaining in his hands belonged to either Trevarrow, who had absconded, or Hughes, and the evidence offered should have been admitted for the purpose of proving the assignment and Hughes' right to retain the money as that of Trevarrow. The fact that this note was executed payable on demand, without interest, and for the exact sum of money remaining unappropriated in the hands of Spruance, and that no demand was made for the payment of the note until late in the year 1885, in our judgment would seem to support the position assumed by appellant. It is unnecessary for us to consider the other errors assigned, as the conclusion here reached is that the testimony offered and excluded from the consideration of the jury tended to establish appellant's right to the $266 mentioned in the note sued upon. The money advanced to Hughes for which the note was given was not the money of Spruance, it was the money of Trevarrow, and Hughes should have been allowed the opportunity to show his title to it. The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is reversed.

DISCHARGE OF SCHOOL TEACHERS — RIGHT OF ACTION.

1. A public school teacher engaged for a specific term, who is discharged without cause, need not allege or prove, as a condition precedent to a recovery of his salary for the whole term, a compliance with Gen. St. Colo. § 3077, providing that any person aggrieved by the decision of a board of directors may appeal within 30 days to the county superintendent.

2. A rule in the teacher's hand-book to the effect that the tenure of office of all teachers, regardless of contract, should be at the pleasure of the board, was of no value as a defense to an action on the contract.

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Boulder county court.

This action was brought by James R. Hale against school-district No. 3, to recover $402.50, as the balance due him upon his employment from the 1st of September, 1886, to the 27th of May, 1887, as a teacher in the public schools of that district. His complaint sufficiently set forth the contract of hiring, and his performance, until he was wrongfully discharged in the month of November. It was made to appear that on Sunday, the 28th day of November, at 2 in the afternoon, he was asked to tender his resignation as a teacher. By the same notice he was requested to come before the board, at half past 7 of that day, at the residence of one of the directors. He went, and was again requested to resign. With this request he declined to comply; and thereupon, without further action, and without a hearing, or any other notice, the board assumed to discharge him, and subsequently refused to pay him anything except for the work which he had already performed. The complaint contained all the allegations essential to enable the plaintiff to introduce the proof necessary to his recovery, providing it be unnecessary for him to either allege or prove an appeal by him from the action of the board of directors to the county superintendent, under section 3077 of the General Statutes. The defendant demurred, for failure to make this allegation. The demurrer having been overruled, an answer was filed which set up no defense other than the failure to take the appeal. The record shows that testimony was introduced by the plaintiff in support of his complaint, and that thereupon, the school-district refusing to offer testimony, the court rendered judgment for Mr. Hale for the amount claimed. From this judgment the school-district appeals.

Thomas R. Owen and Charles M. Campbell, for appellant. Richard H. Whitely and Richard H. Whitely, Jr., for appellee.

BISSELL, C., (after stating the facts as above.) Upon sufficient proof of the contract, its breach, and the damages sustained, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, unless the statute has established a condition precedent, with which the plaintiff must show a compliance, to entitle him to a judgment in a court of competent jurisdiction. That the plaintiff made ample proof of whatever facts were necessary to entitle him to a judgment, other than proof of an appeal taken, must be presumed. The evidence upon which the judgment was rendered is not before this court, either in the abstract or in the record, and the court rendering the judgment being one with jurisdiction of both person and subject matter, it will be presumed that it proceeded regularly, and upon sufficient evidence. There is thus remaining for determination the naked question whether the statute has imposed upon the plaintiff a duty in a case of this description which he has failed to discharge. In the statute relating to schools, the board of directors is given full power to do whatever may be necessary for the due and regular management of the schools of their district. This in terms includes the hiring and discharge of teachers. This power, however, must always be exercised in obedience to the general principles of law governing contracts of this class, unless there be some specific restriction in the statute which prevents their application. There is nothing whatever in the statute which gives the board the right to make a contract for a specific term, at a specified price, which shall not be subject to the legal consequences of a breach. The power of employment and discharge is not in terms beyond the control of the general law. It was always true that where a contract of hiring was entered into between two parties for a fixed period, at a definite price, the employer could not escape liability for a discharge without cause. If the contract was broken by the employer, a cause of action at once arose in favor of the one discharged, who might, upon the expiration of the period of hiring, recover the damages resulting from the breach. Ordinarily these are measured by the amount of the stipulated wages, though the recovery is always subject to mitigation by proof either of earnings or their possibility. Reduction Co. v. Cook, 7 Colo. 569, 4 Pac. Rep. 1111; Pars. Cont. (6th Ed.) pp. 33, 34, and notes. The case, as made by the plaintiff, comes clearly within this well-established rule. He was hired for so many months at $70 per month, and discharged, as shown by the record, without cause, and he brought this suit upon the expiration of the term of his employment for the wages unpaid, and due from the day of discharge to the end of his term. The appellant does not seriously controvert this well-established rule, nor offer any evidence to reduce the damages, but asserts, as a defense, the provision of the statute, that any person aggrieved by the decision of a district board of directors may, within 30 days from the rendition of the decision, or the making of the order, appeal to the county superintendent. Gen. St. § 3077. It is contended that this section, ex vigore, ousted the courts of jurisdiction to hear and determine controversies of this character. This is not believed to be the law. In the absence of an imperative necessity, it should never be held that a tribunal which is incompetent to afford relief to the suitors, and which is regulated and restrained by none of the rules and methods of procedure essential to a satisfactory investigation, nor by those legal principles which are supposed to enter into and form a part of every contract, can oust the courts of the country of the jurisdiction and powers conferred upon them by the statutes and constitution. Our whole judicial system is at variance with the idea that, in the absence of specific, mandatory, legislative restrictions, the courts may not be appealed to, to determine the rights of contract between citizens, or between citizens and corporate bodies which the statutes have created. It might easily be conceded that there are certain classes of questions of which the board might well be given exclusive jurisdiction, and where the sole remedy in case of defeat would be by taking the appeal provided for by statute. In this case it is unnecessary to either define or limit that class of cases. The one under consideration is one which relates to a contract of hire, and where the only remedy of any benefit to the plaintiff must be had in tribunals clothed with power to enforce their own judgments and decrees. By section 3084 of the statute, the right to render or enforce judgments for money, which is the only effective judgment possible in this case, is expressly withheld from the board, the county superintendent, and the state board of education. In connection with section 3077 is found a similar provision for an appeal from the county superintendent to the state board. To decide in this case that the teacher who has been discharged must first appeal to the county superintendent before he can sue would render it necessary to hold that, being defeated there, he must appeal to the state board before he has the right to resort to the courts. This is to require of the plaintiff to take two useless, ineffectual, and expensive steps before he resorts to the only tribunal which can afford him relief. It certainly could never have been the intention of the legislature to confer upon boards, or superintendents, exclusive authority to decide questions, and then withhold from them the power to enforce the judgments which they might render. That the plaintiff had a right to appeal, and take a chance of reinstatement without resorting to the courts, there can be no question. That he was compelled to withhold his application to the courts of the country for relief from an unauthorized breach of contract cannot be maintained.

No other defense of much importance was interposed by the school-district. It set up a rule alleged to have been contained in the teacher's hand-book which substantially provided that the tenure of office of all teachers, regardless of contract, should be at the pleasure of the board. Neither the rule nor its plea was of any value as a defense. It was utterly impossible for the board to make or publish any rule of that description which should be of the slightest force as to any contract of employment, for a definite period at a fixed rate, into which the board might enter. The rule is in direct contravention of a specific statutory provision. Section 3055 definitely enacts that no teacher shall be dismissed except on good cause shown. The entire action of the board in the premises was in complete disregard of the common-law and statutory rights of the teacher. According to the answer the action was not based upon any well-defined and stated grounds of complaint. No cause of action was alleged. There was a like want of proof of anything which would justify what was done. There was no attempt to establish a "good cause," nor was an opportunity given to defend against what was asserted. There was a like want of that investigation which should always precede the breach of a contract. The course taken amply illustrates the inequitable nature of the rule, and furnishes cogent reasons for declaring it to be wholly inoperative, and to confer no power on the board to take the course which they pursued. If the board saw fit to make a contract like that sued on, they would be bound by its terms, regardless of any rule which they might promulgate or adopt for their own guidance, or the guidance of the teachers. If they desired the rule to be of any value, they should make their contracts in terms conform to it, and let them run during their pleasure, and not for a specific period. The judgment should be affirmed.

REED and RICHMOND, CC., concur.

BRERETON v. BENNETT.

CHATTEL MORTGAGES—ACKNOWLEDGMENT—MORTGAGOR IN POSSESSION—EXTENSION OF LIEN.

1. The fact that the officer taking the acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage was the partner of the mortgagee, and negotiated the loan secured by the mortgage, does not render the mortgage fraudulent and void as to other mortgage creditors, when it is not shown that he was a party in interest to either the lien or the note.

2. Where a chattel mortgage, made the basis of an action, is fair upon its face, it cannot be impeached for fraud, unless the facts relied on to constitute the fraud are pleaded in the answer.

3. Where, by the terms of a chattel mortgage, the mortgagor is to retain possession of the property until maturity of the note and mortgage, it is the duty of the mortgagee to take possession of the property within a reasonable time after a default, and, where he delays acting for nearly two months, his rights under the mortgage become subject to those of subsequent mortgagees.

4. In such case, the lien of the note and mortgage cannot be extended by the contract of the parties to the prejudice of the intervening rights of third persons.

Appeal from superior court of Denver.

The controversy in this case is over the priority of lien of different chattel mortgages. On the 23d day of June, 1887, one C. P. Shore, the owner of the property in controversy, executed and delivered to appellant, S. W. Brereton, a chattel mortgage on the same to secure the payment of a promissory note for $250, due October 1, 1887. On the 30th of September, 1887, Shore, made a new note for the amount, payable on the 1st day of December, 1887, and at the same time he gave a new mortgage to appellant, which was duly recorded at 4 o'clock P. M., the said 30th day of September. On the same day, however, Shore executed and delivered to appellee, H. W. Bennett, his note for $275, due six months after date thereof, to secure the payment of which he gave a chattel mortgage upon the same property to appellee, which mortgage was duly recorded at 12:30 P. M. of said day. The mortgage given to appellee was acknowledged before Julius A. Meyers, a notary public. Meyers was a member of the firm of Bennett & Meyers; and it is claimed that the money was advanced by the firm, and not by Mr. Bennett, and for this reason this chattel mortgage is claimed to be invalid. The real question in the case is as to which one of the parties has the better right to the possession of the property thus mortgaged.

Stewart Bros. & Andrews, for appellant. Rogers & Webber, for appellee.

HAYT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) The taking of an acknowledgment before a mortgagee, who is also an officer, authorized generally to take acknowledgments of such instruments, is against the policy of the law, and an instrument so acknowledged is fraudulent and void as to other mortgage creditors. Hammers v. Dole, 61 Ill. 307. Meyers, the party taking the acknowledgment to the Bennett mortgage, was, however, not the mortgagee named therein. And, although it is shown that he negotiated the loan, and was at the time engaged in business as a partner with Bennett, the mortgagee, the evidence does not show that he was a party in interest to either the lien or the note. Aside from this, the suit is brought directly upon the instruments. The mortgage, which is the basis of the plaintiff's claim to the property, is set forth, in legal effect, in the complaint. It is fair upon its face; and if the defendant desired to impeach it for fraud the facts relied upon as constituting such fraud should have been pleaded by the defendant in his answer. No such plea was interposed in this case. In its absence, the instrument must be taken as valid. Jones, Mortg. § 538; De Votie v. McGerr, 15 Colo. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 923. Appellant bases his claim to the right of possession of the property upon two chattel mortgages; the first bearing date June 23, 1887, and the other, September 30th of the same year. As the latter instrument was not filed for record until after the mortgage given by appellee upon the same property was recorded, appellant's claim, founded upon the subsequently recorded instrument, is of no force as against the mortgage of Bennett. Is appellant entitled to the possession of the property under the instrument of June 23d? By the terms of this instrument the mortgagor was to retain possession of the property until the maturity of the note and mortgage. These instruments became due early in October. Then it became the duty of appellant to take possession of the property within a reasonable time. Appellant, however, made no effort to reduce the mortgaged property to his possession until the last of November. Whatever may have been his rights had he acted promptly, they were forfeited by this delay, and the mortgage became, in law, fraudulent as to other mortgage creditors. By his own negligence, his rights under the chattel mortgage became subject to those of appellee. Rhines v. Phelps, 3 Gilman, 455; Cass v. Perkins, 23 Ill. 382. It is urged, however, that the giving of the note and mortgage of September 30th was no more than an extension of time upon the prior instruments, and that the lien of the old mortgage was thereby continued. There is no authority for allowing the lien to be extended in this manner by the contract of the parties so as to preclude the rights of third parties. "The chattel mortgage act is in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed." Crane v. Chandler, 5 Colo. 21. The facts relied upon by appellant were not such as to give him a right to a prior lien as against appellee. The judgment of the trial court sustaining the demurrer to the defense setting up such facts cannot be disturbed. For the same reason, the court below properly held that the evidence of such facts was not sufficient to entitle appellant to a judgment. The judgment in favor of appellee is accordingly affirmed.

MINING CLAIMS—QUIETING TITLE—PARTIES—PLEADING.

1. An interest claimed by an intestate in a mining claim at the time of his death is an interest in real estate, and descends to his heirs, who alone can maintain an action to quiet title thereto. The right to maintain such action is not conferred upon the administrator of the intestate by Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2322, 2324, providing that the locators of mining claims, "their heirs and assigns," so long as they comply with the laws of the United States, and with state and local regulations not in conflict therewith, shall have the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of all the surface included within the lines of their locations, and that, upon failure to comply with the conditions as to annual labor, the ground shall be open to relocation, provided that the original locators, their heirs, assigns, or "legal representatives," have not resumed work upon such claim after failure, and before such location.

2. Under Act Cong. May 10, 1872, declaring that only those who are citizens of the United States, or have properly declared their intention to become such, can either locate or purchase mineral lands, an allegation of citizenship, or its equivalent, is necessary to constitute a good complaint in a proceeding to determine adverse mining claims preliminary to the issuance of a patent therefor.

S. J. Hanna, for appellant. N. Rollins, for appellees.

HAYT, J. Adverse suit to determine the right to a patent to mining property. The appellant, George O. Keeler, brought suit as administrator in the court below, alleging in his complaint that, on January 1, 1887, one Herbert H. Judson died intestate, and that plaintiff was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting administrator of the estate. It is further alleged that Judson died seised of a certain mining claim, and that the defendants wrongfully entered upon a portion of said claim, and made application at the proper land-office for a patent therefor. The complaint also contains, with a single exception, the usual averments to be found in a complaint in support of adverse proceedings. The exception referred to relates to the citizenship of Judson. There is no allegation whatever of citizenship. To this complaint, the defendants demurred upon several grounds, among which were that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. After argument, the court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff electing to stand upon the complaint, judgment was entered for the defendants. We are not advised as to the particular reason assigned by the court for sustaining the demurrer. We infer, however, from the nature of the attack made here upon the judgment, that it was because, in the opinion of the trial court, the action should have been brought by the heirs, and not by the administrator. In this, at least, there is sufficient basis for the judgment. The interest claimed by Judson in the mining claim at the time of his death is to be deemed and treated as an interest in real estate, and must descend accordingly. This is admitted. It is further conceded that at common law the administrator of such intestate could not maintain the action of ejectment for the real estate with which the intestate died seised. Support for the present action is sought, however, under the statutes of this state, and of the United States. It was held by this court, in the case of Filmore v. Reithman, 6 Colo. 120, that under our statutes, as at common law, the lands of an intestate descend to the heirs and not to the administrator. The heirs, therefore, being the real parties in interest, can alone maintain the present action. Our statutes, in reference to descents and distributions, are quite similar to those of the state of Illinois; in fact, the resemblance between the two is so striking as to leave no doubt that the former were largely borrowed from the latter state. The adjudications of the court of last resort in Illinois are, for this reason, particularly valuable here. The case of Smith v. McConnell, 17 Ill. 135, has long been considered a leading case. It was there held that the lands of one dying intestate descend direct to the heirs; the heirs holding the title in their own right, subject only to the payment of the debts of their ancestor, in the mode provided by law. And it has been repeatedly held in that state that the administrator can only affect the title of such heirs by a sale duly authorized by an order of court. Walbridge v. Day, 31 Ill. 379; Phelps v. Funkhouser, 39 Ill. 401. We find nothing in our statute to change this rule, and, hence, conclude that the administrator in this case must look beyond the state statutes for authority to maintain the action. This is true, at least in the absence of some authorization by the court of probate, and no authority from that source is claimed. If, then, the right of the administrator to maintain this action exists, it must be by virtue of some act of congress. Counsel call our attention to sections 2322 and 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. By the first of these sections it is provided, in substance, that the locators of mining claims, their heirs and assigns, so long as they comply with the laws of the United States, and with state, territorial, and local regulations not in conflict therewith, shall have the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of all the surface included within the lines of their locations, etc. By section 2324 it is provided inter alia that, upon failure to comply with the conditions as to annual labor, the ground shall be open to relocation, provided that the original locators, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, have not resumed work upon such claim after failure and before such location. These two sections taken together, it is claimed, confer the right of possession upon the legal representatives of the intestate, and it is contended the administrator is included in the term "legal representative." As we have seen, at common law, the right of possession to the real estate did not descend to the administrator. Upon doubtful or uncertain language, courts will certainly be very reluctant to change the general rule so as to make the mining claim of an intestate an exception. If congress had intended to change such rule, we doubt not language would have been employed which would have left little doubt of such intention. The sections cited do not contain such language. The term "legal representative" is only used in reference to the performance of annual labor upon mining claims. The inference to be drawn from its absence from the only section fixing the right of possession is certainly not favorable to appellant's theory. In our opinion, appellant's claim of right to maintain this action finds no support in any statute which has been cited, and we, therefore, conclude it is not sanctioned by either state or national legislation. Had a different conclusion been reached, however, upon this branch of the argument, the judgment of the court below could not have been disturbed, the citizenship of Judson not being averred in the complaint. Actions of this character are purely statutory.

Under the act of congress of May 10, 1872, only those who are citizens of the United States, or have properly declared their intention to become such, can either locate or purchase mineral lands belonging to the United States. Hence, an allegation of citizenship, or its equivalent, has repeatedly been held necessary to constitute a good complaint in a proceeding to determine adverse claims to such lands preliminary to the issuance of a patent therefor. O'Reilly v. Campbell, 116 U. S. 418, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 421; Thomas v. Chisholm, 13 Colo. 105, 21 Pac. Rep. 1019; McFeters v. Pierson, 15 Colo. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 1076; Lee Doon v. Tesh, 68 Cal. 43, 6 Pac. Rep. 97, and 8 Pac. Rep. 621. The judgment must be affirmed.

MILES V. MAYS.

LIABILITY OF AGENT TO THIRD PARTIES.

In an action for commissions for procuring a purchaser for land, it was admitted that defendant was the duly-constituted agent of one W. by written power of attorney, and had full power to sell and convey the land. Defendant proceeded in all respects as if the property was his, and the sole responsibility for rejecting the purchaser rested with him. Held, that the question of defendant's liability as a subagent was for the jury, whose finding in favor of plaintiff would not be disturbed, and that it was immaterial that defendant disclosed his agency, and did not in words assume individual responsibility.

Appeal from district court, Arapahoe county.

Enos Miles, for appellant. C. A. Lott, for appellee.
